STATE CHALLENGES $133,000,000 ADDED TO PHONE RATE BASE

Lunn Says Public Service Board Has Asked Company to Explain Valuation Rise.

PLEDGES 7% YIELD AS LIMIT

Commission Also Will Sift Fairness of Distribution of Charges, He Asserts.

ALBANY DEMOCRATS TO ACT

May Even Make Utilities Election Issue—Mayors Asked to Aid Fight on New Schedule.

The Public Service Commission has served notice on the New York Telephone Company that it must explain the $133,000,000 added to its property valuation since the Federal Court allowed the company a 7 per cent return on its investment, according to Commissioner George R. Lunn of Schenectady. In an interview here yesterday, Mr. Lunn disclosed that the commission had instructed the company to furnish a statement showing how it had spent the additional $133,000,000 on plant additions.

The sum is included in the property valuations on which a return of a little less than 7 per cent, according to the company's officials, will be yielded by the new schedule of rates that is to go into effect next Saturday.

With protests pouring into the offices of the Public Service Commission at 120 Broadway and in Albany against the higher rates, the Public Service Commission, according to Commissioner Lunn, is going to see to it that the company "gets nothing more than the 7 per cent return on a fair valuation of their property." Mr. Lunn expressed the belief that many of the protests which have deluged the commission's office were based on a misunderstanding.

Cannot Keep Present Rates.

"Many of them ask us to suspend these new rates of the company," said Mr. Lunn. "They don't understand that we are enjoined by the Federal Court from doing anything whatsoever to keep the present rates in effect on the ground that they are confiscatory. We are going to see the company gets 7 per cent on a fair valuation of their property and we are going to see that they get nothing more.

"The Federal courts fixed the valuation as of July 1, 1928. Now the company, in fixing its new schedule of rates, has increased the value of its property since then by a good many millions of dollars. No one has passed on the validity of increased valuations placed on their additions to property.

"The commission has already directed the company to furnish to the commission before the hearing at Albany on Tuesday morning a financial statement showing its total revenues and expenditures over the period since the court ruling on a 7 per cent return. If the commission finds that the valuation that the company claims is higher than it ought to be, we can fix another valuation and still allow a 7 per cent return on the value of the property used and usable."

Commissioner Lunn asserted that the commission would undertake to determine not only whether the company had fixed a fair valuation on additions to property since July 1, 1928, but also whether the company had worked out an equitable method of distributing the increase in its new schedule of rates.

Will Allow Temporary Rise.

"We will allow the temporary increases pending ultimate decision and possible changes in the schedules to be made by the commission," said Commissioner Lunn. "There is some question as to the company's right to fix up a schedule. The Federal courts have a right to fix a definite percentage of increase, which shall be allocated temporarily, but the Federal court, according to our belief, lacks the power to allow a company to fix its earnings and to decide how increased rates by which the earnings are produced shall be allocated. The Federal court lacks the power to say how the increases shall be spread.

"We are not estopped and we are not going to be estopped from going into this question thoroughly before Feb. 1. We expect to find out on Tuesday whether this $14,000,000 increase is a legitimate charge, and if not we expect to find out what is a legitimate charge and later how it shall be spread out among the consumers."

Chairman William A. Prendergast of the Public Service Commission said at his home last night that the commission would take no action in regard to the schedules submitted by the telephone company until after the hearing on Tuesday. He said it

$16,000,000 Gasoline Taxes Collected in Eight Months

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—New York State has collected about $16,000,000 during the eight months that the two-cent tax on gasoline has been effective, according to figures made public today by Thomas M. Lynch, president of the State Tax Commission. About $800,000 of this amount has gone to New York City.

For the three months ended Dec. 31 the State collected $3,296,285. New York City's share of this is $350,245, while the counties outside Greater New York will benefit to the extent of $1,400,983.

The gasoline tax law, which became effective last May, provides that 75 per cent of the money collected shall be put into the general State fund for the construction of highways, and that of the remaining 25 per cent, one-fifth shall go to New York City and four-fifths to the rest of the counties.

WHALEN DEMANDS DATA ON BAIL GRAFT

Tells Tuttle It Is His "Duty" to Turn Over Grand Jury's Charges Against Police.

CRAIN SEEKS EVIDENCE, TOO

Wants Information on Court Aides—Inquiry Tomorrow, With McAdoo as Witness.

Police Commissioner Whalen made a demand on United States Attorney Charles H. Tuttle yesterday for specific data on the charge, made by Mr. Tuttle and the Federal grand jury, that policemen were taking graft in connection with bail bonds. District Attorney Thomas C. T. Crain also requested information from Mr. Tuttle.

Mr. Crain's general investigation of magistrates' courts and their methods will get under way tomorrow morning. Chief City Magistrate William McAdoo will be the only witness called before the grand jury in the Criminal Courts Building after the District Attorney has outlined the scope of the inquiry.

"I am sending a letter to Mr. Tuttle," said Commissioner Whalen, "requesting him to send to me immediately the names of the police officers accused of grafting. I take it that the United States Attorney has the names and addresses, as it is supposed to be sworn testimony, and I believe he should immediately let me have them, along with all the information he has in regard to police grafting.

"From what the newspapers say, he sent the report to Washington. The Police Commissioner's office is the proper place to send such a report, and it was his duty to forward it to this office."

Says It Cannot Be Withheld.

The commissioner sent his letter to Mr. Tuttle by hand, a patrolman delivering it to the Federal Building. Mr. Whalen was reminded by reporters that the names of the policemen, being part of the grand jury minutes, might not be available to him.

"No public officer can withhold any evidence of accusations of graft," he said, "and I believe that I should immediately have possession of the evidence so that I can proceed against those that are accused."

The commissioner's letter follows:

Jan. 25, 1930.

Hon. Charles H. Tuttle,
United States District Attorney,
Postoffice Building,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. District Attorney:

The press of today, Saturday, Jan. 25, carries the information to the public that the Federal grand jury handed up a presentment to Judge William Bondy accusing certain police lieutenants, desk officers and police attendants (turnkeys) in precinct station houses with grafting in connection with LITTLE AMERICA, Antarctica, Jan. 25.—Our front yard was full of whales this morning. While we were going over to breakfast we heard the familiar faraway and irregular puffing sound of the whales blowing. As it was the first time they had been heard from camp it was certain that they must be near.

Cracks have been opening up on the Bay for some time, and there is one large crack running west and beginning a little more than a mile from the camp. Sure enough, the feathery spouts of whales could be seen there against the glistening background of pressure ice.

In a short time nearly every one in camp was on his way down to the opening. Starting in a small crack not far out from the cape at the north side of Ver-sur-Mer Inlet, it opened up quickly and at the pressure ridge was about thirty feet wide. It seemed to be full of whales.

Stand on Tails and Spout.

Their shining heads, black on top and white underneath, shot far out of the water as they came to the surface and blew, literally standing on their tails. How many there were it is difficult to say, but there were at least ten shooting out of the opening, sometimes seven or eight together. They were not killers, but seemed more like the finners for which the bay is noted.

It was an astonishing sight. The day was beautifully clear, with a cold wind from the southwest, which drove the temperature down below zero last night for the first time in many weeks.

Thin ice, which had formed in the crack, had been broken by the whales and lay in slushy crusts between open black pools. The largest of these pools was where the crack ended in a mass of pressure and the huge uplifted cakes and distorted figures of broken ice made a magnificent background.

Byrd Pokes Stick at One Snout.

It was on the edge of this pool that the men gathered, excitedly taking pictures and gazing at the great shining creatures with amazement.

They were so near that as they came up one could reach out and touch them. Admiral Byrd leaned over and tapped one on the snout with his ski stick.

They blew almost in our faces and those of us on the leeward side were almost knocked down by the aroma. The water blown by the whales' exhalations shot up in a shower of spray and the double valve in back of the head could be seen fully expanded. Then there was a deep soughing inhalation and the valve snapped shut with a clapping sound just before it reached the water.

The mechanical action of this valve was most interesting.

Sometimes the whales merely lifted themselves to the surface so that their long pointed heads stuck but a few feet from the water, or they

Government Prohibits Air Liners From Flying Below 500 Feet as Result of the Coast Crash

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Passenger-carrying airplanes are prohibited from flying lower than an altitude of 500 feet, and if forced below that minimum by weather conditions must land at the earliest opportunity, under terms of an amendment to the air commerce rules announced today by Clarence M. Young, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics.

The new rule is the direct result of investigation by department inspectors of the recent crash of a Maddox air liner near Oceanside, Cal., in which sixteen persons lost their lives. Prior to the amendment made public today the air commerce rules permitted planes to fly below the minimum altitude of 500 feet specified for cross-country flying, under the stress of weather conditions.

"The amendment, which becomes effective immediately," said Mr. Young, "places the absolute minimum altitude of an airplane carrying passengers for hire at 500 feet under any circumstances, other than for the purpose of taking off and landing.

"In its application the new requirement gives a pilot but one alternative in the event he is forced by weather conditions to descend below such established minimum altitude, and that is to effect a landing at the earliest opportunity, either by returning to his point of last departure or going to the nearest landing field or other area suitable for an emergency landing.

"Preliminary reports received by the department from its inspectors on the West Coast, and from other sources, concerning the recent aircraft accident near Oceanside, Cal., indicate the necessity for such a minimum altitude requirement, and that it will be an exceedingly important safeguard in future operations."

Five 'Two-Gun' Robbers Loot Bank of $20,000 After Luring Guard Away by Telephone Ruse

Special to The New York Times.

MATAWAN, N. J., Jan. 25.—Five men, each armed with two pistols, lined up the officers and employes of the Matawan Bank at 8 o'clock tonight, ransacked the cash drawers and vault and fled in a dark Cadillac sedan in which a sixth member of the gang had been waiting outside. An accurate check of the amount of cash stolen could not be made tonight, but it was estimated that the robbers got more than $20,000.

There are two banks in Matawan. The other is the Farmers and Merchants National. Every Saturday night they open their doors to depositors between 7 and 8 o'clock. Usually each bank is guarded by a patrolman, but tonight only one, Patrolman Bastedo, was on duty.

Just before 8 o'clock Chief of Police Edwin C. Sloat at headquarters was told by telephone that there had been a "frightful automobile accident" two miles away, north of the town. Bastedo was the only man available, so Chief Sloat sent him to the scene. He himself took over the task of guarding the banks.

He went first to the Farmers' and Merchants' National. Everything was quiet there. He strolled down the street toward the Matawan Bank. A signal bell in the bank was ringing violently. Chief Sloat drew his pistol and quickened his pace. Outside the bank a group of depositors were talking excitedly. They hailed the chief and told him there had been a hold-up. The robbers, they informed him, had fled.

Chief Sloat entered the bank. He was greeted by Christian Heuser, the president, who is also a New York commission merchant, and Theodore Stickles, the assistant cashier. They gave him the details of the robbery. Five men, all wearing caps, and each with two pistols had stepped through the front door just before closing time, and ordered the officers and employes to line up against the wall. Stickles put up an argument and was felled by a blow from the butt of a pistol.

There was no further resistance. Mr. Heuser and his employes did as they had been told. Two of the robbers stood guard over them. The three others ransacked the bank. They hauled out all the cash they could find and stuffed it into a bag they had brought. Next they ransacked the vault of cash. Then they raced out through the door.

Witnesses had seen the Cadillac car speed south through Matawan. The fact that it had departed in that direction meant that it could take only two routes. One led to Freehold, the other to Perth Amboy. Chief Sloat notified police in both places. An hour later he was notified that a car of that description containing three men had been taken into custody by Freehold police.

Amos Stultz, the paying teller, was sent to Freehold and identified one of the three men. The police are confident they will be able to identify the two others.

Strawn Committee Insists on Conditions Similar to Those of a Receivership.

City Officials Reported as Pinning Hopes on Sale of Tax-Anticipation Warrants.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—It was still uncertain tonight whether the local governments of Chicago and Cook County were to be lifted from their financial morass through a taxpayers' pool of perhaps $20,000,000.

"The next move is up to the city and county officials," said Silas H. Strawn, chairman of the citizens' rescue committee. He stipulates that "there will be nothing available for spendthrifts," and that the property owners will not make their millions available until they are assured that the money will be spent for hospitals, mothers' pensions, sanitariums, fire and police protection and other municipal necessities. They also want pledges for legislation which will prevent waste in the future.

Pool Ready to Operate.

"The pool is ready to operate," he said. "We have the assurance of leading corporations that they will come to the front in this crisis. But we are absolutely not going to turn over the cash to the local governments to squander as they have in the past.

"The present situation has been due to a long era of frenzied finance, during which our local government has had more solicitude for what it can borrow than for what it owes. Most of our politicians have been fiddling while Rome burned.

"The pool, as I have said, is ready to come to the rescue, but it will not move a finger until the public officials duly responsible for the local governments agree to cooperate with the pool's managing committee to the end that all governmental expenses may be subjected to a rigid economy program."

In many quarters the edict of Mr. Strawn's committee that expenditures must be confined to necessities is interpreted as the equivalent of a receivership. It is pointed out that any institution going into bankruptcy is subject to control by receivers who can dictate expenditures as the rescue committee will attempt to dictate how Chicago's elected officers spend the public money.

Opposition to the Strawn Committee plan was voiced by Alderman Nelson, who said:

"I am not adverse to accepting help from the Strawn Committee, but it is against good sound policy to set up that committee as the dictator. If they decide how the money shall be spent, it will weaken, if not destroy, the confidence of the people in their elected officers. A genral distrust of elected officials will not only injure the city but may interfere with Mr. Strawn's efforts to raise the money. There may be ways found to dispose of tax anticipation warrants after they can be issued Feb. 4."

The sum of $20,000,000 is not quite one-tenth of the total, the expenditure of which the city, county and school board have authorized. They have appropriated $203,236,342, of which $55,314,947 is for the city, $46,177,729 for the county and $101,763,408 for schools.

The $20,000,000 would not pay one-fourth of the annual salary roll of the three governments. It cannot be charged to other funds. Teachers'

DYER CARRIES PLEA FOR BEER TO HOOVER

Missouri Representative Argues 2.75 Alcoholic Content Would Ease Enforcement.

MRS. WILLEBRANDT BALKS

She Declines to Give Views on Dry Unit Transfer Bill to House Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Two developments marked the prohibition dispute at the Capitol today.

Representative L. C. Dyer of St. Louis carried directly to President Hoover the proposal of opponents of the dry law for modification of the alcoholic content section of the Volstead act, and Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, former Assistant Attorney General in charge of prohibition enforcement, declined by letter to give the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments her views on the transfer bill no before that committee.

In her letter Mrs. Willebrandt asked to be excused, saying that she did not now have an intimate contact with prohibition questions, and "out of courtesy to those who are discharging the responsibility of enforcing the law I would prefer that you hear their views rather than mine."

It is known that while a government official Mrs. Willebrandt was opposed to transferring enforcement from the treasury to the Department of Justice. Her views were also made known in her recent book, Representative Williamson said.

Sends Plea to Wickersham.

Representative Dyer presented at the White House an argument for legal manufacture of beverages containing 2.75 per cent alcohol as a move to "help enforcement of the prohibition law." He declined to indicate the President's reaction to the suggestion.

Mr. Dyer also sent a letter to George W. Wickersham, chairman of the Law Enforcement Commission, requesting the commission to broaden its scope of inquiry so as to pass upon the question of what is an intoxicant. He said that he further intends summoning Mr. Wickersham and other members of the commission before the House Judiciary Committee.

The program outlined by Representative Dyer in his letter to Chairman Wickersham is part of the movement to keep the agitation alive and force prohibition as an issue in the coming primaries. It was indicated by members of the Law Enforcement Commission that its duties did not include an investigation into the constitutionality of the Volstead law, and doubt was expressed whether it would consider the inquiry proposed by Mr. Dyer.

Mr. Dyer left with the President a statement of his views, all of which were later embodied in a letter sent to Mr. Wickersham, which reads, in part:

"I beg permission to suggest to you and the members of your commission, in connection with your consideration of the subject for which you were appointed by the President, that you make inquiry as to whether or not beverages containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol are intoxicating in fact. My information from the study of this question is that 3 per cent and less by weight of alcohol in beverages is not intoxicating, and hence, if permitted to be manufactured, would not be a violation of the prohibition enforcement act.

"I also would be glad if you would consider this in connection with whether or not such an amendment to the enforcement act would help in the enforcement of the prohibition law.

"It has long been recognized by physiological authorities, students of Three Young Girls Among Prisoners—Body of Slain Picket Lies in State at Party Headquarters.

The swinging fists, clubs and blackjacks of 100 patrolmen and twenty-five mounted police broke up an attempted demonstration by 200 Communists in City Hall Park shortly before 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon, inflicting slight injuries upon a number of persons, including many homeward-bound office workers who formed part of an excited crowd of about 10,000 spectators. Seven of the Communist group were beaten and battered and five were arrested for disorderly conduct.

The attempted meeting was to have been a protest against the shooting by the police on Jan. 17 of Steve Katovis, a Communist picket in the Bronx market workers' strike. Katovis died on Friday. The police detail, which had been waiting for several hours, charged upon the group of Communists when one of their number mounted the City Hall steps and began to speak. The running battle which followed swept eastward to the Municipal Building and westward to Broadway, with mounted men and foot police prodding the retreating Communists with nightsticks. Clubs, fists and blackjacks began to fly as the group, engulfing hundreds of innocent bystanders, became more disorderly.

Mayor Walker was not at City Hall yesterday, but some of the rioting was witnessed by his secretary, Charles S. Hand.

In a letter to Police Commissioner Whalen on Friday Roger Baldwin of the Civil Liberties Union, asked that the Communists receive considerate treatment by the police. In their statement issued last night the Communists denounced Mr. Baldwin as well as Morris Hillquit and Norman Thomas, Socialist leaders, as "enemies of the working class, betraying them in true 'liberal' fashion."

Police Denounced as "Vicious."

At Communist headquarters at 26-28 Union Square last night, where a small police guard was on duty to prevent disturbance when the body of Katovis was brought there to lie in state until Tuesday, the action of the police was denounced as "vicious" in a statement voicing the determination of the Communists to continue with mass demonstrations on a still larger scale.

The Communist group, which was expected at City Hall Park at 12:30 yesterday afternoon, appeared suddenly just before 1 o'clock and was permitted, without police interference, to assemble in front of the City Hall steps. As Herman Benjamin, one of its leaders, mounted the steps to speak placards were pulled from under overcoats and flourished aloft.

"Judge Vitale and the Underworld—That is Capitalist Justice," one of them read.

"Steve Katovis died like a Worker—on the Firing Line," was the inscription on another.

"We are gathered here —," Mr. Benjamin began.

Chiefs of Delegations Will Meet Tomorrow to Draft Plan of Conference Procedure.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Private conversations among diplomats and naval experts have now led to the unanimous conclusion, in which the American delegation agrees completely, that the battleship is the most important issue at the London Naval Arms Conference.

This is true because the British proposal for the eventual progressive abolition of the capital ship raises a great principle, but more important still is the fact that the battleship category is one in which the conference can accomplish its main purpose of economy.

This statement is made with due regard to the importance of the cruiser issue between Britain and America. It is perfectly agreed and recognized that America is to have cruiser parity with Britain, and so there will be no miscarriage on the issue of parity in cruisers and other auxiliary craft, the Americans have insisted, and have gained their point, that there must be agreement on all other classes before the battleship problem is attacked. But the Americans would be the last to contend the battleship item is unimportant.

Americans Against Abolition.

Now it should be made perfectly plain that from Secretary of State Stimson down to the least prominent expert all the Americans here have agreed not to accept the principle of the abolition of the capital ship which, according to American doctrine, is the core of the American fleet and the backbone of naval defense, which must not be broken. Even if the British, French and Italians unite in a demand for the adoption of the principle of wiping out floating fortresses, America will oppose that move. Yet, the British move being for progressive abolition, and the Americans as well as the other delegations being willing to agree not to build battleships for another five years, it is apparent the British and American views can be fitted into each other.

But what is important from the standpoint of economy, and no one can now doubt that is one of the major motives of this meeting, is that the battleship category offers the only real prospects of a worth while accomplishment. America must build cruisers to reach parity with Britain on any level to which the British are likely to agree, and the French and Italian programs call for the construction of cruisers, so it is apparent there is going to be no economy in that category. What may be saved by doing away with some destroyers or possibly some submarines is as nothing compared to the economies which may be effected in the battleship category.

It is a conservative statement that the conference may be able to reach a decision which will mean a saving of $1,000,000,000 in battleship construction. It will not economize one-tenth of that sum in all the other categories put together. It is proposed, and pretty generally agreed, that the battleship holiday shall be extended for another five years.

21 Due to Be Built.

What does that mean? Under the Washington treaty, America is due to lay down eight battleships in the next five years at a total cost of $400,000,000; Britain is due to lay down the same amount and Japan is due to lay down five capital ships in that time. If the Washington treaty stands without amendment, there is small doubt these expenditures will be made.

It is equally true that if an additional five-year holiday is voted there will be a saving to the three nations equal to what they would have expended in building new battleships. Even if France and Italy, each of which is entitled to lay down five SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 25 (AP).—The Army Signal Corps operator at Fairbanks, Alaska, reported to headquarters here tonight that the Eielson-Borland plane had been reported found.

No details were given as to the location of the plane, but the message said that the plane was smashed up.

Pilot Carl Ben Eielson and Mechanic Earl Borland were lost Nov. 8 while attempting to fly from Teller, Alaska, to North Cape, Siberia, where the fur trading ship Nanuk is locked in the ice. They were engaged in transporting passengers and furs from the Nanuk to Nome. American, Canadian and Soviet fliers and dog teams have been seeking them.

SENATE VOTE ENDS 'COURTESIES OF PORT'

Congress Liquor Cases Led to Tariff Motion Limiting Free Entry to Diplomats.

$100 EXEMPTION RETAINED

Duty on Carillons Cut in Progress Toward Completing Committee Items of Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Members of Congress and other Federal officials returning from abroad will no longer receive tariff exemption "courtesies" or freedom of the port, if an amendment incorporated in the tariff bill by the Senate today becomes a law.

On more than one occasion in the past few years Congress has been aroused by reports, followed by grand jury action, that members of the House had brought in alleged contraband liquor.

No protest was uttered when Senator Harrison, Democrat, of Mississippi, offered the amendment, which was adopted by a viva voce vote, restricting the privilege of freedom from customs examination to foreign diplomats.

Mr. Harrison stated emphatically that his motion was aimed at Senators and Representatives in Congress. The amendment reads:

"Provided, that no courtesy of the port, free entry or special privileges or preferences in the examination of merchandise or baggage shall hereafter be extended to any person whomsoever who is subject to the payment of customs duties."

The Senate also adopted, but after much debate, an amendment retaining provision of existing law allowing returning citizens to bring in duty free personal articles not exceeding $100 in value. The Finance Committee had raised the exemption to $200.

An amendment by Senator Couzens, Republican, of Michigan, to deny exemption in any amount was defeated by 43 to 19. Mr. Couzens asserted that the privilege had been abused, especially by Americans living along the Canadian border. There were 15,000,000 crossings every year by men and women who live in De-

McKellar in Senate Scores Secret Sessions On 'People's Business' at Naval Conference

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—A protest against the holding of secret sessions by the representatives of the Powers engaged in the London Naval Arms Conference was made in the Senate today by Senator McKellar of Tennessee, Democrat, who declared that the parley was discussing "the people's business" and that all sessions should be held in the open."

"I note in the papers, said Mr. McKellar, "that the disarmament conference in London has adopted a system of secrecy in its deliberations. In my judgment, this is a great mistake.

"It will be recalled that the deliberations between President Hoover and Mr. MacDonald, when the latter was here, were secret and the public has never been taken into their confidence, apparently on either side of the water. Great questions like this should not be settled by governmental agents in secret. The people of the two countries are entitled to know what is going on when their vital interests are being contracted about.

"I want to take this occasion earnestly to commend Senators Robinson and Reed for their stand in favor of having open sessions. Of all international covenants, this particular one should be open and openly arrived at. The very fact that the conference holds secret meetings, from which the newspaper men are excluded and from which the public is excluded, is enough to raise doubt in the minds of all fair-minded citizens as to the propriety of such action.

"The conference had better take the advice of Senators Robinson and Reed and have open sessions. Why should the people be excluded from any knowledge about the proposed negotiations? Is it the purpose of those behind this conference to put through their own will and then drive it through without regard to the people's views? Why should the people's business be conducted in private in this conference at all? It is their business, and in my judgment these agents of ours are going far beyond their duties in conducting the negotiations in secret. It gives them a black eye to start with and ought not to be done, and as an American citizen I protest against the holding of these conferences in secret."

capital ships in the next five years because they are now behind schedule, do not start building, the saving would be in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000.

Under the Washington treaty America is due to reduce her present capital ship fleet of eighteen vessels to fifteen by 1936 and England is to cut her present strength from twenty ships to fifteen. This means discarding three ships by America and five by England during the proposed holiday extension. This calculation was made in 1922 on the basis, of course, of the construction of new ships.

There will thus arise the question as to whether in the five-year period England and America will each keep the same number of vessels they now have, simply adding five years to the period of usefulness, or whether they will cut that number. If they are willing to cut, will they reduce only three on the American side and five on the British side, or will they reduce further, as the British undoubtedly would be willing to do? Any reduction means, of course, an immense saving in maintenance, which can be calculated only after the conference gets nearer a decision on this most important issue.

It is quite evident England, America and Japan have the situation in their hands. No other nation has battleships worth bothering about. If these three countries were to decide that their relative positions would not be weakened by a general reduction of capital ships, they would be able to decide among the three of them with every assurance that the French and Italian delegations would go along with them.

The movement for the abolition of battleships has had an important effect in the consideration of the French plan for elastic categories of warships, which England and America have agreed to study. The British attitude toward battleships at once brought from the Americans the insistence that battleship tonnage shall not be shifted into the cruiser class, for that would disturb the American parity calculations with Britain.

Want Cruisers Definitely Fixed.

Also, the Americans have made it clear that they wish the 10,000-ton cruiser allotment to be fixed by hard and fast lines so it could not be affected by the shifting of tonnage to that class by any power. The British insisted that tonnage could not be shifted from any other class to the submarine class because they wished to measure their fleet exactly on the undersea strength of the other powers.

This has left of the French plan only the possibility of shifting from small cruisers to destroyers, and vice versa. On this ground the French plan may serve a good purpose, for between the French destroyer flotilla leaders of 3,000 tons and small cruisers there is so little difference that shifting may be possible.

The French long ago abandoned the demand for naval limitation by global or total tonnage. Then they substituted the formula calling for global tonnage divided into categories between which shifts might be made. That plan has now been negotiated almost into oblivion.

The time of the next plenary session of the conference has not been fixed. The heads of the delegations are to meet Monday to consider the agenda, when they are likely to decide that all warcraft other than battleships must be discussed before reaching the capital class. Probably all the delegations will suggest some changes in the agenda proposed last night by Sir Maurice Hankey as secretary general of the conference. In any event, it seems that political considerations will be put far down on the list. The Americans have indicated to the other delegations their present willingness to admit the importance of the capital ship issue.

MORGENTHAU TRACES PATH OF WORLD PEACE

Diplomat Tells Woman's Press Club American Idealism at Versailles Prompted It.

"The greatest event in the history of the world is now taking place in London," said Henry Morgenthau, diplomat, author and former Ambassador to Turkey, in a talk yesterday to several hundred members of the Woman's Press Club at the Astor. "Representatives of the leading nations of the world," he said, "are now gathering in an attempt to put into practice the thought that justice shall prevail in the world—not force."

Mr. Morgenthau described the negotiations of the peace conference at Versailles which he said were prompted largely by the idealism of America. He added, however, that when the war-ridden nations became fearful of their interests and sought some means of security for the future, American thought turned from idealism to an attitude of materialism, which has since been evident.

"With the fall of imperialism, the spirit of democracy prevailed," he said. "The nations of the world began to realize that with the loss of men and women and the huge expenditures in money, war was a stupid and obsolete way of settling differences between nations. There then began as great a struggle for peace, as there formerly had been for war, and an urge for peace in the whole world that had never before existed. It is amazing how that thought, given birth in Paris, has lived in spite of opposition and is today dominating the minds of all nations. The whole world wants to adhere to this new thought and put it in action. It cannot be done without the help of the United States. Now is the time when every one must do his share for swinging us back to the struggle for a sensible way of adjusting the differences between nations."

The program also included a talk by Miss Katherine Anthony, on modern biography, and the reading of poems by Miss Laurie Merrill, American soprano, accompanied by music arranged and played by Miss Carolyn Beebe. Princess Der Ling, former lady in waiting to the Empress Dowager of the Manchu régime in China, was introduced as a guest of honor. Mrs. Louis Reed Weizmiller, president of the club, presided.

ADMIRAL JONES IMPROVES.

Our Naval Adviser Suffers From Cold and Indigestion.

LONDON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Rear Admiral Hilary P. Jones, who was confined to his rooms today, was reported by his physician to be "much better" tonight.

The illness of one of the chief naval advisers to the American delegation to the naval conference was diagnosed tentatively as indigestion, although he was still suffering from a severe cold contracted on the voyage over. He is under the care of Dr. M. C. Higgins, an American naval physician. The Admiral is in his sixty-seventh year.

JAPANESE DEMAND NAVAL REDUCTIONS

Ex-Diplomat Sees Menace to His Country in Proposed Excess of American Warships.

CONCESSION IS SUGGESTED

Cut in Our Cruiser Program Said to Be Likely to Bring Japan to Ask Smaller Ratio.

By HUGH BYAS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Jan. 25.—Reijiro Wakatsuki's slogan, "Menace toward none; menace from none," dominates the vernacular press, which generally adopts his assumption that Japan's demands at the London Naval Arms Conference should be conceded because they do not impair America's security, while less would impair Japan's security.

The questions and fears which form the background of Japan's case are summed up with useful frankness by Kumataro Honda, former Ambassador to Germany, in an article in the magazine Gaikwan. Mr. Honda depicts two currents of American policy, one creating a naval question by large building programs since the World War and the other making efforts to end naval competition.

Finally he inquires what is the American purpose in asking a fleet equal to Great Britain's. He contrasts Britain's geographical position with America's and concludes the United States is economically self-sufficient and is strategically impregnable. No nation in the world can attack America, he contends, and asks what, then, is the object of her naval policy. He answers that the United States has promulgated two national policies, the Monroe Doctrine and the open door in China.

He argues that since a big navy is not required for defense it is wanted to maintain the open door policy in China. As that is already assured by the Washington treaties, he concludes that America's naval program is contrary to the Kellogg pact, since it is evidently intended to promote a national policy.

Firm for 70 Per Cent Ratio.

Therefore he says that, though Britain has been compelled by economic weakness to surrender her command of the seas to America, Japan cannot afford to accept a smaller ratio than she is asking and she must quit the conference if efforts are made to force her to do so.

This must seem far-fetched to American readers, but American publicists in the Far East who have been preaching for years that the open door in China is a national doctrine equal in force to the Monroe Doctrine are partly responsible. The fact is that Britain sets the standard and America follows, but it makes little impression here because the Japanese contrast Britain's vulnerability with America's impregnability.

The Japanese do not realize the force of the national sentiment in favor of a navy strong enough to prevent interference with American commerce in any future war, nor do they comprehend how Americans can be comparatively indifferent to the cost of even the biggest navy. Japanese public opinion is at sea concerning America's reasons for seeking parity with Britain's fleet while denying a 70 per cent ratio to Japan. American naval experts have their technical reasons, as yet unrevealed, for publicly offering to Japan a 60 per cent ratio in big cruisers, but the Japanese public needs to be shown that America does not seek a 40 per cent margin in order to have the whip-hand over Japan when disputes arise.

Japan's primary aim at the London conference will be a reduction in America's 10,000-ton cruisers. This comes up frequently in newspaper comment, as well as in the delegates' utterances at London on the need for reductions. It is not inspired by economy alone. If America's big cruisers were fewer they would be more tied to America's shores and Japan could accept less than a 70 per cent ratio.

The Osaka Asahi Shimbun, which probably reflects the bulk of Japanese moderate opinion, after repeating that a 70 per cent minimum is necessary for the country's safety, says that Japan should not accept a 70 per cent ratio on terms which would mean more naval building. If the United States and Britain reduce their fleets, this paper says Japan would reduce her demands in return for political assurances of her security.

If a reduction is not attainable, the Asahi Shimbun says, Japan should leave the conference, because it would be foolish for Japan to entangle herself in Anglo-American naval rivalry.

The impression gained by reading the comment printed since the conference opened is that the Japanese do not intend to take an unalterable stand, but that concessions will only be bought by concessions.

Japan Denies Agenda Report.

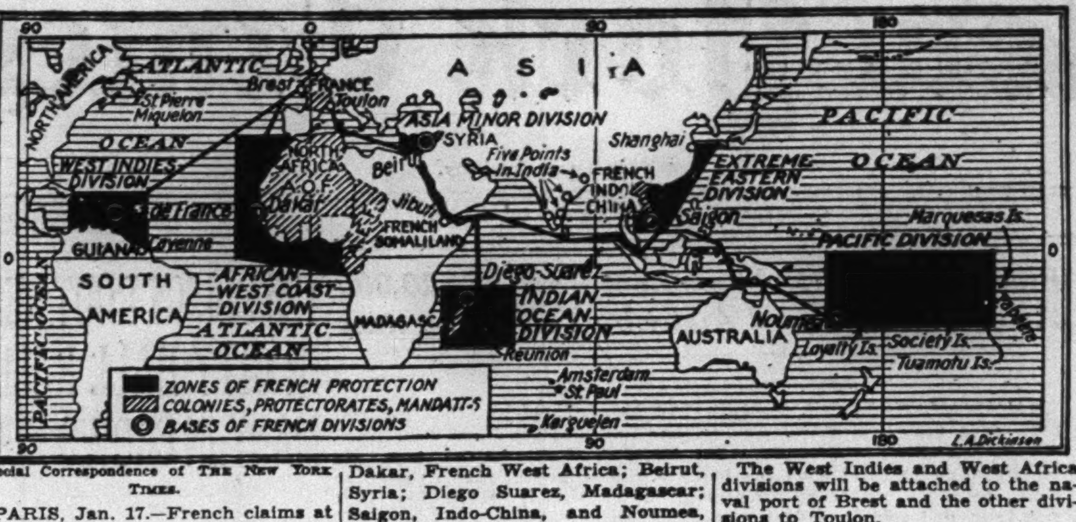
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A report from Tokio that Japan proposes that battleships be discussed before auxiliary craft in the London conference was denied by the Japanese delegation tonight. It was said that Japan, in the paper handed to the conference secretariat today giving her views on the agenda, did not propose either class for discussion first, but expresses willingness to begin with either. In other words, Japan is ready to join the majority.

The Japanese gave the impression that they would prefer to discuss cruisers before battleships, pointing out this would be logical because the conference was originally called to limit these warships, which are not included in the Washington treaty of 1922.

In regard to the French demand that in the limiting of auxiliary tonnage each power be allowed to shift a certain percentage of tonnage from one category to another, not only from heavier craft to lighter but vice versa, the Japanese say they are ready to concede the former, but side with the British in opposing a shift from light to heavy vessels. This particularly applies with them to 10,000-ton cruisers, for they want the tonnage in this category to be fixed without the possibility of any increase.

COLONIAL DIVISIONS OF THE FRENCH FLEET.



Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 17.—French claims at the London Naval Arms Conference are based upon the recent reorganization of the French fleet into six separate colonial divisions, each with a field of operation in a different part of the world.

The permanent divisions thus created are the Atlantic and West Indies division, the Western Coast of Africa division, the Near East division, the Indian Ocean division, the Far East division and the Pacific division. They will be composed of separate units including cruisers, destroyers and submarines and will make headquarters respectively at the following bases: Fort de France, West Indies; Dakar, French West Africa; Beirut, Syria; Diego Suarez, Madagascar; Saigon, Indo-China, and Noumea, New Caledonia.

All these were French naval bases before the war, but served chiefly as fueling stations and drydocks, with no permanent squadrons stationed there. Liaison was maintained by periodic cruises by battleships and several groups, the only permanent squadrons being those in the Far East and the Mediterranean.

The new program does not include the French fleet proper, which is divided into Atlantic and Mediterranean fleets and protects the home shores of France. A seventh flying division with no central base will be maintained in the new plan for the purpose of continuing the practice of cruises to French possessions in all parts of the world.

The West Indies and West Africa divisions will be attached to the naval port of Brest and the other divisions to Toulon.

The theoretical grouping of these new colonial divisions assigns two cruisers and two destroyers to each division, with three cruisers in the flying squadron. The zones of operation are West Indies and French Guiana; Morocco, Gold Coast and Congo; Eastern Mediterranean and Arabian Gulf; Somali Land, Madagascar and Reunion; Indo-China and China; New Caledonia and the Pacific Islands.

There will be fifteen cruisers, two for each colonial division and three for the flying division, and a like number of destroyers and submarines, which the French will seek to include in excess of their needs for home defense when it comes to apportioning their quota at London.

POSITION OF FRENCH FOREMOST PROBLEM

Some Surprise Expressed at Views So Divergent From Those of Others.

WHOLE CONFERENCE WAITS

American, Italian and Japanese Stands Depend on Tardieu's Agreement With Britain.

By P. J. PHILIP.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The French position with regard to naval disarmament has become the central preoccupation of the London conference at its very beginning. Although this had been foreseen by many observers for some time, it seems to have caused a certain element of surprise. It has given rise to a furious attack on the French delegation in one London newspaper and has aroused antagonism in other quarters. Yet nothing else was to be expected.

Without the least attempt at concealment, the French Government has, from the time the invitation to this conference was sent out, insisted that its participation was subordinate to three distinct conditions: First, that the establishment of naval strengths should not be simply on the basis of ratios but of needs; second, that reduction could be carried out only on condition that an added feeling of security should be given all participants by the creation of new or stronger agreements for mutual protection; third, that all decisions should be such as could be coordinated with the work for limitation of armaments which is being done by the Geneva commission.

Fourth Condition Qualified.

A fourth French condition was added, stating that measurement of tonnage should be global, but there the French showed themselves willing to seek an arrangement on a transactional proposal for the transfer of tonnage from one category to another on due notice, and this proposal was accepted by the British Government in its reply to the French memorandum of last December.

It has not been, therefore, out of any clear sky that the French opposition to what may be called the Washington method of limitation has suddenly developed. The French Government has never pretended from the outset that its objects were the same as those of the Washington or London Governments. While the latter have economy as a primary object, the French are concerned first with security and second with arms limitation. That essential difference in outlook is what is now before the conference and bids fair to occupy far more time than any discussion of details of tonnage or categories.

In his speech on Tuesday, and in that of Thursday, Premier Tardieu again presented the French demand that the basis of discussion should be different from that which was apparently understood here and in Washington. It therefore has been no surprise to those who have followed the preliminaries of the conference closely that there should be something of a deadlock.

Yet at this stage it would be an unjustified exaggeration to say that the deadlock was complete. The French delegation is just as much in earnest in seeking the prevention of naval rivalry by limitation of construction as the English, the American or any other.

Claim Positive Contribution.

It may be, and indeed is, claimed by M. Tardieu and his colleagues that they have thus far contributed more to the positive side of the discussion which has taken place than any of the others. They have had perforce to confine their conversations to an exchange of views with the English, for it is between them only that there is any real argument and any real ground for an arrangement. On the whole the position of the other delegations depends directly on what is decided between these two, for the American, Italian and Japanese claims are all to be measured by the size of the British fleet, and the size of the British fleet must depend on an understanding with France.

During the last three days, therefore, almost the sole movement of any importance which has been going on has been the discussion among M. Tardieu, Mr. MacDonald and their respective experts on the points raised in the only two documents which are before the conference, the French memorandum and the British reply. A sensational story that the Italian delegates had been excluded from this discussion was emphatically denied this morning by the French delegation. What actually happened was that M. Tardieu suggested that Foreign Minister Grandi be invited to take part in the discussion with Mr. MacDonald. The British Prime Minister agreed, but Signor Grandi himself declared he preferred to remain outside the discussion.

The whole question of how the agenda of the conference will be fixed and the basis of which it will be conducted therefore depends on whether the French and English reach an agreement.

Tonight after an interview of an hour and a half with Signor Grandi, M. Tardieu refused to divulge what passed, except to say the "interview was perfectly harmonious and full of good humor." The French take the view that the Italian problem is only a part of the whole and cannot be separated from it. If this conference or any other conference takes the French yardstick of needs calculated on the coastline of overseas possessions and trade routes as a basis of calculation, then the Italian claim disappears. That perhaps is one of the reasons why the French are so tenaciously holding to their conception of how matters must be settled.

The general French opinion, as repeatedly expressed in the press, prefers English domination of the seas to having the United States in that postion. To use the terms deadlock and rupture and torpedoing of the conference, as has been done today, is therefore to the French an utter absurdity. In order to contradict it, their delegation went to the trouble this afternoon of preparing full extracts from their memorandum of Dec. 20 from M. Tardieu's speeches and Mr. MacDonald's reply to show that the difference of viewpoint had been clearly laid down from the very outset. Long before the American delegation sailed, that difference was known, if not appreciated and it is becoming each day more evident that this is a conference on the method of limitation and reduction of armaments than on any actual limitation itself. So far the American delegation has had nothing to say on this issue.

French Express Satisfaction.

LONDON, Jan. 25 (AP).—A French spokesman today manifested satisfaction that progress had been achieved in the week's negotiations, particularly with Great Britain in the matter of a compromise system of measuring naval tonnage. The Associated Press was informed authoritatively that the French delegation was greatly impressed with the spirit of goodwill to reach a genuine naval accord which dominated all the delegations and that they believed this augured well for success.

It was added that France had determined to contribute to this agreement by fixing her naval strength well under her pre-war strength, actual figures to be determined upon a proportional basis in accordance with national needs of the country. The spokesman said he was convinced that a just naval proportion could be worked out and the "total" or "global" machinery be built with each power having its equitable part therein.

As to naval parity with Italy, the French spokesman expressed the opinion that this question had been awkwardly introduced by talking of parity at the outset instead of respective national naval needs. It was apparent that the French continued to hope to discover some solution of the Franco-Italian naval question, but thus for they have stood pat on their determination not to grant parity outright.

The opinion was expressed in authoritative American circles that Italy's demand and France's refusal embodies at this stage the whole crux of the conference. The general impression among the Americans was that the Franco-Italian negotiations were dealing with fundamental aspects of the relations between the new French régime, headed by André Tardieu, and the well-considered Continental policies of the Italian Dictator, Benito Mussolini. It was believed the discussion went all the way down the line to actual ship construction programs.

There were indications also that an entirely new deal in the Mediterranean was being debated, including the possibility of a security pact with other nations, including Spain and Yugoslavia as participants. The Americans would not comment on this phase of the situation, but the British were keenly interested.

120,000 Words on Arms Cabled By Western Union in Four Days

The Western Union Telegraph Company reported yesterday that 120,000 words had been sent over its cables from London in press messages dealing with the naval arms conference during the four days, beginning Tuesday. On the first day a total of 40,000 words was sent.

No estimate has been made of the total number of words in all press messages sent to this country from London in connection with the conference, but the Western Union figures give some idea of how large it must be. The total would include messages sent via cable other than those of the Western Union, as well as a large amount of wireless messages. Even larger amounts, the announcement stated, were expected for the dispatches to the Sunday papers.

TARDIEU AND GRANDI FAIL OF AGREEMENT

In Conference of More Than an Hour They Find No Compromise Ground.

ITALIANS ARE DISAPPOINTED

But They Will Try Every Avenue of Conciliation Before They Admit a Rupture.

By ARNALDO CORTESI.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—After an hour and a quarter's meeting between Foreign Minister Grandi and Premier Tardieu at the latter's hotel, the Italo-French situation remains virtually unchanged. Both statesmen stuck to their guns, no headway being made toward getting their viewpoints closer together. Signor Grandi, in other words, continues to maintain that Italian security in the Mediterranean demands that Italy have a navy of equal strength to that of France, while M. Tardieu insists that the relative strengths of the French and Italian Navies should be based on length of coast line, the number, size and distance of colonies and similar considerations, which would give France a navy considerably greater than that of Italy.

Considerable disappointment was noticeable tonight in the Italian delegation, which had founded great hopes on the meeting between Signor Grandi and M. Tardieu. It is too early, perhaps, to speak yet of a rupture of negotiations, as the Italians declare a wish to explore every possible avenue of conciliation before resigning themselves to the conclusion that no understanding with France is possible. On the other hand, the Italian delegation is equally emphatic in its declarations that never would it accept any treaty which does not embody in some form the principle of Italian naval parity with France.

It is understood that Signor Grandi and M. Tardieu examined all aspects of the Italo-French situation also in connection with the suggested Mediterranean pact. On this particular point it is considered possible that some compromise may be reached, as Signor Grandi declared himself willing to begin conversations immediately and to examine the possibility of Italy's adherence to such a pact. Even in this event, however, France appears unwilling to concede parity with Italy.

A complete deadlock, therefore, appears to have been reached between France and Italy. Unless either country is willing to yield something to the other—and there is no evidence of that at present—this question of Italo-French naval parity must necessarily at one stage or another of the proceedings become one of the main stumbling-blocks of the conference.

Signor Grandi had purposely remained in London over the week-end and left the whole of today and tomorrow open for conversations with the French delegates, hoping some way might be found of solving Italo-French difficulties. After today's talk with M. Tardieu, however, he feels that the respective viewpoints are so opposed and so irreconcilable that it is useless to discuss the Italo-French difficulties. After to- for the present. Therefore, he decided to take a complete day's rest tomorrow, foreseeing that next week will be a heavy one.

POPE BANS FASCIST BOOKS.

Two Publications Placed on Index of Those Prohibited.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 25.—The Osservatore Romano, used by the Vatican for official announcements, published tonight the text of a decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office placing on the index of prohibited books two recent Fascist publications, both issued by the leading Fascist publishing house of Italy, the Libreria del Littorio.

The first book, written by the well-known Fascist journalist Mario Missiroli, was entitled "Render Unto Caesar; the Religious Policy of Mussolini, With Documents Hitherto Unpublished." The other, which was published under the nom de plume Ignotus, was entitled "The Fascist State, the Church and the School."

Both books are alleged to contain the "gravest errors against Catholic doctrine" and their insertion in the list of prohibited books was approved by Pope Pius last Thursday in a special audience given to the assessors of the Congregation of the Holy Office.

Signor Missiroli's book is a history of the negotiations and solution of the Roman question and the speeches made by Premier Mussolini before the Chamber and the Senate on the Lateran treaties. The Pope had already taken strong exception to this book, referring to it in the course of his speech to the College of Cardinals on Christmas.

STIMSON AMENDS MONDAY'S AGENDA

Makes Some Changes in Program Submitted at Week-End Residence in Country.

AMERICANS STAND AS UNIT

Reports of Division Among Them Declared to Be Without Any Basis in Fact.

By L. C. SPEERS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Tentative agenda submitted to the naval conference delegations by the British for consideration Monday morning by the heads of the delegations at 10 Downing Street was carefully scrutinized by Secretary Stimson and his colleagues and returned, with certain minor amendments suggested, to Sir Maurice Hankey, secretary of the conference. This must not be confused with the agenda of the conference itself, which is still in the early stages of formation.

Monday's agenda is for the guidance of that meeting of the delegation chiefs. The proposal for the eventual abolition of capital ships and also that for the elimination of submarines are not mentioned in Monday's agenda. Secretary Stimson studied the document at the country home "Stanmore," where he is spending the week-end with Ambassador Morrow, a member of the American delegation. The other delegates are remaining in London.

Americans Confer With French.

Last night there was an important conference between Premier Tardieu of France and René Massigli, secretary of the French delegation, with Mr. Morrow and Ambassador Hugh Gibson of the American delegation, during the course of which the French position on Mediterranean parity was discussed. Premier Tardieu explained in detail the French position. The matter of limitation of ships was not referred to, according to the spokesman for the American delegation.

Previously, as was announced last night, Secretary Stimson went over the whole field of the Mediterranean problem with Foreign Minister Grandi of Italy, and talking to the French last night Mr. Morrow and Mr. Gibson emphasized the position of the United States on this phase of the conference, making it clear that America could intervene only as a good friend, and then only when asked to do so by the powers concerned.

Hugh Wilson, United States Minister to Switzerland and official spokesman of the American delegation, talking to correspondents today repeated what Secretary Stimson said yesterday—namely, that the conference was making progress and that there was every reason for optimism that the final result would be satisfactory to all the signatory powers of the Washington Treaty. When asked about the report that there had been a French suggestion for a treaty based on global tonnage, Mr. Wilson said it was news to him.

Asked what the United States position would be in the event that this matter came before the conference Mr. Wilson replied:

"Deduce your own answer to that."

He was equally non-commital on the report that the conference might give consideration to a compromise proposition which would embody both global and limitation features. The understanding in informed quarters, however, is that there has been no change in American policy in this matter, and it is recalled that the United States opposed the global suggestion when it was advanced at the Geneva conference last year.

Americans Are Not Divided.

Mr. Wilson, when asked whether he could say yes or no to a question as to whether the United States had a definite program ready to submit to the conference at the proper time, replied, "I am sorry, but that is another question which I am unable to answer now." Then he was asked whether he could give in some detail the nature of the advice, if any, given to the French and Italians by Secretary Stimson, Mr. Morrow and the other American delegates at the conference with M. Tardieu and Signor Grandi yesterday.

"All I can say as to that," Mr. Wilson replied, "is that the conversations concerned primarily the French and Italian positions on questions mainly affecting those two nations."

There is no basis for the talk of a division in the American delegation over United States policies at the conference. Senator Robinson, only Democrat in the delegation, said last night that the delegation was in entire agreement on every important matter and was standing as a unit on all questions affecting the United States.

The basis for a report to the contrary, apparently much discussed, is the battleship abolition suggestion made by Prime Minister MacDonald It is not now believed that the proposal ever will come before the conference, if for no other reason than that the United States is known to be unalterably opposed to it at this time.

LEAGUE PUSHES PLAN OF LOAN FOR ATTACKED

Financial Committee Finishes Text and Draws Up Report for Security Committee.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 25.—The League of Nations' scheme for the guarantee of a loan to be issued on behalf of a country attacked or threatened with war, known as the draft convention for financial assistance, came before the League's financial committee again today as it was closing its session. The committee re-examined some of the points of this convention and drew up a report to be submitted to the league's arbitration and security committee, which will probably meet in April.

The financial committee, in which Jeremiah Smith Jr. of Boston is participating in a private capacity after having been the League's High Commissioner for Hungary's financial reconstruction, has now drawn up a plan establishing international control over the service of such a loan and has completed the text of the various articles of the financial assistance convention.

The financial committee, which was asked by the Assembly to cooperate with the arbitration and security committee on the convention, decided to appoint Sir Henry Strakosh as its special representative when the latter committee meets.

Mr. Smith, together with C. E. ter Meulen and Marcus Wallenberg, has been appointed a member of the advisory committee on the investment of the League's $1,000,000 library fund given by the Rockefeller Foundation.

CHACO ISSUE CLOUDS NAVAL CONFERENCE

League Council Must Meet if Demand Is Made by Either Bolivia or Paraguay.

CHIEF MEMBERS IN LONDON

They Would Want to See Stimson on Monroe Doctrine and Our Attitude in Any Conflict.

By CLARENCE K. STREIT.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—A situation in which two small land-locked States can pitchfork into the Naval Arms Conference the basic question of the practical working out of American relations with the League of Nations in the settlement of a dispute involving not only the Kellogg pact but the Monroe Doctrine is held to exist, despite the plans of the conferees to relegate political problems to the tail of their agenda. It exists as the result of a renewal of the acrimony between Paraguay and Bolivia to a point causing the League Council's acting president, August Zaleski of Poland, to take the unusual step of reminding them of their obligations under the covenant.

Though the dispute is reported continuing, the general tendency here is to believe that it will not require more serious League intervention, and conference circles, especially the American, appear strongly not to desire such a development. It remains none the less true that either Bolivia or Paraguay is in a position to precipitate in acute and concrete form some of the very political issues which are now being kept in the background of the conference.

Either Can Force Council.

League procedure allows either State to force the League Council willy-nilly to hold an immediate extraordinary session merely by exercising the right formally to demand the League's intervention under Article XI of the covenant. Moreover, should either now disregard M. Zaleski's warning and go to war, it would be very difficult to avoid convoking the Council.

Should such an extraordinary session of the Council have to be called, it would be held in London, it is assumed, since the three most important members of the Council, Foreign Ministers Briand of France, Henderson of Britain and Grandi of Italy are already here as delegates to the naval conference. Moreover, it will be remembered that M. Briand officially consulted the United States when, as acting president of the Council, he first reminded Bolivia and Paraguay of their duties as League members when the dispute broke out in 1928—and the United States is represented here now by Secretary of State Stimson.

The League powers, in the event that the Council will have to meet, will undoubtedly want to confer with Mr. Stimson, for the Monroe Doctrine is one of the most delicate questions facing them. It is delicate not only because it was proclaimed by a non-League member, the United States, but because of the attitude toward it of the seventeen Latin-American States which are members of the League. Since the League's intervention between Paraguay and Bolivia in 1928 there have been numerous signs that the League's prestige is increasing among Latin-Americans and the League does not desire to sacrifice this any more than it desires to offend the United States.

Briand Watching Situation.

American, British and French circles here profess to know of no serious conversations yet on the margin of the London conference on the questions and possibilities involved in the Bolivian-Paraguayan situation. The French, however, admit that there have been informal allusions to this matter during some of the talks on naval affairs.

The League's veteran pacifier, M. Briand, is finding time moreover, to keep a watchful eye on the developments in South America. Those who are aware of M. Briand's position in the League believe that the Polish Foreign Minister did not make his move without first consulting him, especially in view of the Franco-Polish alliance.

There seems, moreover, to be legitimate room for speculation that France and Britain might rather welcome Paraguay and Bolivia giving them a chance to confront the United States, while Mr. Stimson is in earshot, with the question of just what the United States is going to do in case of actual conflict. When France and Britain say that more political security is needed for more disarmament, as both did at Thursday's conference session, it is known that one of the things they have in mind is the uncertainty as to what Washington will do if the League Covenant or peace pact be violated, whether it will assert neutral rights against a League blockade, and so forth.

American circles express both the hope and belief that the dispute between Bolivia and Paraguay will not develop to a point where it will interfere with the conference's concentration on naval affairs. Mr. Stimson, it is stated, is leaving the South American situation to Washington, being himself too occupied with naval questions. It is understood, however, that Washington is keeping him in touch with developments.

League Gets New Protest.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 25.—The Paraguayan communication relating to the alleged interception of further Bolivian wireless military instructions has been received by the League's Secretary General, Sir Eric Drummond, and immediately circulated to the members of the Council and to Bolivia.

The Paraguayan Minister at Paris, Caballero de Bedoya, wired Sir Eric as follows:

"By a telegram dated the 23d instant my government instructs me to inform you that it has again picked up a radio telegram from General Kundt [chief of staff of the Bolivian Army] addressed to the Fourth Division at Fort Munoz, which reads:

"'Communicate effectives of the patrol Trujillo. Tell me who saw Fernandez fall? The division should prepare for general offensive, with the centre of gravity at the Centre and North.'

"My government adds that the Trujillo patrol is the one which recently attacked the Paraguayan fort at Isla Poi. The Paraguayan Government desires to bring these facts to your knowledge in order, if peace be disturbed, that it be shown on whom this serious and criminal responsibility falls."

A Bolivian note from Señor Cortadellas, the nation's permanent delegate to the League, who is now in Rome, reached the League tonight but owing to its obscure wording has not been released. From a reliable source it is learned that the note again affirms Bolivia's peaceful intentions but gives no details or precise data denying the Paraguayan charges. The note has not been considered an answer to M. Zaleski's telegram.

The Secretariat is extraordinarily busy, Sir Eric Drummond and the whole specialized staff belonging to the political section working late tonight with all ordered to the office tomorrow although it is Sunday.

Meanwhile, an uninterrupted exchange of conversations has taken place between Warsaw, Rome and Geneva. M. Zaleski has taken the view that the conflict is serious and needs active League intervention. The Polish Acting President of the Council, who has already shown his desire for concrete action to maintain peace by suggesting the dispatching of the first warning to Bolivia and Paraguay, has now decided to put an end to the situation of reciprocal accusations by new and stronger intervention if necessary.

The three Latin-American Council members, Cuba, Peru and Venezuela, are keeping in touch with the Secretariat on the situation.

Bolivia Blames Paraguay.

LA PAZ, Bolivia, Jan. 25 (AP).—Replying to the League of Nations, the Foreign Office today charged Paraguay was responsible for the armed clash on Jan. 16.

"As in 1928, Bolivia did not provoke the recent incident," Fabian Vaca Chavez, Foreign Minister, cabled Geneva. "We were adhering to the Washington protocol for conciliation and hoping for its peaceful fulfillment by means of the plan proposed by Uruguay, and already accepted by us, when the event of Jan. 16 occurred. Despite an attack by Paraguayan forces, Bolivia took only such military steps as were necessary for retaining positions essential to her security.

"These facts show that Bolivia did not overstep the boundaries and that she did not act unfaithfully to the rights and obligations which are hers as a sovereign country."

Report A. B. C. Powers Urged to Act.

ASUNCION, Paraguay, Jan. 25 (AP).—Local newspapers today published reports that the Argentine Government had been approached with the suggestion that Argentina, Brazil and Chile make armed intervention in the Chaco dispute to avoid any further outbreaks.

It was reported today that because of the delicate international situation it was likely that former President Riart would be appointed Minister to Washington.

Press Scores Disputants.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUENOS AIRES, Jan. 25.—A week after news reached the public here of a new skirmish between Bolivians and Paraguayans in the Chaco region, the facts of the matter are still unknown. Each republic has spent the week making serious charges against the other and denying charges made by the other, and it now appears likely that the identity of the aggressor will never reach the public, just as the former skirmish at Fort Vanguardia passed into history without blame being placed.

An outstanding feature of the week's developments has been the extraordinarily forceful language with which the leading newspapers throughout South America condemn both Bolivia and Paraguay for permitting a situation to exist in which similar clashes between rival troops are considered inevitable.

For example, Eduardo Rodriguez Larreta, the Uruguayan delegate to the League of Nations, who negotiated the formation of the so-called Latin-American bloc in the League, writing in El Pais of Montevideo, says:

"It is impossible to determine which party is telling the truth, but it is easy to see that the idea of war does not disturb either Bolivia or Paraguay."

BRITON FINDS MENCKEN "AS GENIAL AS SHAW"

Critic Captures the Imagination of London—Newspaper's Blunder Causes Chuckles.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The naval arms conference has brought a number of interesting people to London from many countries, apart from the official delegates and experts. One of international reputation whom every one here is especially eager to meet is H. L. Mencken, editor of The American Mercury, who is writing articles on the conference for The Baltimore Sun. A Manchester Guardian writer today compared Mr. Mencken and George Bernard Shaw thus: "I gather that any chastisement that comes from his [Mr. Mencken's] hand is intended entirely for our good, and after all his whips are nothing to the scorpions of Mr. Shaw and in private life Mr. Mencken is as genial and friendly as the Sage of Whitewall Court."

Considerable amusement has been caused by an imaginative description in one of the London newspapers of the way in which the heroic statue of Lord Nelson looks down on the naval delegates in the busy Queen Anne drawing room of St. James's Palace. The great Admiral is not in that room at all, but in an adjoining room used by the secretarial staff. Only former British Kings and their consorts look down at the delegates in their deliberations.

Although only ten miles from Marble Arch, Stanmore, where the American delegates are spending the week-end, is much less spoiled than most suburbs so near London. Stanmore, in fact, is the nearest thing to an old country suburb still remaining in England today. It is an excellent golf centre, which is true of practically every house within twenty miles of Oxford Circus.

Frederick William Wile, well known for his political broadcasts from Washington, is here broadcasting various aspects of the conference for the United States. This is the first time anything of the kind has been attempted. Mr. Wile fits in his series of talks from London to synchronize with the hour he usually broadcasts at the American capital. He had proposed British stations be linked for his talks also, but it was decided here that it would be inadvisable to broadcast any foreign interpretation of the activities at St. James's Palace.

SUGGESTS NEW WAY OF REACHING PARITY

Garvin Says Scrapping of British Battleships Would Save Cruiser Building by America.

SEES NEED OF NEW TYPE

Steed Stresses Delegates' Caution in Regard to Kellogg Pact—Importance of Oil Is Emphasized.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—On the premises of Article II of the Kellogg pact, and with emphasis on the phrase that that agreement engages all countries "Never to settle their differences except by pacific action," J. L. Garvin, in tomorrow's Sunday Observer, makes the following four suggestions to the naval arms conference:

"1.—Since war with America is absolutely excluded, our navel monsters are excessive in number for our real imperial needs. Let Britain abolish at once the three or four amongst our eight monsters which are due for scrapping in 1934 and 1935. The Exchequer would gain and no British interest could suffer.

"2—This would secure parity by a new way and save the United States from having to increase her building of 10,000 ton cruisers. For one thing, America would be foolish to lay down these three or more vessels of out-of-date types. For another thing, America does not want to be in the irksome position of laying down more tonnage herself while asking the rest of the world, in President Hoover's words, for 'drastic reduction.'

"3—Future replacement in both categories to be made by an agreed swift battle cruiser type, superseding alike the monsters sprung solely from pre-war and pre-pact reality, and the vaunted 10,000-ton cruisers so soon stultified by the German Ersatz Preussen.

"4—Journalism, of course, is not statesmanship and never can approach that august and exclusively informed function. If journalism had the powers of statesmanship we ourselves would make a historic stroke at this conference. On the most reasonable business terms we would place at the disposal of America in peace and war—if war came at last, despite every effort—all the British naval bases throughout the world."

Steed Notes Paradox.

Writing in The Sunday Times on the atmosphere of the conference, Wickham Steed remarks that the faith of all the delegates in the Kellogg pact is qualified by caution.

"They are tormented by a paradox," he says. "All these governments have renounced war. Four of the five great naval powers besides are bound by treaty obligations enshrined in the Covenant of the League. The paradox consists in the assessment of the naval forces each power 'needs' to safeguard itself against the hypothetic faithlessness of the others—for no other naval force could seriously menace them. The paradox would not exist were the nations themselves imbued with the spirit in which their governments alleged the peace pact to have been signed. But it does exist, and its existence dominates the special atmosphere of the London conference.

"The limitations and reductions fixed for the battle fleets and aircraft carriers at the Washington conference will not stand indefinitely if the London conference fails. If they do not stand, the peace pact and the Covenant of the League may become mockeries. In this sense, the London conference is undeniably the most important international gathering held since the peace conference itself."

Stresses Importance of Oil.

The question of oil fields, which up to now has not been raised in the conference discussions, is mentioned by Commander Erich von Muller, formerly Captain of the German battle cruiser Goeben, writing in the Sunday Referee.

"Oil has taken the place of coal in the warship," Commander von Muller reminds the naval delegates. "It is the fuel of air vessels and submarines—in short of all motor-driven craft. Only a nation which owns sufficient supplies of oil will be able to carry on naval war in the future. The superiority of the United States in this matter over all other naval powers is evident. It is the only naval power which has oil in sufficient quantity within its frontiers.

"The others depend on their ability to keep the seaways open for their oil transports from the countries of origin of this indispensable fuel. The possession of oil wells and provisions for obtaining sufficient supplies will, therefore, be one of the main points of controversy in the future."

CANTON FACING NEW DRIVE.

Nanking Troops Evacuate Wuchow to Meet Kwangsi Faction.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 25.—Facing a fresh drive toward Canton by the Kwangsi faction, government troops aboard transports are leaving Canton for Wuchow, which will be evacuated immediately by the government troops without awaiting a battle.

The garrison at the small city of Kiangyin, 150 miles west of this city, mutinied last night, looted the city and then marched away, with government troops from Wusih in pursuit.

Urges $1,500,000 for Air Mail.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—O. K. Davis, Secretary of the Foreign Trade Council, urged President Hoover today to recommend the appropriation of $1,500,000 to strengthen the air mail service to Latin America. Mr. Davis said the amount had been included in the Postoffice Department appropriation bill, but through technical errors had been removed. He added that the President seemed sympathetic to his request, and that members of the House had assured him that the appropriation would be included in a difficiency bill later in this session.

CHAMBERLAIN VOICES CONCERN FOR EMPIRE

Former Minister in Birmingham Speech Asks Reason for Proposed Naval Cuts.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Sir Austen Chamberlain tonight joined the chorus of Conservatives who profess to be fearful of the British Government's intentions in the naval conference. Speaking in Birmingham, the former Foreign Secretary expressed hopes for the success of the conference, but tempered them with criticism of the British delegation for not taking the British public into its confidence beforehand.

"The lessening of armaments of the world is something which appeals to all parties and breaks down all party barriers," he said. "We all hope the conference will lead to a satisfactory result, but it seems to me that the new diplomacy can be more obscure than the old diplomacy which it sets itself up to supplant. We know more about the ideals of other governments than of our own.

"I wish the government would say on what grounds its naval advisers have urged it to act in reducing the means of protecting our empire. We have already reduced our military resources more than we can do with safety. The history of centuries has demonstrated how vital a strong navy is to us. I venture to think the government would do well to take us more into its confidence regarding the course of the conference."

GOLF PROVES PRINCE'S AIM.

Game at Cape Town Shows British Heir Has a Keen Shooting Eye.

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, Jan. 25 (AP).—Preparatory to lion hunting, the Prince of Wales is getting his shooting eye in trim by golf.

Today he took Lord Knollys into camp, winning five and three, having received six strokes from Lord Knollys, whose handicap is two. The Prince played better than his twelve handicap and executed a great recovery shot on the ninth hole, where he drove into a bunker but came out with a perfect shot for 150 yards ten feet from the pin.

The Prince has started a steel shaft fad in the Conservative Royal Cape Club, which hitherto has followed the lead of the Royal and Ancient Club of St. Andrews.

WASHINGTON WARY OF NEW COMPACTS

State Department Sees Our Delegates to London in a Passive Political Role.

SENATE IS ONE FACTOR

Any Entanglement With European Countries Regarded as Sure to Be Rejected by That Body.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The State Department looks upon the present discussions at London concerning possible political arrangements among the naval powers, which would encourage the movement for naval limitation and reduction, as conversations among the delegates of European nations with the United States in a passive rôle.

This view was expressed today by officials who said that no reports had been received from the American delegation to the naval conference mentioning political problems or discussions. Moreover, there was apparent among administration officials a disposition to consider any prospect of the United States joining in any political arrangements as highly nebulous at the present time.

Proposals to put teeth in the Kellogg anti-war pact through measures that would call for the defining of an aggressor have been resisted here since the multi-lateral treaty was negotiated. More recent suggestions that the five powers represented at London might enter into a treaty pledging themselves never to wage offensive war against each other are regarded as quite superfluous. It is felt here that this would be merely a reassertion of the Kellogg pact in a way that might imply the nations did not mean what they said when they signed or adhered to the anti-war covenant.

The possibility that some sort of compact might be developed at London for consultation among the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy in the event that peace in the Atlantic might be ever threatened was treated guardedly at the State Department. The hesitation evidently arose from the fact that such a project was not considered in any detail by the American delegation before it left for London and since then there have been no reports received from the delegation on that subject.

The disposition of some ranking officials of the administration today was to throw cold water on the prospect of American participation in such an arrangement. It was admitted that the four-power Pacific treaty of the Washington conference of 1922 provides for just such consultation but it was pointed out that the backgrounds of the two regions were quite different, so that a consultation treaty for the Pacific could not be compared except very roughly with one for the Atlantic. The latter, it was intimated, might involve the United States in European politics.

Back of all the reserve manifested today was also the question of the attitude of the United States Senate. Officials feel it would be unwise to enter into arrangements at London which would meet sure defeat in the Senate, and this consideration is contributing to the indefiniteness here on political subjects that arise at London. Naval armament reduction is the main mission of the London conference and great care is being exercised to avoid other questions of a complicated character.

It is probable that no definite position will be taken by the administration on political issues at London until they are shaped with some definiteness. Then, if they appear to possess merit, it is expected that steps will be taken to ascertain the reactions of Senators to them as concrete propositions.

URGES BRYAN MONUMENT.

Senator Howell Files Bill for Memorial at Capital.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—A monument at the capital for William Jennings Bryan was proposed in a bill today by Senator Howell, Republican, Nebraska.

The measure called attention to Bryan's service in the House from Nebraska, his three campaigns on the Democratic ticket for the Presidency and his activity as Secretary of State in the Wilson Cabinet. The William Jennings Bryan Memorial Association of the District would be authorized to put up the monument.

MEXICAN CABINET READY TO RETIRE

Departmental Reports Will Be Handed In for Information of New President.

NEW MINISTRY UNCERTAIN

Don Arturo Elias, Former Financial Agent Here, Is Mentioned for Finance Portfolio.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 25.—A Cabinet meeting is scheduled within the next day or two at which all the ministers will formally resign office and the prevailing status of each governmental department will be reported to President Portes Gil in order that he may hand over the reins of office to President-elect Ortiz Rubio untrammeled by any doubt as to the problems the latter will face after taking office Feb. 5. The action outlined on the part of the present Cabinet members is usual on a change of executive power and gives the incoming President a free hand for selection of his own cooperators.

There is much speculation regarding who may be Ortiz Rubio's choices from the immense number of his political supporters, and he undoubtedly faces a problem of importance. It is thought that the important Ministry of Industry, Labor and Commerce will go to General Perez Revino, former chief of the headquarters staff during the Obregon administration, and that General Andreu Almazan, one of the most successful soldiers during the recent Escobar revolt, will take over the War Ministry from the present holder, General Joaquin Amaro, the latter possibly to take some new military appointment such as inspector general of the Mexican forces.

The appointment in the new Cabinet of greatest interest to Washington will doubtless be that of the successor to Luis Montes de Oca, Minister of Finance, for on the policy of this republic's financial program much depends, from the standpoint of payment of international obligations and that of development of such problems as road construction and irrigation works. Some sources believe Don Arturo Elias, one time Mexican financial agent in New York, will get this post. Ambassador Tellez, envoy to Washington, is not believed to be a probable Cabinet Minister. It is reported he will return to Washington after Ortiz Rubio takes office.

Ortiz Rubio's headquarters are closed over the week-end, but Mexico's future Chief Executive is known to be busy with preparations for taking over power. He has been in conference with Portes Gil at Chapultepec Castle, studying the situation which he will have to face within the next fortnight. His action in refusing banquets and other entertainments proposed, on the ground that they would be a waste of money, finds favorable reaction here. He has politely but firmly stated he wishes no such compliments and has asked those proposing them to open public subscriptions instead to assist those destitute within the republic.

The local situation appears calm with the probability that Ortiz Rubio, like Calles and Portes Gil, will enter office without any untoward incident.

Expelled Lawmakers Reinstated.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 25 (AP).—Final solution of the Congressional differences which broke out while he was in the United States has been announced by President-elect Ortiz Rubio, who informed the press that the eleven Senators and the Deputies who were expelled from the National Revolutionary party during his absence have been reinstated.

The Congressmen were expelled by the party's executive committee on the ground that they violated party discipline in removing several officers of the Chamber of Deputies and appointing substitutes to the positions.

CHARGES RUSSIAN GOT $80,000 BY FALSE TALE

Mme. Rouvier Says He 'Borrowed' Funds in Paris to Aid Recovery of Hidden Jewels.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—Mme. Maurice Rouvier, widow of the former French Premier, was revealed today as the victim of a Russian swindler who "borrowed" funds to help along his efforts to obtain possession of a fictitious inheritance, which he said was worth more than 100,000,000 francs (about $4,000,000). The story of the fraud, which is strongly reminiscent of the ancient confidence game which involved the release of an imaginary relative from a Spanish prison before buried treasure could be uncovered, was unfolded in a complaint filed by Mme. Rouvier's lawyers at the Palace of Justice against Narcisse Terakopoff, a Russian refugee. It is stated that about 2,000,000 francs (about $80,000) was loaned altogether to the 65-year-old Russian by Mme. Rouvier and friends to whom she introduced him after hearing his tale of woe caused by the Bolshevik revolution.

Terakopoff represented himself as the principal beneficiary in the will of a Russian noblewoman who died in Siberia after refusing to disclose to the Bolsheviki the hiding place of her cash and jewelry. Before her death, however, the Russian said, she secretly revealed the hiding place to a relative of his who had been held prisoner by the Soviet ever since.

Terakopoff was sure this hiding place was outside Russia and he said he only needed money to help to arrange the relatives' escape to Paris.

MAVIS RECEIVERS NAMED.

Loft, Inc., Makes Application in Delaware Court.

DOVER, Del., Jan. 25 (AP).—Chancellor Wolcott of the Delaware chancery court today today appointed Harry Hoch of Wilmington, Del., and Ralph Brierly of New York, temporary receivers of Mavis Candies, Inc., of Baltimore. The receivers were appointed on the application of lawyers representing Loft, Inc., of New York.

The temporary receivers were appointed at the home of Chancellor Wolcott. The bill applying for the receivers was not available for public inspection and the reasons for the action were not made known as counsel in the case refused to talk.

FEAR DISTURBANCES BY INDIANS TODAY

British Guard Against Disorders as Nationalists Set "Independence Day" Celebrations.

IRWIN WARNS EXTREMISTS

Thirteen Held as Bomb Outfit Is Found at Calcutta—3 Reported Slain in Blast Near Poona.

NEW DELHI, India, Jan. 25 (AP).—The principal North Indian stations tonight reported arrangements by National Congress organizations for the celebration here of "Independence Day" tomorrow were complete. The authorities everywhere have taken extensive precautions against disorder. It is believed the Moslems generally are not likely to participate.

Lahore reported some excitement in Congress party circles, with people wearing Indian colors in their buttonholes and the Indian flag itself hoisted over private buildings. No disturbances were anticipated, however.

Plans for the celebrations at Amritsar, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Allahabad, Meerut, Agra, Poona and elsewhere comprised processions, illuminations, hoisting of the Indian flag, speeches and resolutions of the necessity for complete severance of connection with the British Government and the attainment of independence by civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes, but without violence, even under provocation.

Irwin Stands By Speech.

The Viceroy, Lord Irwin, speaking before the Legislative Assembly here today, took full responsibility for the statement he made on his return from England regarding ultimate dominion status for India, a statement which caused a considerable flurry in British and Indian politics at the time.

He said that his statement was meant to bring out three salient points:

1. That while no British Government could prejudge what it would recommend to Parliament after consideration of the Simon commission report, it restated in unequivocal terms that goal of British policy toward India.

2. To emphasize Sir John Simon's assertion that the facts of the situation necessitated a constructive attempt to face the problem of the Indian States with regard to treaties regulating their position toward the British Crown.

3. To intimate the intention of his Majesty's Government to convene a round-table conference before it formulated any conclusions.

"That statement stands as I made it," said Lord Irwin, "and in the light of the appreciation which I formed of the principal elements with which we all have to deal, and with full knowledge that weight must necessarily attach to the considered opinion of any one holding my present office, I should have felt I had failed in my duty to India and Great Britain if I had tendered any different advice to his Majesty's Government."

Expects Parley in Fall.

The Viceroy said he had hoped leaders of Indian opinion would have been unanimous in accepting the offer of friendship by the British Government calling the conference, but that it seemed there were some who let the opportunity slip.

"It has recently been announced that some persons who claimed to represent India aimed at the repudiation of allegiance to the crown, and the repudiation of India's financial obligations to which her credit is pledged," he declared.

The Viceroy warned extremists who "desire to achieve their aims by unlawful methods" that he would discharge fully his duty to maintain law and order.

He said he thought the projected round-table conference on Indian affairs would be held in London in the Autumn, adding that he had offered no advice in the matter. He hoped the Premier would be able to preside.

The Moderate Nationalist group, which constitutes the official opposition in the Legislative Assembly, later issued the following statement with reference to the Viceroy's speech:

"We think the general effect of the Viceroy's speech will be to create the impression that dominion status is a distant goal for India which has to be reached by a long journey. It is unfortunate that in this connection the Viceroy stressed a distinction between that journey and its end. We think the supreme need of the hour was for a statement creating a better atmosphere for the round-table conference strengthening the hope for achievement of dominion status at the earliest possible moment.

"We hold the view that in the early establishment of dominion status lies the solution of present difficulties, and that a policy of repression at this juncture will be very unwise and will aggravate what it is intended to cure."

To Hoist National Flag.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Municipal Corporation today adopted a resolution to hoist the Indian Nationalist flag on all municipal buildings and institutions tomorrow for "Independence Day" and on all ceremonial occasions in the future.

Sen Gupta, Nationalist leader and presiding officer of the Municipal Corporation, said the Union Jack was an affront to Indian national honor when flown by themselves over their own national institutions. He said he meant no disrespect to the British flag and that he should not be accused of indifference to the feelings of others if he said he put his country's flag above that of every European nation.

He invited all citizens to join in the celebration of "Independence Day." European members of the municipal council had absented themselves from the meeting, so the opposition was confined to Mohammedan members who refused to take part in tomorrow's celebration.

Thirteen young Bengalis, most of them students, were arrested today in different parts of North Calcutta in raids in which police confiscated bottles containing chemicals, daggers, molds for bombs and quantities of seditious literature.

The raids were the outcome of information divulged during an investigation last December when several young Bengalis were arrested with materials for bombs in their possession. They are still awaiting trial.

Three Moslems Slain at Lor.

ALLAHABAD, Jan. 25 (AP).—Three Moslems were killed and twenty-two were injured in a fight between Hindus and Moslems at Lor, a message from Gorakpur said today.

Fighting broke out during the election for chairman of the Town Area Committee, in which a Hindu and a Mohammedan were rival candidates.

Lor is in the Gorakpur district of the United Provinces.

Tension Felt in London.

LONDON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Tomorrow is "Independence Day" in India and some tension is felt here lest, in the exuberance of Indian nationalistic feeling, the day may witness some events of an untoward nature.

While Mahatma Gandhi, Indian leader, has been insistent on peaceful means for the attainment of nationalist aspirations, there is an air of uncertainty about what tomorrow may bring forth in view of the recent apparent disposition on the part of some elements to disagree with Mr. Gandhi's dictum.

An Evening News message from Bombay says one woman and two children were killed in a mysterious bomb outrage at a village about fifty miles from Poona.

It was believed the bombs were thrown into the street from an omnibus.

The police expressed the opinion that the bombs were being taken from Poona by passengers who became afraid of detection when the bus stopped at a village and that the bombs were thrown into the street where several persons were walking. Two arrests were made later.

The tension here was accentuated by reports of the discovery of a bombing outfit and other weapons during a raid in which thirteen young Bengalis were arrested. It was noted that the district in which the raid took place is the centre of anti-government activities in India.

RUMANIAN OIL STORES BURN

Two Men Killed in $500,000 Blaze at Ploesti Plants.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Jan. 25.—Two serious fires in Ploesti last night caused $500,000 damage. The biggest was at the Astra-Romana oil wells, where several tanks were burned out. Two workers who endeavored to extinguish the flames were burned to death and three others were seriously burned.

In a different part of the city four petroleum stores of the same company were destroyed by fire.

REMARQUE IN SWITZERLAND.

At Arosa for Rest and Treatment for Lung Trouble From War.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Jan. 25.—Erich Maria Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front," arrived yesterday at Arosa, over 6,000 feet above sea level, highest Winter resort in Switzerland, for a rest and treatment for lung trouble contracted in the trenches during the war.

It is stated that he has begun another book, but it is not yet known whether or not it is about the war.

47 Bulgarian Murders in December.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SOFIA, Jan. 25.—A police report for December, issued today, gives Bulgaria one of the highest murder records in proportion to population. Forty-seven murders, most of them political, were committed in the country. Twelve of the slayings are still mysteries.

LOST SHIP'S MASTER MOURNED AS A HERO

Hamburg Learns Captain Gave Life in Final Effort to Save the Monte Cervantes.

JAPANESE VESSEL MISSING

Rescue Craft Fail to Find Miyo Maru After S O S—Lisbon Is Anxious for Fishing Fleet.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

HAMBURG, Jan. 25.—The heroic death of Captain Theodor Dreyer on the liner Monte Cervantes has made a deep impression on the public and the press here. It is held up to the younger generation of German sailor men as an example of devotion to duty.

Private cables from Santiago, Chile, state that Captain Dreyer toward the end ordered all officers and men of the crew, except a skeleton engine room force, on land, while he remained on the bridge, hoping against hope that he might be able to take the Monte Cervantes off the rocks. However, when the first engineer reported that the ship's pumps could not cope with the tons of water pouring into her hold, Captain Dreyer ordered the engineer and his men on land and sent his head office in Hamburg a message to the effect that all the crew and passengers had been saved and that he would once more go through the ship to convince himself nothing had been left undone to save her.

Soon after the Monte Cervantes began abruptly to slide from the rocks. In full sight of the five big ships assembled for the rescue, she sank rapidly into Beagle Channel, the graveyard of hundreds of ships of all nations.

The Hamburg South American Line, owner of the Monte Cervantes, is inclined to think that the Argentine Government ship, Vincente Lopez, in trying to pull the Monte Cervantes off the rocks had torn her bottom hopelessly.

Captain Theodor Dreyer was born in 1874 at Blankenese, a suburb of Hamburg, and joined the Hamburg American Line in 1899 as third officer. In 1911 he became a captain and as such commanded the steamers Santa Theresa, Godrun, Desterro, Buenos Aires and others. He took command of the Monte Cervantes March 15, 1929.

German Ship Ashore Off Africa.

CAPE TOWN, Union of South Africa, Jan. 25 (AP).—The German motorship Rhein, belonging to the Hamburg-American Line, went ashore today on the rocks off Robben Island. The ship, which carried a few passengers, was en route to Cape Town.

The Rhein is listed as of 3,600 tons net register. It left Las Palmas, Canary Island, Jan. 6, for Port Natal.

Japanese Ship Missing After S O S.

TOKIO, Jan. 25 (AP).—The coastal freighter Miyo Maru and her crew of thirty men today were believed to have been lost off the coast of Akita Prefecture. The 1,450-ton ship sent out distress calls at midnight last night. A rescue ship tonight reported that it had searched fruitlessly all day for the Miyo Maru.

Lisbon Anxious for Fishing Fleet.

LISBON, Portugal, Jan 25 (AP).—Considerable anxiety is felt at Cezembra, the fishing centre opposite Lisbon, regarding the fate of 350 fishermen who in twenty trawlers put to sea several weeks ago and have not been heard from since. It was feared that the fleet of fishing vessels may have been caught in the heavy gales raging in the Atlantic and suffered disaster.

CHARGE REMOVAL OF FUNDS

Stockholders Ask a Receiver for Labor Investment Company.

SEATTLE, Jan. 25 (AP).—A receivership for the Pacific Brotherhood Investment Company, a holding company for the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, has been asked in Superior Court by seventeen Seattle and Tacoma stockholders of the company. A hearing has been set for Jan. 29.

The complaint, filed yesterday, named five officers and directors of the Pacific Investment Company and George Stratton of San Francisco as defendants. It charged that more than $700,000 had been transferred fraudulently from the company to the parent Brotherhood Investment Company of Cleveland and its subsidiaries.

The plaintiffs alleged that of the $3,003,000 subscribed for stock of the investment company assets of only about $100,000 remain, in addition to claims against the Cleveland companies for alleged fraudulent diversion of Pacific Coast funds.

Judge Robert M. Jones issued a temporary restraining order prohibiting the removal of assets from the State.

Ivan Hyland, attorney for the Pacific Brotherhood Investment Company, denied the concern was insolvent and indicated that the suit would be contested.

INDIANS HERE CELEBRATE.

200 at Dinner Held at Same Time as Independence Fetes in India.

In conjunction with the celebrations being held in 700,000 villages and towns of India today, the newly formed India Independence League of America held a dinner last night at the Ceylon India Inn, 148 West Forty-ninth Street, to foster the movement for Indian independence through a course of peaceful aggressiveness voted by the Indian National Congress at Lahore this month.

About 200 Indians and friends of the movement attended the dinner which started at 7 P. M., New York time, the hour that corresponds to 7 A. M. in India, when the celebrations today were scheduled to start. A cable from Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, newly elected president of the Indian National Congress, which foreswore any recourse to violence even under provocation, was read at the dinner.

Speakers included the Rev. C. F. Andrews, English associate of Mahatma Gandhi; Dr. J. T. Sunderland, author of "India in Bondage"; Dr. Charles Fleischer, Syud Hossain, T. H. K. Rezmie, founder of the league; Sirdar Yunus Khan, former Chargé d'Affaires for Afghanistan in London, and Salloum A. Mokarzel, editor of The Syrian World in New York.

BOAT BLAST IMPERILS 47 BALBOA STUDENTS

All Jump or Fall Into Bay as Backfire Ignites Spilled Fuel—Five Seriously Burned.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BALBOA, Jan. 25.—A serious tragedy probably was averted here today by the fact that all forty-seven Balboa high school students could swim when an explosion started a fire aboard the auxiliary schooner Big Bill, on which they were bound on a picnic to Taboga Island in Panama Bay. Five students are now in the Gorgas Hospital and forty-one were treated for burns after the accident.

Edward Lowe, a Chinese, may die. Others seriously burned and in the hospital are Fred Maduro, a Panaman, and George Hilbert, Defald Weigold and Stanley Butler, Americans.

The explosion occurred alongside an oil crib at the canal entrance when a backfire in the engine ignited the fumes of gasoline spilled when a supply of fuel was taken on. Some of the students were thrown into the water by the explosion. Others jumped to escape the flames and swam to ladders leading up to the oil crib.

Two tugs and the Balboa Fire Department, using land lines, worked an hour to subdue the flames, which ruined the boat. It is probably a total loss. The Big Bill, named in honor of Mayor Thompson of Chicago, was the first vessel to navigate from Chicago by way of the drainage canal to the Panama Canal. It is sixty feet long, sixteen feet in the beam and schooner-rigged and has auxiliary gasoline motors. Since its arrival here by way of the Mississippi on a voyage around the world, which was abandoned, the Big Bill has been used for fishing and excursion parties in Panama Bay.

RADICAL LEAVES ECUADOR.

Mlle. de Sarraga, Lecturer, Asked to Go After Causing Two Riots.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GUAYAQUIL, Jan. 25.—After causing two riots, requiring a troop of cavalry and police reserves to protect her, Helen de Sarraga, radical lecturer, discussing religious questions, was asked by the Ecuadorean Government to leave the country and has sailed on the S. S. Santa Ritaepelu.

Miss Lea Bunge, a prominent member of the German colony here, mistaken for Mlle. Sarraga by a mob, was attacked and stoned, and police and troops were required to escort her from a train to her hotel.

Mlle. Sarraga has kept the country in a turmoil for a month, particularly arousing the ire of women by her attacks on the Church.

SCORES FRENCH AIM TO RAISE AUTO DUTY

Le Temps Holds Government Is Opposed to Tariff Hostilities Being Opened Now.

ADVISES COLLABORATION

Semi-Official Paper Suggests French Would Benefit More by Taking American Offers.

By ARLISLE MacDONALD.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The American automobile interests in France which are faced with new prohibitive duties on imported cars, trucks and parts are greatly encouraged by the lengthy editorial in tonight's Le Temps reviewing the whole situation and concluding with an authoritative opinion that the French Government does not desire at this time to provoke controversy with the United States over automotive duties.

As Le Temps is a semi-official organ of the French Government it is generally accepted that the point of view outlined in the paper is that of the Tardieu Administration. If this be true, and there is little reason to doubt it, the American automobile industry can set its fears at rest, at least for some months.

Of even greater interest, however, is the definite suggestion in the same editorial that the French automobile industry, instead of depending upon prohibitive tariffs as the best medium for defending its interests, might find it much more advantageous to accept the offers of collaboration recently made by the American companies. This probably refers to the desire of General Motors to purchase controlling interests in the largest French automobile works—Citroen and Peugeot. Negotiations for sales of stock are under stood to have been going on for more than a year, and late in 1929 the transaction was reliably reported to have been put through. But later information appeared to reflect hesitancy on the part of the French interests to join forces with the Americans.

Holds Competition Helpful.

The collaboration referred to in tonight's Le Temps may signify an entirely new proposal by which the American company would pool interests with important units of the French automotive industry, the latter to profit by the world-wide selling organization of the former.

In discussing the anxiety of the American automobile interests Le Temps finds that while the official statement of the American position, as recently published, contains numerous exaggerations, no unbiased French observer can take exception to the American argument that "loyal competition is an incentive to progress." Without contesting the right of the French industry to seek that measure of protection which it finds necessary to its successful operation, the newspaper asserts that it is entirely unwise to engage in tariff conflicts with a nation which is a good customer of France in addition to being a competitor.

"One may also ask if the date for the present move was not unfortunately chosen," Le Temps continues. "The American Senate is now engaged in examining the proposed new American tariff. Is it not entirely possible that the group in Washington which is pledged to unlimited protectionism will see in our action a further pretext for its campaign?

"Furthermore, we think it a dangerous illusion for the automobile interests of France to believe the solution of their problem lies in the field of tariffs. The problem is complex, but it presents just now two aspects—fiscal and international."

French Taxes Criticized.

Le Temps goes on to criticize the various taxes placed upon French motor cars and observes that the French tax authorities can do much to relieve the position of the French manufacturers.

So far as the international problem is concerned, Le Temps compares the "colossal strength of the American industry, the extent of its home markets and the unlimited backing of financial institutions" with the brilliant, active and progressive French motor car industry, which, it says, unfortunately does not boast of success and expansion proportionate to that of the American companies.

"Even with the prohibitive tariffs it demands," the paper concludes, "our own industry will encounter serious difficulties if it continues to depend upon its own strength. Now, where will the French seek the necessary aid? On the side of the European makers in an effort to restrict American importations? The newspapers tell of such an effort being under discussion. Would not the French industry prefer, on the contrary, to lend itself to the advantageous collaboration which, at certain moments, has been offered by American manufacturers? No matter what its choice, the present moment is certainly not the one to open hostilities against any one, and we believe that is the opinion of the French Government."

RUSSIA PLANS TO BUY CATTLE FROM URUGUAY

She May Take as Many as 100,000 Herefords for Reproduction at $180 Each.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTEVIDEO, Jan. 25.—Soviet Russia is looking to Uruguay to repopulate her heavily diminished cattle breeding industry. She has contracted with a Russian agrarian, long a resident here, to tour the Soviet Republic lecturing on the cattle industry as practiced in Uruguay.

At the same time the Soviet has purchased 250 Uruguayan Hereford bulls for reproduction purposes and indicates she may buy as many as 100,000. For animals from two to three years old the Soviet is paying an average of $180 each.

While Argentina's vast cattle industry is based on the importation of British thoroughbred shorthorns, Uruguay's cattle herds were fathered by American Herefords, which were found better suited to resist ticks and other Uruguayan cattle diseases, as well as this particular climate. The animals now being exported to Soviet Russia are therefore grandsons and great-grandsons of animals which first saw the light of day on American prairies.

CHERBOURG PORT GAINS.

Passengers in 1929 Total 1,549 More Than in 1928.

CHERBOURG, France, Jan. 25.—Passenger traffic through the port of Cherbourg was greater in 1929 than in 1928, which was itself well ahead of the previous year. A large share—if not the greatest part—of Americans who come to Europe pass through this port.

The total number of outgoing and incoming passengers in 1929 was 205,117, this being 1,549 more than in 1928. The total included 52,231 first class, 39,408 second class, 43,787 tourist third class passengers and 69,691 emigrants.

NO GAMBLING FOUND, SAYS HOBOKEN CHIEF

Police Head, Brother of Mayor McFeely, Reports No Evidence in Places Drewen Listed.

WON'T RAID WITHOUT IT

Prosecutors, Denying Politics, Asserts He Will Act If Resorts Are Operating After Ten Days.

Detectives of Hoboken have been unable to find any evidence of gambling in any of the ten resorts complained of by Prosecutor John F. Drewen, Chief of Police Edward McFeely declared yesterday after an investigation by about a dozen members of his department.

Chief McFeely is a brother of Mayor Bernard N. McFeely, who, with Joseph A. Clark, Director of Public Safety, was ordered by Prosecutor Drewen to oust the gamblers in ten days or risk indictment for non-feasance. Unless evidence of law violations is discovered by his men no raids will be undertaken despite the orders of the prosecutor, the Police Chief said.

Mr. Drewen's only comment was that his letter of complaint spoke for itself. If any of the resorts where his men found evidence of race track betting are operating at the expiration of ten days, he will proceed under the law as he promised, he said. Meanwhile he was preparing to serve ultimatums upon the Mayors of at least two other municipalities in the northern part of Hudson County.

The Mayor and nearly all the officials of Hoboken are Democrats and members of the organization of Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City. The prosecutor is a Republican, one of the first of his party to hold an important public office in Hudson County in many years. Yesterday he took occasion to deny that his action was inspired by political considerations.

"This move," he said, "is entirely alien to any political motive or purpose and it is in no way related to any sense of party difference. In the law of New Jersey there is provision for specific legal action in cases like the present one. I am simply trying to execute that law."

Reports that Mr. Drewen would proceed against the officials of other cities in the county as he did against Mayor McFeely caused considerable speculation in political circles. It was recalled that last November his men raided a gambling house in West New York and arrested Police Lieutenant Christian Gleitsman, who is now awaiting trial as proprietor of the place. Several raids have been made in Union City and the prosecutor has said that the conditions he complained of in Hoboken are common to every large city in the county.

IRMA DUNCAN IS SUED.

Ex-Manager Says She Cut Profits by Giving 'Red Flag Dance' in South

The insistence of Irma Duncan, adopted daughter of the late Isadora Duncan and head of the Isadora Duncan Dancers of Moscow, on giving the "Red Flag Dance" at Chapel Hill, N. C., and her refusal to recognize the terms of a contract, caused the filing against her yesterday of a $64,500 damage suit by her former manager, the Hurok Attractions. Supreme Court Justice Levy granted an attachment for $5,000 against her property which was served on the officers of the branch of the Guaranty Trust Company at 524 Fifth Avenue where Miss Duncan was believed to have an account.

The plaintiff asks $60,000 for breach of a contract by which it was to get engagements for Miss Duncan and her dancers until Sept. 30 next and the plaintiff was to have 60 per cent and the defendant Miss Duncan was to get from $75 to $175 for her appearances and 40 per cent of net profits.

Her programs were to be approved by her manager, it is alleged, but she declined to submit them to the plaintiff and in violation of her agreement not to give the "Red Flag Dance," it was on her program at Chapel Hill, causing a loss of profits there and elsewhere in the South. She failed to appear at Washington, D. C. and Philadelphia on Jan. 11 and 12 and because she was late at a performance in Paterson the plaintiff had to take $200 instead of $700 promised, it is alleged.

MISSIONARIES FEAR SETBACK IN CHINA

British and Americans Alarmed by News That Henderson Is Giving Up Special Rights.

HOLD THE TIME UNRIPE

Privileges of Living in Interior and Owning Property Would Be Relinquished.

CLASH IN SHANTUNG SEEN

Anti-Christian Movement There Is Intense, American Newspaper Warns Nanking.

By HALLETT ABEND.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, Jan. 25.—Apprehension almost amounting to consternation has marked the receipt in the majority of British and American missionary circles of the announcement by Arthur Henderson, British Foreign Minister, of the surrender of special missionary privileges, and most of the missionaries declare the time is unripe for such a surrender without permanently impairing the fruits of decades of labor.

As the agencies which carry European news are silent on the matter, and the consulates are uninformed on the exact text of Mr. Henderson's announcement. It is supposed here that the announcement concerns the special privileges enjoyed by missionaries but not accorded to foreign business and professional persons—that is, the right to reside in the interior in addition to the treaty ports, and the right to own land and lease property, which is granted exclusively to Christian missionaries and is denied to Buddhists and others from Japan.

Would End Interior Missions.

If these rights are surrendered it will mean the restriction of British missionary efforts to the recognized treaty ports and will force the relinquishment of mission properties in the interior to the Chinese Christian congregations. Such an extreme measure is considered in missionary circles as of doubtful wisdom in view of the prevalence of lawlessness and banditry and the obvious powerlessness of the government in the vast interior areas.

It was pointed out today that six British missions had been permanently occupied by government troops despite repeated representations to Nanking. No American missions are permanently occupied at present, but there are almost weekly reports of transient occupation of these mission properties by soldiers on the move, involving destruction of the property and rendering them unfit for use.

Although the continuance of missionary residence in the interior is admittedly dangerous in view of the kidnappings totaling more than a score during the last year, most of the mission workers decline to appeal for extraterritorial protection but view the surrender of the right to live in the interior on their own property as more vital to their labors than the protection of foreign courts.

The spreading anti-Christian movement already has reached a dangerous intensity in Shantung and would also make the surrender of the special missionary rights untimely. Besides this, all Chinese Communists are agitating against the missionaries, the former following the Soviet doctrines opposing Christianity. The Nationalist movement also is inimical to Christianity and all missions, the missionaries having been repeatedly denounced by propagandists as weapons for "cultural exploitation by the imperialists."

Some circles declare it is entirely proper to surrender the special missionary rights to travel and live in the interior and acquire property.

They declare the missionaries have enjoyed three-quarters of a century of opportunity to ingratiate themselves and their doctrines with the Chinese people and that their special standing has often aroused anti-foreign feelings inimical to business.

Danger of Tragedy Seen.

The Shantung anti-Christian movement reached perilous proportions yesterday and resulted in an editorial in the Shanghai Evening Post, the only American-owned newspaper here, headed "Quick Action Needed," which said:

"The continued reports from Shantung of the spread of bitterness because of the officially sponsored anti-Christian movement demand quick action by Nanking. This month Nanking announced the abolition of extraterritoriality and avowed its ability and willingness to give adequate protection to foreign lives and properties. Yet in the same month there are the Shantung anti-Christian agitations and strikes, and mobs accompanied and protected by soldiers forced their way into the missionary hospital compounds and plastered anti-foreign posters inside.

"The Commissioner of Education in Shantung, whom Nanking appointed, publicly harangues the anti-Christian gatherings and the mission properties are occupied by anti-Christian picketers. Where is there any sign of the adequate protection which the Nanking Foreign Minister promised? These events will engender an inevitable clash if foreigners endeavor to protect their properties, and if this clash comes who is to blame, the foreigner for protecting himself or the government which supinely permits mobs to operate under the inspiration and direction of a political party which the government represents?

"If Nanking is powerless to enforce law and order in Shantung it should admit the fact, but such an admission necessarily implies the abandonment of the pretensions that it can protect foreign lives and properties and assure freedom of worship. Nanking will be held sharply to account for the present untoward events and for any tragic clash which may result from its inaction."

Golfer's Ashes Are Scattered On Course by His Last Request

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—Pallbearers in knickerbockers today carried the ashes of T. F. Halliburton across the fairway of the Waffrons Golf Club, where he was the oldest member, and scattered them beneath a lofty beech tree near the eighteenth hole.

That tree had always been the hoodoo of Mr. Halliburton's golfing life, for whenever he drove toward the eighteenth hole the ball hit the trunk with unerring accuracy and rebounded into the rough. It was the old golfer's last request that he be buried under it without stopping the play of the others during the funeral. Thus, when the strange procession of mourners carried the urn to the beech tree, golfers continued playing in the distance while those near by put down their clubs and raised their caps.

"Under this beech tree we sprinkle his ashes, to the Eternal Spirit we commend his soul," said one of the dead man's friends as the wind swept the hillside and whistled through the branches of the tree. Black-garbed officials of a crematorium flung a handfull of ashes in the air and Mr. Halliburton's last wish had been fulfilled.

BERLIN PRESS BACKS MEXICO IN RUPTURE

Finds Justification in Russian Propaganda for Severance of Diplomatic Relations.

MOVE SEEN TO AVERT BREAK

Credence Is Lent to Report of Negotiations by Moscow by Fact Her Envoy Remains.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—In diplomatic circles here, the recall of the Mexican Minister from Moscow has created a sensation because relations between the two countries are regarded as having started under extraordinarily propitious circumstances, when, as Paul Scheffer points out in the Tageblatt today, Mexico was confronted with the difficult problem of large landed estates that could only be cut up by measures on Bolshevist lines.

"At the same time," continues Herr Scheffer, "Mexico had serious disputes with the United States concerning certain oil wells which she herself wished to make State property. When Mme. Kollontai, who had represented Russia in Mexico, was given a farewell dinner, something happened that enlightened the world as to the change in relations between the countries. A number of guests were arrested by the Mexican police.

"It seems that the Komintern had triumphed over the diplomatic line and that propaganda had been made the principal business of the Russian Legation in Mexico. There were a number of reasons to assume that the revolutionizing of South America was one of the pet schemes of the Kremlin, because the constitutional construction of these Southern republics is peculiarly adaptive to Russian methods. There are great cities with masses of proletarians and large tracts of land resting on a primitive agrarian basis.

"Mexico may have had good reason to ascribe anti-Mexican riots in Rio Janeiro and Buenos Aires to Moscow's machinations, and evidently the Mexican Government considered those machinations serious enough to sever diplomatic relations with Russia."

The Boersen Courier, too, believes the Kremlin seems to have discovered a wide field for propaganda in South America. "But Russia," argues this paper, "is not only a great country, but also a political church that knows no bounds for propaganda. But, as usual, Moscow went too far, and when she tried to mobilize the proletarians of South America against Mexico the latter recalled her Minister from Moscow, who, like the government there, had not realized the change time had brought."

The Rote Fahne says that great demonstrations of labor all over South America furnish Mexico with long-desired reasons for recalling her Minister from Moscow.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 25.—Although there is no official warrant for the statement, it is reported here negotiations are proceeding between Moscow and Mexico City in an effort to prevent the rupture of diplomatic relations between the Soviet Government and the Portes Gil régime.

Some confirmation is seen in the fact that the Russian diplomat here, Alexander Makar, has not yet left the capital.

WHALES RETURN TO LITTLE AMERICA

By RUSSELL OWEN.

floated lazily up in a partially upright position and then sank back again.

But occasionally one coming from further below would shoot straight up in the air, ten feet of his big bulk rising above the water, and seem to hang that way for a moment before sinking down again as straight as he rose.

When two or three did this at once, so that we had to look up at them, the effect was startling. Imagine a pool thirty feet wide with men on both sides of it and three whales sticking ten feet out of the water between them. We wonder if any one has ever been so fortunate.

Assurances Come From Norway.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The State Department was informed today by Laurits S. Swenson, Minister to Norway, that the Norwegian owners of whalers in the Antarctic would be prepared to render aid to the expedition of Admiral Byrd if the situation demanded, but that they saw no cause for concern at this time.

The communication of the Minister which was in response to a message from the State Department on Wednesday, was announced in the following statement:

"In reply to the department's telegram of Jan. 22, Mr. Laurits S. Swenson, the American Minister at Oslo, states that upon learning of the request contained in the above-mentioned telegram the Norwegian Foreign Office immediately got in touch with the manager of the steamships C. A. Larsen and James Clarke Ross, who expressed the opinion that there is at present no special reason to fear that ice conditions should prevent the vessels of the Byrd Expedition from reaching Little America and getting out again in the near future.

Mid-February to Be Decisive.

"However, in case this should not prove to be feasible by the middle of February, he thought there might be occasion for further action and in that event his company would be willing to render assistance.

"Mr. Swenson adds that the President of the Whaling Association at Sandefjord states that the pack ice has always opened the fore part of February and is of the opinion that the fear for the safety of the Byrd Expedition arises possibly because the steamers Nilsen-Alonzo and C. A. Larsen have come out of the Ross Sea.

"The president of the Whaling Association adds that these steamers have not moved, however, on account of the pack ice but because of the scarcity of whales in those waters. He has also assured the Norwegian Foreign Office that the association stands ready to assist if developments require it."

Coast Guard Would Send Ice-Breaker

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Coast Guard is ready to send its ice-breaker, the Northland, a 2,050-ton vessel especially constructed to force its way through ice-locked seas, to the assistance of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition if necessary.

Captain B. M. Chiswell, assistant commandant, said today that if Admiral Byrd's position were found to be precarious, Admiral Billard would dispatch the Northland without hesitation.

Captain Clarence S. Kempff, navy hydrographer, expressed the opinion that the Northland could get through to bring the party out if it reached the South Polar regions before Winter. He said that in order to serve what is apparently Admiral Byrd's need, it would have to start in the near future.

At the same time, the Navy Department reiterated its intention to pitch into the task if the situation should become acute. The nearest American naval vessel is 8,000 miles from Admiral Byrd's base.

REDS CRITICIZE DROP IN INDUSTRIAL PLAN

Moscow Urges Proletarians to Join Extra-Work Brigades as Output Falls Behind.

ASKS CARE OF TECHNICIANS

Young Communist League Starts Drive for Funds to Build First Submarine for Soviet.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, Jan. 25.—In a rousing proclamation, published as a leader by all the newspapers, the Central Committee of the Communist party appeals to all good proletarians—party members, factory managers, officials and friendly technicians—not to let down industrial production.

"We are forced to declare," the committee says, "that the industrial plan for the first quarter of the financial year has not been executed, either in regard to quantity-output or output per man, or to cost reductions," in all the main branches: coal, metals, machinery, cement, paper, textiles and so on.

The central committee considers one of the main reasons for this is that the order, given last Spring for a single command in each factory and mine, has not been obeyed.

It says greater care should be taken of those engineers and technicians who are not "damagers."

The Communist party's militant elements have not yet been adequately mobilized in this battle of industrialization, the proclamation declares, adding that the entire Communist party and Young Communist League must join the "hammers"—those new brigades pledged to extra work and the exercise of special surveillance.

The real figures of production, however, are not as serious as this proclamation might lead those unacquainted with the technique of mass agitation here to suppose. For instance, the coal output for the first quarter of the financial year reached 90 per cent of the plan and the metal output 94 per cent. Moreover, past statistics show there has always been a slump in the first financial quarter, probably as a reaction after the enormous special effort made in the last quarter of each financial year in order to fulfill all the year's plan.

Again, the total output for the quarter October to December, 1929, although criticized by the Central Committee because it is behind the five-year plan estimate, is, of course, higher than that for the corresponding quarter of the previous financial year—by 26 per cent, it is claimed.

MOSCOW, Jan. 25 (AP).—Under the auspices of the Young Communist League, which has 2,000,000 members, a nation-wide movement was begun today to collect funds for the construction of Soviet Russia's first submarine.

Lotteries, special concerts, motion-picture performances and lectures will be given in order to raise money. The State Bank will open a special account called the "submarine account" to which contributors may send remittances.

In some districts one hectare of land will be set aside and the revenue from the agricultural yield will be given toward the construction of the submarine. Members of the Young Communist League will work during their days off in order to help the fund.

BUSH URGES LICENSE FOR ALL BANKERS

Calls It Necessary Step to End Orgies of Speculation and Disastrous Stock Crashes.

PRAISES HOOVER PROGRAM

But Says It Is to Meet Only a Temporary Situation and Asks Permanent Safeguard.

Irving T. Bush, president of the Bush Terminal Company, issued a statement yesterday proposing that all bankers be licensed and that every phase of banking by unlicensed persons be made subject to heavy penalties as "a necessary first step in protecting the public and business from recurring orgies of stock speculation and from such disastrous crashes as that which recent swept out from Wall Street, to rock the business structure of the entire country."

Commending President Hoover's program for restoring public confidence, Mr. Bush declared that "a secondary job of even greater importance—the prevention so far as possible of recurring 'panics' in the securities market with the resultant disastrous reactions on the legitimate business of the country"—should follow it.

"It is important," he explained, "because it has to do with the foundation of the future—of all future—for generations ahead. That which has been done dealt with a temporary situation. What must now be undertaken is to devise some means of making less possible a recurrence of what has happened."

Danger in Too Much Control.

Saying that "the guiding hand of greed is difficult to control" and that "there is danger in too much control," Mr. Bush expressed doubt that the danger of market crises ever can be completely avoided.

Of his proposal to license bankers, Mr. Bush said:

"We accept it as a matter of course that our doctors and lawyers are licensed to practice and deem it wise for public protection that they be subject to fairly rigid supervision and control. We are shaved by licensed barbers, driven by licensed chauffeurs, dine in licensed restaurants and are buried by licensed undertakers.

"But when it comes to our financial health and well-being, both as individuals and as a nation, we place our affairs without reservation in the hands of any person who chooses to open an office and call himself a banker. The banking profession, itself, is entitled to the protection that a soundly conceived licensing system would place around it.

"The United States has grown great because its people have taken chances and more often have won than lost in taking them. There is, however, a distinct difference in the risk involved in investing in constructive effort, no matter how hazardous it may appear to be, and in buying securities which add nothing to the industry they represent.

Wants Industry Unhampered.

"It is right that real industry should be unhampered by restrictions preventing investment of money in new enterprise, even though it fail. Progress will stop if this is done. It is wrong to permit financial promoters or alleged bankers to sell to the public securities created for the purpose of making quick profits for the promoters. There is a fine line between the two operations which should not be crossed. It is difficult in many cases to tell just where this line is. The fact remains that our future success and happiness depends upon finding a safe solution."

Declaring it to be basic to the success of American democracy that "the few must not be permitted to take dishonestly the savings of the many," Mr. Bush went on to say:

"A man or woman who invests honestly in industry has a stake in our future. It is the road to good citizenship. The prime responsibility rests upon the financial leaders, for theirs is the greatest stake. They are leaders because they have succeeded. They are entitled to any profits resulting from honest effort and the honest use of their brains. They have at stake their position and their property.

"Their position is gone if they mislead the people. Their property is gone if they undermine the confidence of the people in their leadership to the point where it is rejected. The foundation of American prosperity is secure if it is not undermined by water pumped in by those who think only of their position at the top. The vicious element in our national life is contributed by the ingenious gentlemen who manufacture pretty printed certificates to take from the people the prosperity they have earned."

STUDY HOSIERY INDUSTRY.

Employers and Workers Join to Get Data to Fix Wages.

Details of the cooperative study of conditions in the full fashioned hosiery industry under the terms of the national agreement between the American Federation of Full-Fashioned Hosiery Workers and the association of employers were made public yesterday.

Under the terms of the national agreement it was provided that a time study should be made of all operations in the manufacture of full-fasioned hosiery so as to furnish a scientific basis rule for the adjustment and standardization of wages.

While time studies are usually made without the consent of the employes and by technicians paid by the management, in the case of the hosiery agreement it was explained that a union representative participates in the making of the study along with a representative of the manufacturers.

It is understood that no specific revision of the piece rates now in effect is contemplated. It is expected, however, that in all future wage discussions that both parties will be supplied with the most authoritative data possible and will not depend merely on economic force or bargaining skill.

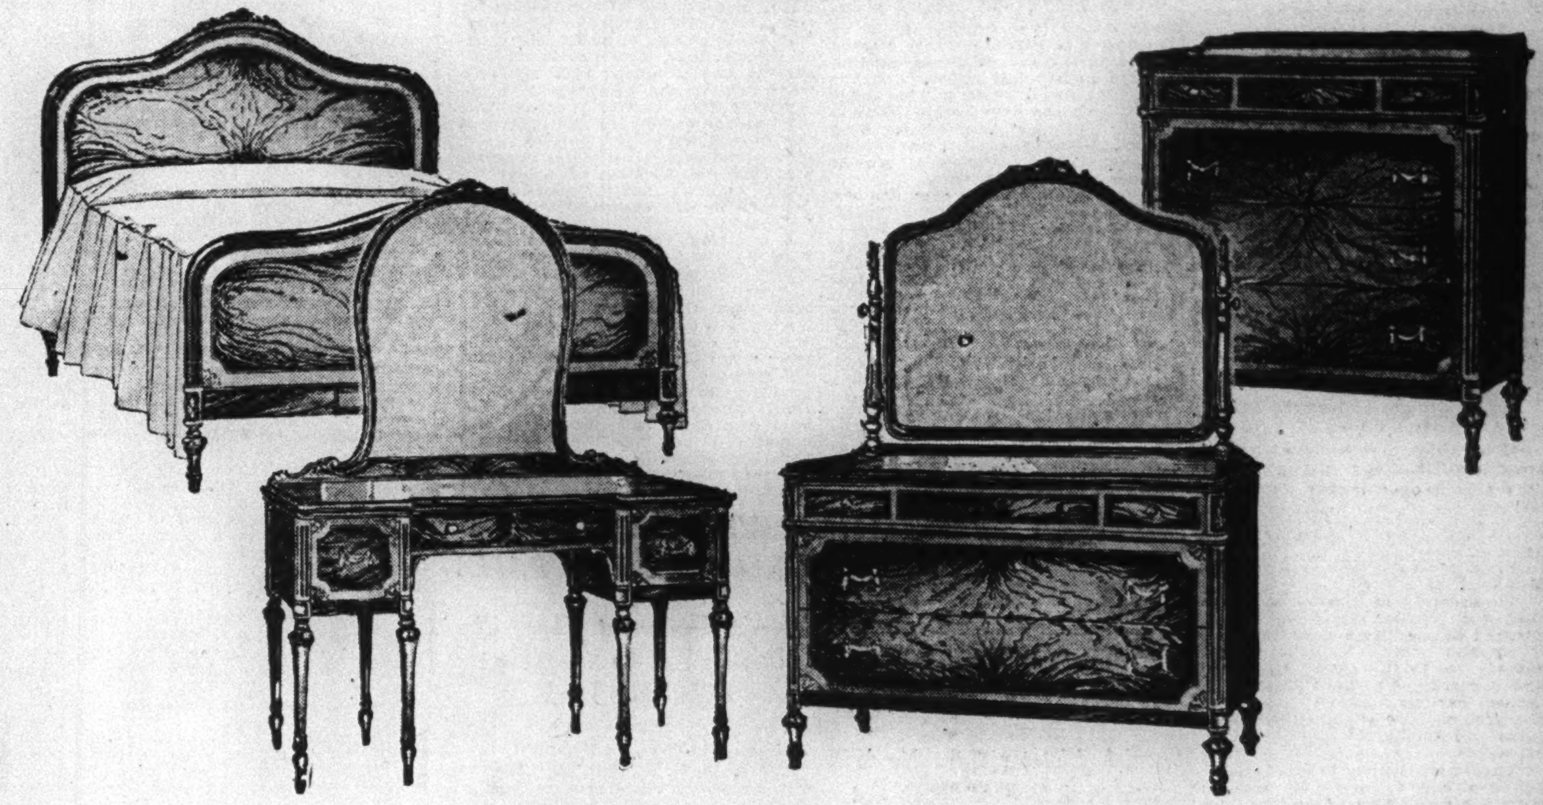
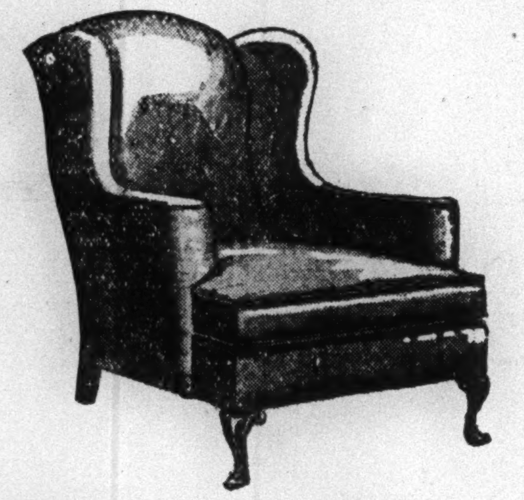
Improved methods of production and Macy's purchasing power make this low price possible. The design is in good taste; nicely worked wood carvings, hand-laid wood mouldings, and distinctive hardware. The construction is excellent: it has oak drawer interiors, dust-proofed throughout. It is of veneered walnut and gumwood, beautifully finished. Choice of wardrobe or large chest. The pieces are priced separately. Smaller pieces to match.





$29.75 Here is a lounge chair that is wonderfully comfortable and yet is formal in design. Its tufted back is soft and pliable to give the right support to the body. Reversible spring filled cushion; hair and white cotton filled. Webbed construction throughout. It is covered in a serviceable taupe denim.

Lounge Suite Tapestry Covered

We consider it an achievement to present at $129 a combination of our most popular living room suite with our most popular covering. This suite is large, roomy, and very comfortable. It is covered in brown or taupe tapestry or in a lustrous green mohair. Hair and white cotton filling; webbed construction throughout. Spring filled cushions and back. A handsome suite that will adapt itself to nearly any decorative scheme.

$29.75 This desk is well designed and sturdily constructed. The two front legs are of the popular ball and claw design. The hardware has an antiqued brass finish. This desk has a roomy and practical interior arrangement, and the drop lid is strongly braced with metal arm hinges. Nicely finished in veneered mahogany and gumwood, it offers the opportunity to obtain an attractive desk at a very low price.

Designed especially for Macy's. The pieces are large and well proportioned. In its strong construction and careful attention to details it offers features seldom found in a suite of this price. It is made of veneered walnut and gumwood with a highlighted finish. The buffet has a long linen drawer as well as one for silverware, and the large china cabinet has a sizeable drawer. Carvings are of wood; drawer interiors of oak.

GRUNDY OPENS FIGHT TO STAY IN SENATE

Warns at Philadelphia Dinner of Danger in American Capital's Migration to Europe.

FISHER AND MACKEY SPEAK

Mayor's Attendance Is Held Significant Because He Was Once a Vare Man.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—Senator Joseph R. Grundy, opening his campaign for the Republican Senatorial nomination in the May primary, issued a warning to labor and industry here tonight that both were facing an economic crisis because of the increasing migration of American capital to Europe, there to be used to promote the manufacture of low-cost commodities which later would compete with the output of domestic concerns.

Senator Grundy, addressing more than 600 industrial leaders and politicians at the Manufacturers Club, was particularly critical of the numerous corporations that are going abroad with their surplus capital and either erecting factories or purchasing existing plants, "to some extent because there are available in foreign countries ample supplies of cheap labor."

"From Europe they not only are supplying such foreign trade as they previously may have built up from their American mills," he said, "but also are seeking to sell here, in competition with American industry and domestic labor, the products manufactured with their much cheaper labor abroad.

Predicts Shift in Tariff Stand.

"The results are at least threefold. In the first place, many of these corporations which previously were most active supporters of the protective tariff principle no longer have that interest.

"On the contrary, in many instances, because they are bidders for the American market from abroad, they actually are in the same position as the exporting foreign manufacturer, and, like the latter, now are opposed to a tariff which would adequately protect American industry and labor.

"Secondly, to the extent that they employ abroad, they have diminished the amount of employment that otherwise would have been available to American labor.

"Thirdly, to the extent that they can land competitive products here which have been made by foreign labor, and at a price advantage over similar domestic products, they diminish the demand for American labor by American mills and factories.

"By reason of the very economic facts which govern the situation, the battleground of domestic labor is right here in the highest wage country in the world; and the protective tariff is labor's fight in a way that it never has been before."

Mayor's Support Significant.

Senator Grundy declared the only hope for labor and industry was in the combined insistence that Congress enact tariff legislation with schedules sufficiently high so that they would stand as a barrier of protection for the pay envelope of the American worker.

The keynote speech was delivered at a testimonial diner given for Senator Grundy. Governor Fisher, who named Mr. Grundy to the Senate after the credentials of William S. Vare had been rejected, and Mayor Mackey were other speakers.

The Mayor's speech, from a political standpoint, carried more than ordinary significance, since four years ago Mr. Mackey managed Mr. Vare's campaign for the Senate. The Mayor agreed with Governor Fisher that Senator Grundy would win the Republican nomination in May.

CASHIER HELD UP IN GIMBEL STORE

Lone Robber Escapes With $3,800 to $5,000 in Robbery Three Floors Below Street.

John Blanchard, C. O. D. cashier at the department store of Gimbel Brothers, Thirty-third Street and Sixth Avenue, was robbed of between $3,800 and $5,000 last night by a lone bandit, who made his escape from a sub-basement three floors below the street. Blanchard is 33 years old, is married, and lives at 4,129 Fifty-fifth Street, Woodside, L. I. He has been in the store's employ for seven years.

He told the police of the West Thirtieth Street station and police headquarters that he was alone in his cage last night at 9:25 o'clock when a man about 30 years old and 5 feet 8 inches tall approached the mesh wire screens and slipped a $10 bill through the door crack . Thinking it was an employe seeking change, Blanchard said he opened the door. The man drew a revolver and demanded the money.

There was $200 in the cash drawer. The bandit took this, Blanchard said, and pointed to a waste-paper basket and demanded the money that would be found there. It was Blanchard's habit to make up his money into packets of $100 as he received it from drivers and toss them into this basket. The bandit put the money about his person, warned Blanchard not to press an alarm button connected to bells through out the store and left.

After waiting a few minutes Blanchard sounded the alarm, and in an instant the thirty employes working in the building, a score of detectives employed there and the night superintendent were at hand. All members of the night staff, who started work at 6 o'clock last night, were not permitted to leave the building until early this morning, while a search was made to see if the holdupman was hiding somewhere in the building.

PRIMO ASKS LEADERS OF ARMY FOR SUPPORT

Spanish Dictator Says He Will Resign at Once if He Is Not Assured of Confidence.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Sunday, Jan. 26.—Premier Primo de Rivera issued a note early today asking the military chiefs for an expression of their confidence. He declared that if he did not receive it he would resign immediately.

Primo has always looked upon the army as his last ditch support, and the appeal shows the precariousness of the situation.

Since he announced the near end of the dictatorship Primo's enemies, including the Church newspapers, have been calling for his immediate leaving. All the others have been assailing him.

STATE CHALLENGES PHONE RATE BASE was possible that the company's schedules might undergo revision before the final schedules are put into effect.

MAYORS ASKED TO JOIN FIGHT.

Cities Urged to Send Representatives to Phone Hearing Tuesday.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 25 (AP).—An invitation to all municipalities to have representatives at the telephone rate hearing before the Public Service Commission on Tuesday gave impetus tonight to the State's fight against the proposed increased rates.

William P. Capes, secretary of the State Conference of Mayors, wired during the day to Mayors of all cities in the State, asking them to appear or have their representatives appear at the hearing. Even before the invitation had been sent, at least one Mayor had wired his protest against the increase to Governor Roosevelt, and what the Executive believed was the beginning of a deluge of similar protests from business heads and householders had commenced to pour into the capital.

The hearing, announced by the commission yesterday, was described as a means of determining "just, reasonable and lawful rates," with the ultimate purpose of fixing a rate for the New York Telephone Company. The commission, according to some of its members, now has in its possession the proposed rate schedule as drawn by the company. The absence of such a rate proposal was used as the reason for the calling of the hearing and the eventual fixing of a schedule by the State, notwithstanding the decision of a Federal court holding a previous schedule announced by the company to be confiscatory.

A question was being considered here tonight involving the ability of the telephone company to enforce immediately its proposed increase, announced as effective Feb. 1.

A section of the public service law provides the commission may suspend operation of a rate schedule for not more than 120 days pending a hearing and decision by the commission. The effectiveness of this law in the present case, however, was considered beclouded by the fact that the schedule of the telephone company was drawn under a Federal court decision.

DEMOCRATIC ACTION LIKELY ON PHONE RATES

Minority Leaders at Albany Hint Utilities Will Be the Subject of Bill This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 25.—The possibility of official Democratic action in the Legislature as a result of the rate increases announced by the New York Telephone Company was strongly indicated here today.

Although the minority leaders for the time being withheld any pronouncement on the subject, it was broadly intimated that a bill or resolution dealing with public utility regulation would be introduced at the first opportunity next week with the full support of all the Democrats in the Legislature. Other legislative developments bearing more specifically upon the New York Telephone Company may follow the public hearing on the rates which the Public Service Commission is to hold on Tuesday.

Following these preliminary steps the legislative minority may plunge the whole question of utility regulation into the political arena and make such an issue of the question that it will carry over into the Fall election campaign. This will depend upon the report of the legislative commission on revision of the public service law which is to file recommendations in March.

Controlled by Republican legislators, this commission has a Democratic minority which has been continually at odds with the Republican members. Should this minority draft a separate report it is likely that the legislative minority will swing into action behind it.

The three minority members of the investigating commission are James C. Bonbright, Columbia University professor; Frank P. Walsh, New York lawyer, and David Adie of Buffalo.

At most of the public hearings the line of demarcation between these men and the Republican legislators, including Senator John Knight, majority leader of the Senate and chairman of the commission, was sharply drawn. Clashes between Senator Knight and Mr. Walsh were almost a daily feature of the hearings for a time. Although Colonel William J. Donovan, counsel for the commission, is understood to be bending every effort to draw up recommendations suitable to both factions, it is considered inevitable that the minority will insist on sponsoring some recommendations for regulation revision which will be too drastic for the Republican members to follow.

The Democratic legislators are keeping a watch on these developments and will be prepared to give instant support at the proper moment to the Governor's appointees.

Meanwhile, continuing to keep a jump ahead of his leaders, Assemblyman Louis A. Cuvillier, Democrat, of New York, who has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the New York Telephone Company and related interests, issued a statement today attacking the telephone company and declaring that the $14,000,000 rate increase was not merely to insure returns on capital already invested but for future investment.

The New York Telephone Company, he said, was a "gold mine" to its parent company, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which, according to the Assemblyman, paid 12 per cent in dividends last year.

"The American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its subsidiaries," he said, "have 19,209,000 subscribers in the United States and the increase of rates in the State of New York by court order is only the beginning for the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, through its subsidiaries, of asking for an increase in each State of the Union.

"It behooves the Legislature of the State of New York to at once investigate the entire ramifications of the American Telephone and Telegraph company through its subsidiary, the New York Telephone Company, so that this private legalized pocket picking of the public by the telephone companies may be frustrated."

HOLD PROFESSOR HERE WROTE 'OBSCENE' BOOKS

Philadelphia Authorities Plan His Arrest as a Result of Book Shop Raid.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—Plans of the District Attorney's office to cause the arrest of a New York professor of English as the author of literature described as "indecent and obscene," seized in a raid here yesterday, were revealed this afternoon after Horace F. Townsend, proprietor of the raided book shop, had been released in $2,500 bail to await trial.

County detectives refused to disclose the name of the professor or his university until after a further investigation. They declared that from stubs in Townsend's check book they learned the professor's name and ascertained that he had received substantial sums for furnishing written articles which were later printed and bound and sold at prices ranging from $20 to $100 a volume.

It was said that efforts would be made to connect the professor with the illegal sale of indecent literature here and that a warrant would be issued for his arrest if sufficient evidence were collected. Whether the objectionable matter was sent through the mails from New York was one phase which the prosecutor's men sought to clear up. Most of the printing, it was believed, was done here.

The writings of the professor, detectives said, formed only a small part of the $10,000 worth of books seized in the raid. After Townsend had waived hearing he issued a statement through his counsel saying there had been a heavy demand for such literature among Philadelphians prominent in business and social circles.

"Mr. Townsend was practically forced into handling unexpurgated editions of famous writers through a demand by clients who placed orders with him," said the statement.

"The orders were placed by members of many leading literary organizations and clubmen, as his records will show. In every instance the defendant acted solely as the agent."

Detectives scouting this statement pointed out that a search of Townsend's papers failed to reveal any large number of orders, while the books seized in the raid almost filled a police patrol wagon.

FIND A NEW 'DRAFT' OF THE DECLARATION

Toronto Galleries Report It Is in Autograph of John Penn, a Pennsylvania Official.

EXPERTS HERE SKEPTICAL

Dr. Rosenbach Believes Document in Collection of Penn Descendant Is Only a Contemporary Copy.

The discovery of a document purporting to be the original draft of the Declaration of Independence, as well as a collection of more than 150 paintings by famous artists, was reported yesterday in Toronto.

The document is said to be in the autograph of John Penn, a proprietary Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania and a grandson of William Penn, and from this fact its sponsors in Toronto deduce that John Penn and not Thomas Jefferson was the author of the Declaration. Authorities in the autograph field here said last night that they had not heard of the document and saw no reason for doubting Jefferson's authorship of the Declaration.

The Toronto document is said to have been owned by a Mrs. Field, née Ellen Penn, of Stoke Poges, England, "the last descendant of the Penn family." Her chief interest in life was in the belongings of her ancestors, most of which articles she had inherited and others of which she had purchased. "As the last of the Penn line," it was said, she had inherited a considerable fortune but had spent it all on family heirlooms and died penniless.

Refused to Sell Document.

European dealers, it was said, had tried to buy the document but had met with refusal, because Mrs. Field did not trust them. Several months ago her representative, according to the story, requested Thomas F. Ryan of the Ryan Art Galleries, Ltd., Toronto, to handle the collection. Mr. Ryan accepted and accordingly the collection was sent to him. The paintings were said to be by Reynolds, Raeburn, Constable, Turner, Whistler, Sargent and others.

No authorities here could be found last night who had been consulted as to the authenticity of either the document or the paintings. Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach expressed the opinion that the document might be a contemporary copy of the Declaration in the autograph of Penn. Dr. Rosenbach also questioned the report that the Mrs. Field of Stoke Poges was the last descendant of the Penn family, saying that descendants still lived in Philadelphia.

Three preliminary drafts of the Declaration exist, said Dr. Rosenbach, and they are all in the autograph of Jefferson. The first, which is in the State Department at Washington, bears corrections by Franklin. The second is owned by the New York Public Library, and the third is in the possession of the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia.

Vellum Copy at Capital.

A fourth draft is the vellum copy which bears the autographs of the signers and is in the Library of Congress in Washington. Dr. Rosenbach said that he owned a fifth draft, copied, like the fourth draft, by a scribe. Thus the fifth draft was sent by Benjamin Franklin to the King of Prussia, seeking recognition of the independence of this country.

After the promulgation of the Declaration, Dr. Rosenbach said, it was published as a broadside in Philadelphia and given away. The broadside might have been copied and sent to England by Penn.

WILL LIMIT CHICAGO IN USE OF BIG LOAN

salaries alone, disregarding the other 4,300 employes of the school board, total $41,961,842. The county has a payroll of $8,121,985, and the city corporate payroll is estimated at $38,690,400. This is a total of $88,774,227.

No word was received from Mayor Thompson, but city officials were reported as hoping to sell 1930 tax anticipation warrants for cash in New York or Europe, and were said not to be greatly interested at this time in cooperating with the Strawn committee.

Some pledges of cooperation with the committee were received. Howard W. Elmore and Ross A. Woodhill of the Sanitary District promised "full and complete cooperation." President Cermak of the County Board said he would "be glad to go along and abandon his plan to say county employes with tax anticipation warrants."

Market for Tax Warrants Doubtful.

The city's 1930 tax warrants will be put on sale Feb. 6 as a result of the Mayor's failure yesterday to veto the Council's "economy" budget of $55,000,000. In some quarters the prospect for the disposal of these securities was regarded as unfavorable in view of reports that New York bankers and investment houses have indicated a lack of confidence in Chicago municipal paper. The first indication along this line was when Wall Street quoted reduced prices on full credit bonds issued on Dec. 20.

On that date the city put out $7,278,000 4 per cent bonds. They were purchased at $97.44. Maturing between 1931 and 1939, they were offered to the public at prices yielding between 4.25 and 4.35 per cent. A little later Wall Street offered the bonds to yield 4.50 per cent.

Riding to Fall for Many Years.

Chicago has been riding to a financial fall for many years. So far as operating revenues are concerned, the city is admittedly in a tangled and serious situation. It has spent all the money it could obtain. It has borrowed all it can. Applications for more loans have been refused. The treasury is bare of operating revenues. An appraisal of its present condition by its own citizens may be summarized as follows:

It has a floating debt of approximately $270,000,000, secured by short-term notes, many of them without due dates. These are payable for taxes, as and when received. Others have a definite date of maturity, which is fast approaching. There are no taxes with which to pay them. Outstanding also are $6,000,000 in judgments.

There are about $21,000,000 of unsecured debts. Half of this represents unpaid bills for coal, electricity, food, clothing and medical and other supplies and materials. The other half is money temporarily lent by the Controller and Treasurer out of trust and other surplus funds set aside for specific purposes to meet payrolls of last year. This dipping into trust funds for current operation has been criticized as illegal.

In addition to these debts of $297,000,000 are unpaid salaries and wages of 40,122 employes, totaling $11,275,500.

The uncertainty as to when this total indebtedness of $308,000,000 will be paid has affected the credit of Chicago, both on short-time loans, represented by tax anticipation warrants, and on full-credit long-term bonds.

Two Causes Assigned.

Impairment of the city's credit in its own community has been indicated by the failures of the county government to obtain bids on $7,000,000 of tax anticipation warrants, a lack of subscribers to $500,000 of Forest Preserve bonds, inability to dispose of $625,000 tax warrants for the municipal tuberculosis sanitarium and the refusal of bankers to bid last week on $1,500,000 of full credit bonds offered by the South Park Commission.

Two reasons are generally accepted as the cause of the plight. Public officials contend that the reassessment of all real estate in Cook County is responsible. Their critics and opponents maintain that wastefulness and extravagance are the cause. Impartial observers believe both factors enter into the situation.

Chicago has a number of local governments and various special tax levys for particular purposes. Police and fire protection, health service, street cleaning, paving and lighting are under the administration of the city government proper. A special board has jurisdiction over tubercular hospitals.

The city courts are independent in appropriations and expenditures. Control of the election machinery is semi-independent. The public libraries are conducted by a board which makes separate tax levies. The school board has full authority over its finances. The county board, which supplies the chief public hospital, provides for the blind, dependents and most of the other charities, is an independent municipality.

The disposal of the city's sewage is entrusted to another government. The principal public parks are maintained and operated by three boards, one for each section of the city, and each is a government in itself. There are nineteen other park districts, each having jurisdiction over small areas. Each of these makes one tax levy, and some can order special levies for stipulated purposes. Each has more or less income from miscellaneous sources.

Political Tax Reductions.

About three-fourths of the city's tax revenue is obtained from assessments upon real estate. Theoretically, the original assessment is made by the Board of Assessors and complaints against their work are heard by a Board of Review. As a means of obtaining and maintaining political favor, the practice of reducing taxes has grown up. The political captains in the 2,400 voting precincts have solicited the privilege of reducing taxes as a political favor.

The cumulative result was that in 1927 there was a wild scramble for tax reductions by many of those who had not been cared for by political agents. More than 100 complaints were presented.

An investigation by Northwestern University's bureau of land economies of real estate valuations has shown some property to have been valued at less than 5 per cent of its sale value and other property valued at 105 per cent. A legislative committee after an investigation has made similar charges.

The State Tax Commission in May, 1928, ordered publication of the real estate assessments. A special session of the Legislature made the requirement specific and added to the powers of the State Tax Commission.

The commission then ordered a reassessment of all real estate in Cook County by the local assessing officials. For a time they found excuses and delayed a start, but the reassessment was finally begun in December, 1928. It is still in progress. The tentative figures reduce the valuations within Chicago more than $400,000,000 and increase the values outside of the city limits, but within Cook County, by more than $300,000,000.

The so-called country towns are now fighting the city, and Mayor Thompson and the School Board are attempting to obtain a revaluation on the property in the Loop, or central business district. The valuation here has been reduced $119,000,000, according to the Board of Assessors, but the Mayor and School Board contend the amount is $300,000,000.

The result is that Chicago has obtained no taxes since the collections of 1928.

Chicago has been living on credit for many years, so far as taxes are concerned. Taking the three largest spenders, the city, county and School Board, it can be said that they spend their taxes a year before they are collected. Under the Illinois law they are permitted to borrow on tax anticipation warrants up to 75 per cent of their respective tax levies. The city has been following that practice for forty years, the county for twenty-five years and the School Board for fifteen years.

But in the last sixteen years the city has not confined its borrowing to 75 per cent of its tax levy. After exhausting its legal borrowing power, it has made loans to itself from its trust and surplus funds for the other 25 per cent. The county, being without trust funds, has added to its outstanding bills from year to year until they now total $7,035,000. The school board is following the county system. In the period between 1922 and 1928 the school board is shown, by a recent tabulation presented to the Commercial Club, to have spent $24,000,000 more than its income for that same period.

The citizens' "rescue committee," headed by Mr. Strawn, has been at work for eight weeks. Mr. Strawn asserts that the reassessment has caused the trouble, but that the method of city financing would eventually have brought the same result.

This committee has been attempting to expedite the reassessment, but with limited success to date. It has prepared a program for the Legislature to prevent a recurrence of the difficulties and grant a limited amount of financial relief. But it has complained of a lack of cooperation from office holders and therefore insists that it is premature to ask legislative relief.

GIRL WITH PISTOL SEIZED.

Detective in Taxi With Her Finds Revolver in Her Bag.

A young woman who described herself as June Lee, 23 years old, a night club hostess, recently of Chicago, was held without bail yesterday on a charge of violating the Sullivan law. Detective Sullivan said that he "picked up" the young woman in the evening, and later entered a taxicab with her. In the course of the conversation, he said, he mentioned that he was a detective, whereupon the girl became agitated and tried to throw her handbag out of the window of the cab. A short struggle ensued, during which the detective obtained possession of the bag. A pistol with five extra cartridges wrapped in a handkerchief, was found in the bag, the detective reported.

The handbag also contained several baggage checks, and the detectives who questioned her announced that they would search the baggage covered by the checks today.

'SALARY GRAB' BAN AIM OF ALBANY BILL

Citizens Union Backs Law Amendment Barring Raises Like Recent Ones Here.

'HOME RULE LAW ABUSED'

Hofstadter and Lefkowitz to Introduce Measure at Session Tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—To prevent a recurrence of what has been termed "the first serious abuse of the home rule law," an amendment to that statute will be placed before the Legislature at its session on Monday evening to prohibit the legislative body of a city from passing a local law to increase the salary of an elective officer for the whole or part of the term for which he has been elected.

The bill will come to the Capitol sponsored by the Citizens Union and will be introduced by Senator Samuel H. Hofstadter and Assemblyman Louis J. Lefkowitz, both New York City Republican members.

The measure is an outgrowth of the substantial salary raises Mayor Walker and the other elective city and borough officials in New York City voted to themselves last December, subsequent to their re-election for another term.

The incident is said by R. E. McGahen, secretary of the Citizens Union, to be the only one of its kind since home rule has been in effect, although there are some sixty cities in the State.

Says "Decent Respect" Should Rule.

"Decent respect for the proprieties, if not rules for orderly finance, should restrain an elected official from providing for himself, or even accepting, an increase in salary payable during the or which he has already been elected, "Mr. McGahen said.

"A policy prohibiting such action was adopted by the State a decade ago, but has since been whittled down by amendment and local legislation. Apparently some officials cannot be relied upon to respect this principle unless its violation is prohibited by law in copper-riveted fashion.

"The Citizens Union does not wish to see the City Home Rule law encumbered with unreasonable restraints upon city officials. However, the widespread resentment at the recent action of the principal elected officials of New York City in voting themselves salary increases immediately following their election, indicates clearly that this particular form of restraint is both necessary and demanded by public sentiment.

"This incident was denounced by many citizens upon general principles and without regard to the technical details of city government. This indicates that the public generally regards acceptance of elective office as obligating the official to serve during his term for the compensation already fixed when he sought the office. This is an entirely reasonable assumption, and the voter should be protected in his reliance upon it.

Bill Would Affect All Cities.

"When a person becomes a candidate for an office for a fixed term he surely implies that he regards the office as a desirable one to hold at the salary then fixed. He should be held to his bargain. Any other policy runs counter to the popular conception of a square deal.

"The Citizens Union is confident the Legislature will remedy the defect in the city home rule law without unnecessary delay."

Although the local measure under which the salaries of the Mayor, Controller, President of the Board of Aldermen and the five Borough Presidents were raised was sponsored by George U. Harvey, Borough President of Queens and a Republican, the Republican organisations in New York City have gone on record as opposed, less to the increases themselves, though costly to the taxpayers, than the manner in which they were put through the Municipal Assembly.

The Hofstadter-Lefkowitz bill, having been drafted so as to apply to all cities, will require only a simple majority, which the Republicans have in both the Senate and Assembly, and the approval of Governor Roosevelt to become law.

ACCEPT GREEFF INVITATION.

Brooklyn Hospital Representatives to Discuss Ambulances Tomorrow.

The ambulance committee of the Hospital Council of Brooklyn agreed yesterday to confer with Dr. J. G. William Greeff, Commissioner of the Department of Hospitals, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock at the commissioner's office to work out a solution of the Brooklyn ambulance situation.

Sheldon L. Butler, secretary of the committee, announced this yesterday following a telephone talk with Dr. Greeff. He said that a plan for city operation of all ambulances from the fourteen hospitals involved had been agreed upon in principle. The purpose of the conference, he said, was to settle the details.

Mr. Butler said that if Dr. Greeff and the committee should come to an agreement each hospital would have to accept this agreement before the plan would become effective.

The committee which will meet Dr. Greeff includes, in addition to Mr. Butler, who is superintendent of the Long Island College Hospital, the following:

STEPHEN CALLAGHAN of St. John's Hospital, former Supreme Court Justice.
Dr. JOHN E. DOUGHERTY of the Jewish Hospital.
The Rev. Dr. JAMES HOLMES of the Methodist Episcopal Hospital.
Father JOSEPH BROPHY of the Catholic Hospital.

WHALEN PLANS VACATION.

Will Leave Next Week for Month's Rest, He Announces.

Police Commissioner Whalen will start on his vacation the latter part of next week, he said yesterday. Although he did not say where he would go, it is believed he will rest at Palm Beach.

He said that he hoped to end the police trials growing out of the handling of the Rothstein murder case and do some work on the 1929 annual report before he goes away. He will be gone about a month.

Plan for Tuberculosis Conference.

A preliminary meeting of the board of directors of the National Tuberculosis Association was held yesterday at the Hotel Astor to arrange the scientific program for the annual meeting of the association, which will take place at Memphis, Tenn., on May 7 and will continue until May 10. Dr. Linsly Williams, president of the association, presided.

$342,158 JUDGMENT AGAINST FOX FILM

Public National Bank Claims Default on $450,000 Demand Note Dated Dec. 9.

UNTERMYER IS HOPEFUL

Expects Friends of Movie Man to Settle Bill and Allow Refinancing Plan to Go On.

A judgment by default for $342,158 in favor of the Public National Bank and Trust Company, 76 Wall Street, against the Fox Film Corporation was entered yesterday in the county clerk's office.

Samuel Untermyer, counsel for the Fox Film Corporation, said that arrangements had been made by friends of Mr. Fox to pay and take over the judgment. This action, according to Mr. Untermyer, would eliminate interference with pending plans for trusteeing the B stock and refinancing the company, all of which he said looked very favorable. Mr. Untermyer added that within the next few days he believed a solution to the company's troubles would be found.

The complaint against the film company, drawn by Moses & Singer, attorneys for the bank, stated that $109,285 had been paid on a demand note for $450,000 dated Dec. 9, 1929, when the suit started and $1,688 more since then. The difference between the total of these sums plus the amount of the judgment and the $450,000 represents interest and costs. The complaint said that the film company had defaulted in answering the suit.

Ask Fox Receivers in Northwest.

SEATTLE, Jan. 25 (AP).—A receiver for the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., operators of Fox motion picture houses in several Pacific Coast cities, was sought in Superior Court here today by the C. S. Jensen Investment Company of Portland and Mrs. Mary G. Von Herberg of Seattle. The West Coast Theatres, Inc., was named co-defendant. Theatres in Washington, Oregon and Montana are involved in the proceedings.

The plaintiffs, who say they hold 2,500 shares, or the entire issue of the Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock, contend they were being deprived of dividends because of alleged mismanagement, excessive salaries and overhead assessed against the corporation.

Attorneys for the defendants characterized the suit as "spite work" and an effort to "hurt the Fox enterprises."

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERS CONVENE HERE TODAY

2,000 Expected to Attend Annual Sessions Which Will Continue Through Friday.

The American Institute of Electrical Engineers, with an expected attendance of 2,000, will convene for its annual Winter meeting at the Engineering Societies Building this afternoon. The convention will continue through Friday afternoon with three meetings daily. Professor Harold B. Smith of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, president of the institute, will open the meeting.

Transoceanic communciation, ultraviolet ray devices and protection of electrical equipment from damage by lightning will be among the topics. Forty-nine formal papers are to be presented at the ten technical sessions. Thursday evening presentation of the Edison Gold Medal to Professor Charles F. Scott of Yale will take place. Tuesday evening will be devoted to the dinner and smoker and several inspection trips have been arranged for Wednesday afternoon.

The session on ultraviolet radiation, which will be held tomorrow evening, has been arranged jointly with the Illuminating Engineering Society. Dr. M. Luckiesch of the General Electric Company will deliver a paper on "Simulating Sunlight" and H. C. Rentschler of the Westinghouse Lamp Company will speak on "An Ultraviolet Light Meter."

Other topics for technical sessions will include power system planning, protective devices, dielectrics, welding and electrical machinery. The inspection trips on Wednesday will include visits to the Fokker Airplane factory, Bell Telephone Laboratories, Sperry Gyroscope Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company's short-wave transmitting station, International Telephone and Telegraph Company's transatlantic cable terminal, Air Map Corporation of America and the switching station of the Public Service Company of New Jersey.

SUGGESTS JOINT DRIVE BY COLLEGES FOR FUNDS

L. C. Boochever of Cornell Advocates National Campaign Comparable to Red Cross Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Jan. 25.—An intercollegiate alumni fund roll-call or a nation-wide college drive which might parallel the National Red Cross Week was advocated by L. C. Boochever of Cornell University at the annual meeting here of alumni secretaries of the Middle Atlantic district held at Lehigh University.

The plan involves the starting of a concerted drive for funds simultaneously by colleges and universities throughout the country at a specified period each year. It would be an all-inclusive campaign handled by a large bureau.

Every college alumnus in the country would be solicited to contribute funds to his college or university. Alumni workers of every institution would band together in the campaign.

With the wide distribution of colleges, a united drive could be carried into every corner of the land, Mr. Boochever said.

Mass publicity for such a drive would be more acceptable to the papers than spasmodic floods of such material, such as occur at present, he contended, adding that the expense would be divided on a per capita basis and would be comparatively inexpensive to the individual institution. It would not compare in cost to the present tremendous overhead involved in individual campaigns, he declared.

SEEKS AN IDEALISM AS CREDIT TO JUDAISM

Ludwig Vogelstein Tells at Cincinnati Meeting High Purposes of Hebrew Union.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 25.—"We are endeavoring to raise up a generation of God-fearing, law-abiding, idealistic men and women who will be a credit to Judaism and faithful servants to mankind," Ludwig Vogelstein of New York, chairman of the executive board of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, declared as its guiding purpose at the semi-annual meeting of the board today.

"The union," he said, "is the national organization of 282 Reform Jewish congregations in the United States and Canada, and the consideration of its welfare is equivalent to considering the progress of the American Jew and his loyalty to the faith of his fathers.

"It is appropriate to record that our activities have extended in many directions. We are planning a district council meeting for Atlanta in March. We are planning a metropolitan district rally in New York on the anniversary of Isaac M. Wise's birthday and plan to combine with it the dedication of Isaac M. Wise Memorial Hall in Temple Emanu-El."

Mr. Vogelstein paid a tribute to Adolph S. Ochs of New York, chairman of the Hebrew Union College Endowment Fund, who raised over $4,000,000 for the college. He announced that plans for the erection of the new library at the college will soon be completed.

Stressing the importance of additional funds for the removal of the deficit and for widening the scope of the union activities, Mr. Vogelstein said:

"If we are to fulfill our duty, we must apply our organization more forcefully than heretofore in the field of religious education in the larger sense of this term. This requires four different types of activities, training of rabbis, training of teachers, bringing the spiritual message to isolated districts and creating literature and text books. All these activities are on our program, but the woeful lack of funds has hampered us in every direction."

Mr. Vogelstein commended David A. Brown of New York for his work as chairman of the board of finance, and Alfred M. Cohen of Cincinnati, chairman of the board of governors of the Hebrew Union College.

He paid tributes to Louis Marshall of New York and Joseph Schonthal of Columbus, whose memories, he said, will be a blessing to the Jews of America.

BOATS TAKE FOOD TO ICE-BOUND TOWNS

Coast Guard Cutter and Tender Push Their Way Through Floes in Columbia River.

DOCTOR FLIES TO SAVE GIRL

munities Face Water Shortage— Several Washington and Idaho Com- Mercury Falls Here.

CATHLAMET, Wash., Jan. 25 (AP).—Ploughing through ice-clogged water, the Coast Guard cutter Northland and the lighthouse tender Rose brought food and mail today to several isolated towns along the lower Columbia River.

The Rose, loaded with supplies, bucked the heavy ice to make a landing at Skamokawa docks, and left food and general supplies. Sleds brought the provisions to Cathlamet over the eight-mile trail.

The Northland was unable to reach the docks, as the channel was not deep enough. She helped open the way for the Rose, however, and the tender battered a trail to the pier.

The Rose stopped also at Brookfield and Altoona, and a contact was made with Pillar Rock.

Doctor in Plane Saves Child.

ASTORIA, Ore., Jan. 25 (AP).—The life of June McGilvray, aged 9, probably was saved yesterday at Puget Island. When The Portland Oregonian heard she was near death from pneumonia that newspaper sent Dr. E. L. Boylan to her by airplane. He found several other persons ill. When he returned to Portland he said the girl would live.

Towns Face Water Shortage.

SPOKANE, Jan. 25 (AP).—Seven Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho towns reported a serious water shortage today as the result of twenty days of sub-zero temperatures.

Wallace and Mullan, Idaho, have been facing a fire hazard for almost a week, with reservoirs choked by ice. Officials of these cities requested residents to discontinue the practice of running water all night to avoid freezing the pipes. A fire at Wallace did serious damage because of low pressure.

Nearly half the 300 residents of Bovill, Idaho, were without water facilities today, the water mains freezing and bursting faster than they could be thawed.

The sub-zero weather sent the frost twenty inches under ground at Moscow, Idaho. Pipes continued bursting, and the water supervisor said the situation would become more serious even if a thaw did come soon.

33 Below Zero in Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 25 (AP).—A new cold wave invaded the Northwest today, sending temperatures tumbling as much as 44 degrees in twenty-four hours, to a minimum of 33 below zero at Thief River Falls, where it was 11 above yesterday.

All Minnesota reported sub-zero marks today, while in North Dakota only a few points reported the mercury above zero. The minimum in North Dakota was 17 below at Fargo.

South Dakota also slipped from mild temperatures to below zero readings, expect in the extreme southeastern and parts of the western section. Sioux Falls was the coldest, with 8 below.

Temperature Here Falls Rapidly.

Despite yesterday's bright sunshine, the temperature for the day averaged four degrees below the average for the date, as recorded by the Weather Bureau. The mercury kept within a comparatively narrow range, registering 20 degrees at 6 A. M. for the low mark of the day, and 31 at 2:45 P. M. for the high.

The sun was visible nearly all day, although the sky clouded somewhat during the afternoon.

The temperature fell rapidly after sunset, and it was expected at the Weather Bureau last night that it would fall to 12 degrees by dawn this morning, eight below the minimum for yesterday.

BACKS CLEAN STREET PLAN.

Women Voters' League Endorses Schroeder's Program.

The New York League of Women Voters has endorsed the program of the Sanitation Commission for cleaner streets throughout the city, according to Mrs. F. Louis Slade, chairman of the league, who has made public a letter from her organization to Commissioner Schroeder, chairman of the commission.

"The New York City League of Women Voters has read with deep interest the proposed program of your commission, as stated in THE NEW YORK TIMES for Jan. 22," the letter said. "We are delighted that the commissioners are going seriously to the task of securing the clean streets New York so badly needs."

Mrs. Slade also declared that the Clean Streets Committee of the league would consider requests or instructions from the commission, and that although her committee had prepared the 1930 program, the commission's suggestions would be carried out wherever possible.

The league began a campaign for cleaner streets last November, when 341 women were assigned to walk the streets twice daily for one week and report violations of the sanitary code.

Mrs. Slade also announced that more than half of the required amount was realized in the recent ten-day drive for $60,000. She said the work of raising funds would continue at the league headquarters until the budget for 1930 was completed.

STUNT KILLS YOUNG FLIER.

Student Falls Out at 500 Feet While Flying Upside Down.

SEATTLE, Jan. 25 (AP).—Frank Campbell, 22 years old, a student flier, fell from his biplane while flying over the outskirts of the city late today and was killed.

Witnesses told the coroner that Campbell apparently was flying upside down at an altitude of 500 feet when he fell out.

Uncontrolled, the plane continued on for about half a mile and crashed near a group of houses. Campbell had forty hours of flying to his credit. Investigators said it was apparent that he had not been using the safety belt.

PLANES AID RESCUES IN ARKANSAS FLOOD

200 Refugees, Many "Spotted" by Fliers, Are Ferried to Safety.

ICE FLOES MELTING FAST

Streams Are Returning to Normal and All Marooned People Are Expected to Be Reached Soon.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 25 (AP).—Carrying on despite a new setback, the crippling of five of the six motor boats of the relief fleet, volunteer rescue crews operating under direction of the American Red Cross tonight had ferried to safety more than 200 farm dwellers from the overflowed lowlands in the big lake area of Northeastern Arkansas.

Ice, sheathing the flood water today, put out of commission five boats engaged in rescue work, but with the one motor-driven craft at their disposal and the smaller boats operating in the flooded section, rescue crews moved more than fifty persons from partly submerged homes to safety. New parts for the damaged boats were ordered rushed to the base of operations at Roseland Ditch, near Blytheville, Ark., by airplane and the full fleet was expected to be in commission tomorrow.

With good weather it was expected that within three days all of the flood-bound farmers would be rescued.

Rescue crews operating today followed directions given by airplanes which scouted the area to "spot" buildings in which refugees had gathered.

Observers who made a survey of the flooded area today in airplanes reported the ice breaking up rapidly. The thaw began yesterday and ice floes which clogged the overflow were melting rapidly.

In other sections of middle reaches of the lower Mississippi Valley, streams which had been swollen to flood stage several days ago as a result of a week's rain were returning to normal.

"Shoot Down Planes," Flood Order.

GREENWOOD, Miss., Jan. 25 (AP).—With the Tallahatchie River flood in the Swan Lake section of the Northwest Mississippi cresting, levee guards today were ordered "to shoot down airplanes" through fear of bombing attempts to release the stored-up waters.

Bud Pepper, a Greenwood aviator, today was warned by a friend on the levee to fly 10,000 feet high if he passed over the Tallahatchie again during the flood. He was told that all that saved his plane yesterday from being fired at with a machine gun was the fact that a friend on the levee recognized it.

600 Indiana Families in Need.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Indiana Farm Bureau announced that it had received reports that 600 families in the flooded rural districts of Knox, Posey and Gibson Counties would need aid in rehabilitating themselves. The bureau will conduct a campaign for funds to aid these families.

The Indianapolis chapter of the Red Cross is also raising funds for relief work. The amount contributed through the chapter was expected to reach $10,000 today.

JADWIN PLAN CHANGE PROPOSED TO HOOVER

Chairman Reid of House Flood Control Committee Opposes Land Destruction.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Revision of the Jadwin plan for the Mississippi River was proposed to President Hoover today by Chairman Reid of the House Flood Control Committee.

The Illinois representative notified the Chief Executive at a conference that the flood control committee would attempt to formulate legislation to bring about engineering changes in the plans which would meet with the approval of the people in the sections dissatisfied with the Jadwin plan.

"The people of the various sections of the valley are dissatisfied and claim they will be in a worse condition from a flood standpoint after the Jadwin plan is in effect than they are at the present time," Mr. Reid said. "They claim that the plan is not only wrong from an engineering standpoint but needlessly destroys many thousands of acres of valuable land."

Mr. Reid said the ruling of the Federal courts that land or flowage rights had to be acquired by the government before proceeding with the flood control project makes either a change in the engineering plans necessary or will require the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars for the purchase of lands.

"The people of Missouri object," he continued, "to the taking of five miles of their property for a floodway to protect Cairo, Ill., and claim that even with the destruction of their land the city of Cairo will not be adequately protected.

"The committee will be glad to hear of any substitute for the Jadwin engineering plan that will not require so much land to be taken in Missouri for a floodway and yet give the city of Cairo adequate protection."

Judgment in Roma Flight Failure.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 25 (AP).—Dr. Leon M. Pisculli of New York has obtained judgment in Superior Court for $25,000 against Captain Cesare Sabelli, also of New York, in his suit growing out of the failure of the plans of Sabelli for a New York-to-Rome flight of the airship Roma. Mr. Sabelli did not defend the action.

troit and work in Canada, he said, and many of these persons did their buying in Canada, importing in the aggregate a large amount of goods without paying duty.

Chairman Smoot of the Finance Committee told the Senate that he favored exemption to the amount of $100, but that he was not in favor of increasing it to $200.

"These exemptions give benefits to persons along the Canadian border that are not shared by people removed from the border, and they should be abandoned," said Senator Walsh, Democrat, of Massachusetts. "It is a species of tariff favoritism. If there are any benefits in the tariff they should be shared by all alike. If there are any burdens they should be borne by all alike."

A motion by Senator Tydings, Democrat, of Maryland, providing "that a resident of the United States shall not take advantage of the exemption herein granted within a period of thirty days from the last exemption claimed," was adopted by 40 to 36.

The Senate passed an amendment fixing a rate of 25 per cent ad valorem on carillons of less than thirty bells. The motion was by Senator Norris, insurgent, of Nebraska. The Finance Committee recommended the present 40 per cent duty, which the House had cut to 20 per cent. By the motion carillons of thirty or more bells shall be admitted free if imported for religious, educational or charitable institutions.

Senator Copeland, Democrat, of New York, supported the 40 per cent rate, insisting that the higher duty was essential for the protection of a maker of carillons at Troy, N. Y.

On motion of Senator Copeland, the Senate amended Paragraph 1812, which provided that works of art, other than rugs and carpets, made after 1700 and prior to 1800 should be admitted free. Mr. Copeland argued that the enactment of this provision would impose a duty on works of art made during the Empire period, and the free-entry provision was made to apply to works of art produced before 1830.

Other changes made were the transfer of typewriter ribbons and typewriter spools from the free to the dutiable list.

Senator Smoot gave notice that on Monday he would ask for the consideration of Paragraph 27, which applies American valuation to a large number of coal-tar products. The provision would raise duties on dyestuff considerably, and it will be sharply fought by coalition members. Mr. Smoot said he would also call up certain items of the rayon schedule that remain to be acted upon.

The Senate has practically completed consideration of the sundry schedule and the free list, and, with but four or five committee provisions still pending, it is expected early next week to begin a review of the bill for individual amendments.

In three instances within the last two years, three members of Congress who received the freedom of the port were accused of bringing in liquor. In each of these cases the member involved had exemption for his baggage on the theory that he was traveling on official business.

One of the men, Representative Edward E. Denison, Republican of Illinois, is now under indictment on a charge setting forth that two pieces of baggage, bearing his name and Washington address, each contained liquor. Another Republican from Illinois, Representative M. Alfred Michaelson, was tried and acquitted in the Federal Court at Jacksonville, Fla., on the charge of importing, possessing and transporting a quantity of Haitian rum.

About a year ago Representative William M. Morgan, Republican, of Ohio, landed at New York from Panama, and a customs agent at the port declared, according to reports at the time, that he saw a bottle of liquor in Mr. Morgan's baggage. Mr. Morgan denied the charge and the treasury later absolved him of any blame. All of the members named have dry records in Congress.

As a result of these and similar incidents the treasury was urged to cease extending freedom of the port to members of Congress or others, but while tightening up customs regulations, it declined to formally abandon the practice. Senator Harrison's amendment is the first proposal of the kind to have been offered in Congress since the present tariff bill has been under consideration. The unanimity with which it was adopted assures its enactment into law, according to officials here.

Would Remit $33,000 on Bok Bells.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Senator Norris, in offering his amendment for a lower duty on carillons, said the University of Chicago desired to buy a foreign carillon of about sixty-five bells, worth $200,000, but under the present law would have to pay a duty of $80,000.

Senator Fletcher, Democrat, of Florida, offered an amendment to remit duties collected on all carillons of more than thirty bells each imported in the last five years, but the proposal was ruled not in order. He said he would propose the amendment again after the Treasury appropriation bill reached the Senate floor. If adopted, it would refund thousands of dollars in duties paid on seven or eight carillons imported by American colleges and churches and by wealthy Americans for donation to various communities and educational institutions.

Heirs of the late Edward Bok of Philadelphia, who donated a carillon for the Singing Tower at Mountain Lake, Fla., would receive about $33,000 under the Fletcher proposal.

An advertisement was inserted in the Household Help Wanted columns of The New York Times for a "nurse to take entire charge of two girls." The advertiser wrote: "We had three long distance calls, seven special delivery letters, and 145 other letters—all from such a high class of people that it has been difficult to make a selection."—Advt.

GOVERNMENT DROPS BOSCH FRAUD SUIT

Mitchell Moves to Dismiss All Charges in Case, Involving Alien Property Sale.

ALL DEFENDANTS ABSOLVED

Three of Four Prosecutors Found No Evidence of Wrong-doing by Palmer, Garvan and Others.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Attorney General Mitchell has directed a dismissal of the government's suit against A. Mitchell Palmer, former alien property custodian; members of his staff, the Boston banking firm of Hornblower & Weeks and the Chase Securities Company of New York on charges of conspiracy to defraud the government of $5,553,546 by representing the assets of the Bosch Magneto Company at less than half their true value.

The Attorney General stated that three of the four special assistants conducting the case had found no evidence of any wrongdoing whatever on the part of Mr. Palmer or other government officials at the time, and that no evidence has shown that any of these officers profited in any way by the sale.

The suit, brought in 1926 by Attorney General Sargent, alleged that the books of the Bosch Magneto Company, seized by the alien property custodian as German property, were inspected by one of the alleged conspirators, who made a fraudulent report as to the assets, and told the true value to Hornblower & Weeks, who with the Chase Securities Company completed the sale of the corporation to Martin E. Kern for $4,150,000, although the property was actually worth $9,685,564.

Defendants in the Suit.

Among those named in the action were Mr. Palmer, Mr. Kern, Francis P. Garvan, Arthur T. Murray, president of the corporation, reorganized as the American Bosch Magneto Company; George A. MacDonald, a director; John A. MacMartin, assistant secretary; J. Harry Covington, counsel for Kern; William G. Fitzpatrick, secretary; Phillips Ketchum, counsel for Hornblower & Weeks; Joseph F. Guffey, former director of sales for the alien property custodian, and the two banking houses. The case is now pending in the United States District Court for Massachusetts.

At the time the suit was brought, Mr. Palmer denounced it as outrageous, and said the sale price was a fair one, obtained from the highest bidder at a public sale.

Mr. Mitchell, in announcing the dismissal, said:

"Under the settlement of war claims act and other legislation relating to property heretofore seized by the alien property custodian, enacted since the bringing of this action, and bcause of the fact that only one of the persons who owned the stock at the time of the seizure has been found to have had the status of an enemy alien, all but four-fifths of 1 per cent of any recovery which could be made in the pending action would be immediately distributed to the persons owning the stock at the time of the seizure.

Government's Interest Slight.

"The only financial interest which the United States has in the case is as to four-fifths of 1 per cent of the recovery, which it would not own absolutely but hold as security under the settlement of war claims act, pending the adjustment of claims of American citizens against the German Government. The financial interest of the United States is now negligible, and if the total amount demanded were recovered, such interest would not exceed $44,000, and might be very much less.

"The evidence in the case has not yet been completed. The annual expense of conducting the case for the plaintiff exceeds the total amount of the interest of the United States in the prospective recovery.

"Recently all of the former owners of the seized stock, who would have benefited by recovery and to whom the amount recovered would have been distributed, made a settlement among themselves covering this controversy and other related matters. The persons for whose benefit, since the passage of the settlement of war claims act, the United States has been conducting this suit have, therefore, no further interest in its prosecution and have requested that the case be dismissed.

"Since the financial interest of the United States does not justify further litigation and the other parties have adjusted their differences, continuance of this expensive litigation is not justified, and the direction for dismissal has resulted.

"The theory on which the suit was based was that those of the defendants who held or had held office under the United States in connection with the alien property work at the time of the sale had colluded with the purchasers and their associates to bring about a sale for an adequate price.

"It is only fair to say that on consideration of all the evidence which the government has been able to adduce, three of the four special assistants to the Attorney General who had charge of this litigation unite in the conclusion that the evidence does not support the claim that any of these public officials were guilty of any wrongdoing. No evidence of any kind has been adduced to show that any of them profited in any way as a result of the sale."

Garvan May Tell "Whole Story."

Francis P. Garvan, president of the American Bosch Magneto Company and a defendant in the government's fraud suit, issued the following statement last night:

"The Germans have run out. The government now asks to dismiss, but perhaps the case is not over yet. Perhaps the people of this country are entitled to know the whole story of this remarkable case and its significance to their welfare.

C. S. STEELE KILLED AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Falls From Hotel Window—Police Suspect Foul Play—Widow Was Visiting Here.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Jan. 25 (AP).—C. S. Steele, said to be a prominent business man with connections in Asheville and Saluda, N. C.; New York and Atlanta, was fatally injured tonight when he fell or was thrown from a second-story window of a local hotel.

Mr. Steele died at a hospital a short time after his body hurtled from the hotel window into the top of an automobile parked in the street below. Witnesses said the body barely missed a woman on the sidewalk.

Police reported they were investigating the possibility of foul play in connection with the man's death. They found, they said, two overcoats and two hats in the hotel room occupied by Mr. Steele. The room key was lying in the middle of the floor.

Steele, a native of Winnsboro, S. C., is survived by his widow and a son, C. S. Steele Jr. of Huntsville, Ala. Mrs. Steele, who was on a visit to relatives in New York and Philadelphia, was informed of her husband's death late tonight.

An inquest will be held tomorrow.

SCHUMANN-HEINK IN RADIO.

Famous Star to Act as Operatic Adviser to National Broadcasting Co.

Ernestine Schumann-Heink, who arrived here yesterday from Chicago, has signed a contract to serve as operatic counsel for the National Broadcasting Company, according to George Engles, vice president of the organization. Mme. Schumann-Heink will personally supervise all operatic productions presented in the future over WEAF and WJZ networks. She will begin her duties as soon as she is ready to do so, in new offices prepared for her at 711 Fifth Avenue, headquarters of the WEAF-WJZ network.

Her new contract is in no way to affect occasional concert and operatic engagements, Mr. Engles says. Mme. Schumann-Heink will serve in the radio operatic field as Walter Damrosch and Reinald Werrenrath now do respectively as musical and vocal counsel.

Higgins & Co. Not in May Radio Suit.

The account of the proceeding by the State Attorney General against J. L. Thompson & Co. growing out of the sale by this firm of certain shares of the May Radio and Television Company stated that Thompson & Co. and W. T. Higgins & Co. had agreed to purchase these shares at $10 a share. As stated elsewhere in the same article Higgins & Co. held an option on these shares which it assigned on certain conditions to Thompson & Co. Higgins & Co. were not defendants in the proceeding brought by the Attorney General.

BARNES EXHORTS SMALL INDUSTRIES

Business Survey Head Makes Plea Over Radio for Them to Join Wider Activity.

TELLS RESULTS ATTAINED

He Also Appeals to Individuals to Help in Stabilization by Making Outlays Now.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—A plea to the nation's smaller industries to cooperate with the great industries and utilities in efforts to maintain the stability of general business during the readjustment period following the stock market slump was made tonight by Julius H. Barnes, of New York, chairman of the National Business Survey Conference, in an address over the National Broadcasting System.

"Larger industries have set the example," he said. "The railroad programs have been advanced and maintained, new equipment ordered, repairs and maintenance expedited.

"The great utilities that generate and distribute power are executing a program of total expenditures that will exceed last year. The great agencies of communication, telephone and telegraph, are advancing their year's plans aggregating more to be spent in equipment and wages than even the unprecedented totals of the high-water year just closed.

"Steel companies are planning expansion and rebuilding and reequipment, investing millions in wages in the confidence that the inevitable growth of American business will require enlarged and improved facilities before they are completed.

"Blueprints and specifications are working nights. It is a time for America's smaller industries to give the same care and study, with the same courageous ventures into repairs, improvements and expansions that they might find justified by their own prudent judgment.

"Developments in these last few weeks warrant a confidence that this great and significant effort for the checking of business recession before it mounts into general unemployment and distress can be successful. It is a time for collective common sense and for the most intelligent voluntary team play."

Mr. Barnes also urged individuals to carry out small repair and reequipment jobs, pointing out that the total volume of such activity would help to "maintain the even flow of business stability while the larger programs are working out their necessary plans."

Summing up the efforts thus far made, Mr. Barnes declared the confidence of President Hoover and business leaders that understanding of the needs of the situation coupled with the maintenance of employment would "measurably shorten any reasonable business recession" had been justified by developments.

Much of the good done, he pointed out, was the result of the team play of business, Congress and the government, citing among the efforts the $7,000,000,000 total of new construction programs pledged for the year, the tax reduction resolution, the speeding up of highway and other public building, the ship construction activity resulting from decision to award new ocean mail contracts, and the new high volumes of bond issues.

Another contribution of business to this cooperation with government in prevention of unemployment, Mr. Barnes said, was the absence of wage cuts.

Among the indicators which Mr. Barnes cited as showing the trend of general business in the last two months were the December increase in savings and the virtual stoppage of the run on insurance companies for policy loans.

Others were the increase in number of stockholders of the big corporations, the large volume of Christmas trade, the increase in theatre attendance, magazine advertising, gasoline consumption and the normal expenditures for Winter travel.

The acceptance of the Young plan, Mr. Barnes also pointed out, assured the further development of the nation's foreign trade.

"It means obligations defined and the resultant relaxation of credit for the stimulation of industry abroad," he said.

Charge purchases made the remainder of January will not be billed until March 1st.

NATIONAL BOARD IS PRAISED

Selection, Not Censorship, Seen as Its Function—Harry Warner Speaks for Producers.

"Selection, not censorship," was stressed as the guiding principle of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures by speakers at its annual luncheon and the closing sessions of its motion picture conference at the Hotel Roosevelt yesterday.

Former Governor Nellie Tayloe Ross of Wyoming said that while good pictures wert to be seen, many demoralizing ones were being shown because the producers took the public's silence about them for approval. She praised the National Board of Review for its work and urged that every one help to crystallize public opinion by patronizing good pictures, freely expressing opinions on the merits of pictures and sending protests on objectionable ones direct to the producers.

John M. Casey, chief licensing officer of Boston, Mass., delivered a message from Mayor James M. Curley, in which the latter praised the board for its work and said:

"As long as you keep your present ideas in regard to the elevation of the screen I am with you 100 per cent and there will be no fear of any censorship board in the city of Boston."

Federal Censorship Opposed.

Representative Franklin Fort of New Jersey, chairman of the Republican National Committee, said it was not likely that the nation would ever adopt censorship of the written or spoken word or pictures. Professor Leroy E. Bowman of the department of sociology of Columbia University read telegrams from Senator Pat Harrison and Senator Bronson Cutting, stressing the dangers of censorship and praising the board's work. Messages from Governor Roosevelt and various other public officials also congratulated the board on its efforts.

The following radiogram from Admiral Byrd, dated Little America, Jan. 24, 1930, was read:

> Much obliged to you for the opportunity to thank the National Board of Review for the films they supplied the expedition. You cannot imagine how we enjoyed those films every Sunday night. I send my best wishes to the National Board of Review, in which all the inhabitants of Little America join.
> RICHARD BYRD.

Harry Warner, president of Warner Brothers, said picture producers were responsible for the investments of thousands of persons, adding:

"We can't handle people's money to please one or two or a dozen that make a lot of noise. We have to use the public as a guide. Any pictures we make that we find against the public sentiment we throw away. We are the only industry in the world asking the public what to make and what not to." He endorsed the board's system of selecting pictures for approval.

Fannie Hurst Gives Views.

Fannie Hurst, the author, said she did not believe the talking picture, with all its mechanical perfection, "seems destined to rise higher in its artistic possibilites than the silent movie." She urged the need for a "new race of authors" with a technique specially fitting them to write for the screen.

Dr. Harry E. Barnard, director of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, and Mayor John T. Alsop of Jacksonville, Fla., also spoke, and Dr. George W. Kirchwey, former warden of Sing Sing prison and the dean of the Columbia University Law School, presided.

Others present included Estelle Taylor, Greta Nisson and Winnie Lightner, Dr. Walter Pettit, Wilson A. Barrett, Dr. Louis I. Harris, former Health Commissioner; Dr. A. A. Brill, George H. Arthur, Dr. Albert T. Shiels, former Municipal Court Judge John R. Davies, Giovanni Martinelli, Dr. William H. Dudley and Captain George W. Cowan.

The morning session adopted a resolution expressing support of the "better films and motion picture study club plan, as interpreted and carried forward by the National Board of Review and its affiliated groups," and "unfaltering opposition to legal censorship, Federal and State."

DILL WOULD CONSCRIPT PROPERTY IN WARTIME

Western Democrat Offers an Amendment to the Constitution in the Senate.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—A proposed amendment to the Constitution that would empower the government in time of war to conscript property without compensation was offered in the Senate today by Senator Dill, Democrat, of Washington. The amendment reads:

"Congress shall have the power in time of war to take private property for public use and for purposes of national defense and to fix the compensation for the same, or to take private property without compensation by declaring the same to be necessary for the purposes of national defense."

In recent debate on this subject in the Senate Mr. Dill emphasized that private property could not be taken in time of war without compensation, as has been urged by certain patriotic organizations. He declared that it would require a constitutional amendment before legislation could be enacted in accordance with the recommendations of such organizations.

BILL AIMS AT LISTING NEWSPAPER CREDITORS

Senator Phipps Would Clarify Law Which Requires Publication of Owners' Names.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Clarification of the law requiring publication of the names of owners of newspapers is sought in the Phipps bill, reported to the Senate today by the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads.

Senator Phipps of Colorado, chairman of the committee and author of the bill, explained that the present law requires a certification of ownership of publications, including the names and addresses of the editors, publisher, business manager, owners, stockholders, known bondholders and other security holders.

In actual practice, Mr. Phipps said, the statute had been found to be defective, and his bill, he said, was believed to be necessary to carry out the intent of Congress. The Phipps bill adds this language to the law: "and such additional information concerning the interest, direct or indirect, of any person in such publication, or its stock, bonds or other securities, as the Postmaster General by regulation shall require such information to disclose ownership of such publication."

Mr. Phipps explained that, while postal officials now attempt to ascertain the real ownership of newspapers in cases where the security holders appear upon the books as trustees or in some fiduciary relationship, information is not required by law, and consequently it is seldom obtainable.

Admits Setting Fires to See Engines

Samuel Brill, 16 years old, of 1,328 Nelson Avenue, the Bronx, a star pupil in high school, confessed to the police that he had set three fires in the building where he lives and in near-by buildings, it was said at his arraignment in Morrisania Court yesterday morning. According to the police, the boy told them he had started the fires "just to see the engines roll." Magistrate Earl Smith held the boy without bail for examination Monday.

the facilitating of the bailing of prisoners.

The press release also stated that the presentment, on the recommendation of the Federal District Attorney, was to be forwarded to the Wickersham committee at Washington.

> These are serious charges. If you are in possession of any sworn testimony, either in the form of a presentment or otherwise, to substantiate the accusations, the place for action is the Police Commissioner's office. It would also seem to me that a duty devolves upon you to take such course.
> I am making a formal request upon you for the immediate delivery to the Police Commissioner of whatever evidence you may possess to substantiate these charges.
> Very truly yours,
> GROVER A. WHALEN.

May Get List of Witnesses.

The letter was delivered to Assistant United States Attorney Laurence J. Rittenband, secretary to Mr. Tuttle, at 2:30 P. M. At that hour the United States Attorney was on a train bound here from Albany. Mr. Rittenband said he would try to get in touch with Mr. Tuttle en route or upon his arrival.

Mr. Tuttle, who had argued a case at Albany, got the commissioner's letter when he left the train at West 125th Street. He telephoned to Commissioner Whalen and said that, although the names of the policemen were in the grand jury minutes, he could not disclose them. He promised to confer tomorrow with Judge Bondy and several of his own staff.

It was reported that Mr. Tuttle would furnish to the commissioner a list of the eighty-two witnesses examined in the grand jury's two weeks of investigation.

Then Mr. Whalen could summon the witnesses and elicit from them their charges against policemen. The complaint, made in a presentment handed to Federal Judge William Bondy on Friday, was that runners for bondsmen paid $5 to desk lieutenants and $1 or $2 to turnkeys in the police stations to reach prisoners desiring bonds. Some bondsmen, the presentment charged, are permitted to sleep in station houses so that they would lose no opportunities in the way of bail business.

District Attorney Crain was greatly interested in the grand jury's statement that similar petty graft or "tribute" was exacted by court attendants. He said that he would seek to obtain from Mr. Tuttle the material assembled by the grand jury and would ask for a conference with the United States Attorney later in the week.

Fixes Sessions for Grand Jury.

The District Attorney said that he had asked Magistrate McAdoo to appear before the grand jury at 11 A. M. Hearings in the magistrates' inquiry, said Mr. Crain, would be held each week on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. He said that after hearing Mr. McAdoo the additional grand jury, of which Joseph P. Day is foreman, would take up routine matters.

When this is cleared away the grand jury will devote itself exclusively to the investigation of the lower courts. On Feb. 3 two other grand juries will be sworn in and these can take care of the ordinary business of the District Attorney's office, said Mr. Crain.

Mr. Crain announced that he had written to lawyers' associations and to civic organizations seeking their cooperation in his investigation. Letters were sent to Richard S. Childs, president of the City Club; Mrs. H. Edward Drier, president of the Women's City Club; Charles C. Burlingham, president of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York; and William Nelson Cromwell, president of the New York County Lawyer's Association. Mr. Crain would not venture a prediction on how long his investigation would tak.

WHALEN DEMOTES HUBER

Detective Beaten by Thief With Toy Pistol Put on Patrol Duty.

Third Grade Detective Charles M. Huber of the West Forty-seventh Street station was demoted and ordered back to patrol duty in Bayside, Queens, by Commissioner Whalen yesterday. Huber was beaten insensible by a bandit who entered the Thom McAn store at 837 Eighth Avenue, which he was guarding, on Thursday.

The bandit escaped while the detective was unconscious, taking the latter's service revolver with him and leaving behind his own weapon, which proved to be a toy pistol.

To Executives:

THE term "modern," as applied to all new buildings, is largely a misnomer. A building is not truly modern if scientific ventilation, an essential sanitary and hygienic need, is ignored. Most new buildings lack healthful ventilation, and are, therefore, not modern.

At some not distant time the public health authorities may be expected to enforce this health essential. How much more sensible, and economical, to consider the matter for proposed buildings while structural conditions can be changed on paper.

Monumental new office buildings are ventilated throughout by the Gerdes Method with vital unheated fresh air. Several are owned and occupied by life insurance companies, which fact is significant, as it indicates forethought and careful planning. These truly modern buildings are available for consideration.

Atmospheric Results Guaranteed. Installations made anywhere. Booklet and references on request.

WASH!

SIZES 7 to 14

LITTLE girls can wash these frocks—big laundries can wash them—and they won't blanch or turn pale. Do we hear you pooh-pooh this idea? It's a fact, for they are pure spun silk guaranteed to wash. And very nice things to have around the house, since their reds and greens and blues will never grow dull and gloomy. Another thing—there is no weighting or leading of any kind in them—which means that their crispness will not wilt at the touch of water. For little girls age 2 to 6 and bigger girls 7 to 14.

SEES PROBLEM HERE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Dr. Burns, British Economist, Predicts It Will Become Like That in England.

BLAMES INDUSTRIAL RISE

Surplus for Export Growing Too Large, He Tells Immigration Policy Conference.

With the continued expansion of American industry creating a surplus of products for export trade, this country is facing an unemployment problem similar to that now existing in England, Dr. Arthur R. Burns, formerly of Kings College, London, and now Professor of Economics at Barnard College, said yesterday at a luncheon of the Conference on Immigration Policy at the Hotel Manger.

Dr. Burns was the principal speaker at the second of a series of luncheons sponsored by the conference to discuss population pressure throughout the world. He attributed the population pressure in Great Britain resulting from unemployment to the fact that other countries, which offered export markets to England, had now reached an industrial development making them no longer dependent upon Great Britain for textiles and other products. He estimated the total unemployment in England at 1,800,000, saying there were 1,300,000 out of work who were insured under the dole system and about 500,000 who were not insured. Of those insured in the coal industry, he said, 14.3 per cent were without jobs; in the steel works, 22.9 per cent; in ship building, 23.6 per cent; textile trades, 15 per cent, and building trades, 24.5 per cent.

Overproduction of Autos Seen.

He mentioned the automobile industry as an example of overproduction. When European manufacturers are able to produce enough cars to supply the demand there, he declared, this country will no longer have that market.

Dr. Burns thought the reason for surplus stocks often lay in an excess of energy and a lack of vision by manufacturers. He said it might be well for this country to discourage its fast industrial growth if unlimited expansion indicated a long period of depression similar to the present situation in England.

He foresaw a declining population in England during the next twenty years, due to the lower birth rate, and declared that by 1950 there would be no increase in population. He thought this population decrease might diminish England's industrial depression.

The attitude of all political parties in England, Dr. Burns said, was about the same on migration, with the Labor party "cooler" because it felt that migration was only temporary relief from unemployment, and its desire was to improve conditions for a more permanent industrial structure. He said the reason why the number of British immigrants to Canada was not larger was that Canada offered no assistance except to land settlers and domestic servants, whereas the unemployed were to be found mainly among industrial workers. The most promising outlook for relieving the unemployment situation in Great Britain, he said, was in the United States.

Gives Conservative Viewpoint.

R. Halford Forster, British actor and lecturer, speaking from the viewpoint of the British conservative, admitted there was "a great population pressure" in England as a result of unemployment, and a more "subtle" pressure from those who could work only part time and earn only half their usual wages. Mr. Forster's plea was for a re-birth of the "spirit of adventure" which would result in greater migration. He said the World War had deprived England of its adventurous youth and that the next generation was only now reaching the age at which that spirit asserted itself. With this at hand, he thought, and with an increase in the immigration quota for Great Britain, the unemployment situation would soon improve.

Harold Fields, chairman of the conference, presided. Other speakers included G. I. Burch, executive secretary of the Population Reference Bureau and a member of the conference board, and Victor Ridder, publisher of The Journal of Commerce.

HAILS HARRIMAN DRY STAND

J. C. Thomas Backs Refusal to Sit as Juror in Liquor Case.

John Harriman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, who told Federal Judge William Bondy in court on Friday that he would under no circumstances convict a prohibition law defendant, was supported yesterday in opposing "persecution on the part of Federal prosecutors" by James C. Thomas, said to be the wealthiest negro attorney in New York. Mr. Thomas was an Assistant United States Attorney under Emory R. Buckner and was attorney for a negro defendant on whose jury young Harriman was not permitted to sit because of his attitude.

During his examination for jury duty on Friday Mr. Harriman told Judge Bondy he would not vote for conviction in a liquor case no matter how convincing the evidence might be. He had previously said that he did not consider himself suited to serve in any prohibition case because he believed in Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler's "principle of nullification."

Mr. Thomas said he told Mr. Harriman in a letter "that, in my opinion, he had as much right to oppose prohibition law enforcement as any one has to oppose capital punishment. I said the fact that he could not sit as a juror in a prohibition case, did not indicate his unfitness as a juror in any other kind of case."

A motion to strike Mr. Harriman's name from the Federal jury list is pending.

GIVES UP IN JERSEY KILLING.

Sarrap, Sought by Police on His Son's Story, Surrenders.

Nicholas Sarrap, 38 years old, of 485 Palisade Avenue, Jersey City, who ws sought by the police in connection with the fatal shooting yesterday of George Polovina, 24 years old, of Fairfield, N. J., surrendered himself to Jersey City police last night.

According to the story told by Michael Sarrap, his 18 year old son, the shooting was the culmination of a quarrel between Polovina and Mrs. Anna Vuyosevich, 20, of East Rutherford, who had been living with Polovina. Mrs. Vuyosevich is Sarrap's daughter. Young Sarrap said a quarrel yesterday morning ended when Polovina ordered the woman out of his house. She telephoned her father, who hurried to Fairfield and tried to get Polovina to reconsider. Polovina refused. The youth said his father then pulled out a pistol and shot Polovina, who died an hour later.

Young Sarrap said he and his father drove back to Jersey City, where the father left him.

ASKS FUNDS TO END ALIEN SMUGGLING

Johnson, in the House, Says "Surreptitious Influx" Adds to Unemployment.

ANNUAL REGISTRY SOUGHT

Cable Bill Aims to Keep Check on Foreigners—Quotas for Mexico and Canada Opposed.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Stopping the illegal influx of aliens as a means of relieving unemployment was demanded in the House today following the introduction of a bill proposing enforcement of the immigration laws through compulsory registration annually of all aliens.

The attention of the House was directed again to the immigration problem by Representative Johnson, chairman of the Immigration Committee, who said Congress had not appropriated enough money for the Immigration Bureau to enable it to stem the surreptitious entry of aliens. The four-department supply bill now being considered would provide $9,000,000 for the Immigration Service, an increase of $885,000 over last year.

Mr. Johnson quoted Commissioner Hull of the bureau as saying it was "humanly impossible for the bureau to do the work Congress expects it to do with the money provided."

The registration proposal was advanced by Representative Cable, Republican, of Ohio, a member of the Immigration Committee. In a formal statement he said it would enable the government "more easily to ascertain the names and addresses of illegal aliens and proceed with their deportation."

Mr. Cable estimated that more than a million aliens had entered the United States illegally, many of whom were described as seamen deserting from foreign vessels.

Quota Proposal Opposed.

A statement in opposition to the proposal in the Johnson and Box bills to place immigration from Canada and Mexico on a quota basis was issued by Representative Treadway, Republican, of Massachusetts. He said:

"The unrestricted flow of labor across the Canadian border, whether in the vicinity of New England or further West, is a distinct benefit to us and to our neighbors in Canada."

The Immigrant Committee has begun hearings on these two measures, both of which, although proposing different methods, would result in limiting immigration of aliens from all countries of the Western Hemisphere to about 50,000 annually.

Mr. Cable's measure also would simplify the naturalization process by making any alien eligible to citizenship who had met the requirements of the bill for five consecutive years, without any previous declaration of intention. Any alien who failed to register annually or otherwise did not comply with the requirements of the bill would not be eligible for citizenship until after conforming with the regulations for an additional three years.

"There are hard times in this country, tremendously hard times," shouted Chairman Johnson as he offered for the Record clippings from Pacific Coast newspapers, which said that illegal entry of aliens was flooding the labor market.

The Immigration Committee next week will resume testimony on the Johnson and Box measures.

DONATES $210,000 TO CANCER RESEARCH

Unnamed Philanthropist Adds to Fund of U. of P. School of Medicine.

GIFT WILL EXPAND WORK

It Is the Largest Single Contribution Made to the Fund, Started by I. du Pont in 1928.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—Announcement that the cancer research fund of the Graduate School of Medicine of the University of Pennsylvania has received an increase of $210,000 from a philanthropist who wishes to remain unknown was made today by Dr. Josiah H. Penniman, Provost of the university.

The gift is the largest single contribution to the fund, established in 1928 through a gift made by Irenee du Pont, and allows a reorganization of the work on a wider and more comprehensive basis and additions to the research staff, according to the Provost.

Progress in cancer research work depends upon the association of the physician, the biologist, and the chemist and upon the close cooperation of related clinics and laboratories, Dr. Penniman stated.

"Today, as the result of the generous suport which has just been given to us by a philanthropist from whom the cancer research fund will receive $70,000 annually over a period of three years, we have been placed in a position to carry on the work along these broad cooperative lines to an extent which heretofore was impossible.

"Plans are being developed for the equipment of a new clinic for modern diagnosis and treatment of tumors in the American Oncologic Hospital and Dr. George M. Dorrance, Professor of Maxillo-facial surgery in the School of Dentistry of the university, has been appointed chief of the clinic.

"Dr. Dorrance is assembling a group of specialists of the highest type to serve on the clinic staff, and the American Oncologic Hospital will be developed gradually into an anti-cancer centre of the most complete character.

"Central laboratories of the cancer research fund have been established at 133 South Thirty-sixth Street, and here a complete tissue culture department is under the direction of Dr. Clarence E. McClung, Professor of Zoology at the University of Pennsylvania, and Professor David H. Tennent, of the Department of Zoology of Bryn Mawr College.

"Professor J. P. M. Vogelaar, of the University of Leiden, Holland, and Dr. Raymond C. Parker, the latter of whom recently was connected with the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute of Biology in Berlin, also have been added to the staff of the tissue culture department, and eight other research workers will be maintained in this department."

CURTIS, 70 YEARS OLD, CHEERED BY SENATORS

Democrats and Republicans Join in Eulogies to Vice President on His Birthday.

By The Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Charles Curtis, once a boy on an Indian reservation and now Vice President of the United States, today celebrated his seventieth birthday with his ancient political foes, the Democrats, joining Republicans in tributes, congratulations and best wishes.

As the Senate convened, Senator Copeland, Democrat, New York, gained the floor and said that it was his opinion as a doctor that the Vice President would have many more years in which to serve his country.

Mr. Curtis, who served twenty years in the Senate from Kansas, smiled at this and replied, "Thank you."

It was the beginning of a deluge of plaudits. Senator Ashurst, Democrat, Arizona, rose to praise the Vice President. He was followed by Senator Moses, Republican, New Hampshire. Then Senator Blease, Democrat, South Carolina, asserted:

"I sincerely hope you will be President of the United States of America."

The Senate was not yet through. Senator Heflin, Democrat, Alabama, described the career of the Vice President as "inspiring," and added that "the youth of this country will be inspired by reading the story of this remarkable man."

Senator Watson of Indiana, the Republican leader, said Mr. Curtis had been a "tower of strength in every conflict in which the party was involved and when the fundamentals of the government were at stake."

"He is a veritable Gibraltar," he added.

Vice President Curtis began smiling as Senator Copeland rose and he was still smiling as a lull gave him an opportunity for replying.

"I love each and every one of you," he answered with feeling. "I assure each and every one of you my best wishes for all these kindnesses."

Then the smile vanished and the gavel rapped sharply. Brisk and business-like, he turned to Senator Copeland, the first speaker, and asked him if he would yield for consideration of tariff debate on the duty on carillons, and the Senate was back at its long task once more.

Shopping for Men with Betty Bruce

This and That About Fashions for Men

WOMEN KNOW how important clothes are—how vital it is to create a favorable first impression with the right clothes—Men are sometimes lax. They'll wear a dinner jacket or a tail coat of before-the-war vintage with the utmost serenity. It's up to you women to jog your men folk out of the rut. Tell them that when you're all dressed up in your best bib and tucker, you want to be escorted to the party by a man who's correctly and smartly garbed.

So that I might give you some authentic fashion hints I interviewed the stylists at the John David Fifth Avenue Shop at 43d Street. The following notes were not made up by a "mere woman"—they were given me by men who know what's what in men's wear.

IN THE PAST, it was usually the middle-aged and the conservative business men who wore tail coats at formal functions—although good form has always dictated that the dinner jacket is proper only at informal and stag affairs. Now the younger set seems to be "going formal." I rather imagine that our trailing evening frocks and long wrinkled gloves have had something to do with this change. At any rate—many young men about town are sporting the tail coat. Young men are buying a smart and exclusive model developed especially for them by John David ($85).

WITH THE TAIL COAT, THE WHITE WAISTCOAT IS WORN. The John David London Stylist reports that at the exclusive Embassy Club he noticed a goodly number of vests, shirts, and ties made of honeycomb pique. A copy of an English model is offered by John David at $10. It has no back—yet it fits and sets perfectly. This backless feature affords great comfort. Of particular interest to the man who dances. This waistcoat is also worn with the dinner jacket, although some men prefer the more conservative black vest.

FOR INFORMAL DINNER AND THEATRE PARTIES, club, country, and home wear the dinner jacket is correct. John David "Nonchalant" dinner clothes are extremely well liked. There is a smartly conservative model, as well as a spruce, broad shouldered model so much in demand by the younger set ($50). Men going South choose this double breasted type in black tropical worsted—a very light weight, porous material ($55). They say it's the first time they've seen such light cloth so well tailored. The double breasted style makes the wearing of a waistcoat unnecessary and adds so much to a man's comfort on warm evenings.

AND SPEAKING OF GOING SOUTH reminds me that I have some very unusual news for you—men are going to wear colored linen suits—soft greens—a light shade for the trousers and a darker one for the jacket—brown jackets with canary colored trousers. Of course, they won't appeal to every type--but they're smart as the dickens! Tho for most men John David suggests a knowingly tailored white linen suit. Double breasted ($35), or single breasted ($25).

WHEN THAT MAN OF YOURS SEES THE STUNNING SOUTHERN WEAR displayed at the John David Shops, he'll want to buy one of the distinctive, natural colored, crinkly silk suits ($75)—or perhaps the golf knickers in green, blue, bisque or canary colored flannel ($10) will strike his fancy.

Suggesting a visit to John David might be the diplomatic way to get a trip South this Winter—for no man could possibly resist the desire to wear these smart things. Tell him how swanky you think he would look in them at Palm Beach or Miami. I bet a cookie he goes from John David to the ticket office!

You know how much you enjoy having charge accounts at the shops you deal with—how convenient they are and how much time they save! Why not tell your husband to arrange for a charge account at John David?

HE KNOWS THAT THE MERCHANDISE IS EXCLUSIVE but not expensive, and you like the helpful, courteous sales force and the comfortable elegance of the shops—so it would be sensible to take advantage of the added service of a charge account.

Arrange for one by calling the credit manager at BOGardus 5100—or write to him at Broadway and 32d Street. With it you may charge purchases at any of the twelve John David Shops in Greater New York.

ARMY FLIERS SPLIT IN NORTH DAKOTA

Six of the Arctic Patrol Go On to Bismarck, Leaving Nine With Chief at Beach.

FLIGHT MADE IN ZERO COLD

Pilot of Plane That "Washed Out" in Landing Will Be Taken by Train to Hospital.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 25 (AP).—Still at grips with Winter the army's arctic patrol, testing midwinter flying conditions, found itself divided in North Dakota tonight, with six planes resting near here and nine others at Beach, in the extreme western part of the State.

Forced down on the edge of the North Dakota Bad Lands yesterday by a blizzard, six of the fliers resumed their journey this afternoon from Beach, leaving nine others, including Major Ralph Royce, the flight commander, to follow tomorrow. One plane was "washed out" in landing at Beach and will be abandoned.

Members of the patrol which arrived here today are Lieutenants A. R. Crawford, N. D. Sillin, R. C. Ruudy, Paul B. Wurtsmith, E. H. Underhill and A. A. Straubel.

Lieutenant E. K. Warburton, pilot of the plane which was wrecked, will come here by train. He will be treated at the army hospital here for head injuries. Major Royce said indications were that Warburton's plane had spun into the ground from a low altitude.

Comparatively mild temperatures of 5 degrees above zero greeted the vanguard of six as they arrived today. But further east the mercury was in sub-zero depths. At Fargo, where the squadron was due yesterday, it was 17 below, the same brand of weather which held the fliers to earth at Minot for several days on the westward dash.

Major Royce announced at Beach that he would make no further schedule for the flight until he reached Bismarck. Accounting for the ships which started with him from Selfridge Field, Major Royce listed six planes at Fort Lincoln, nine and one wreck at Beach, one observation plane at Minneapolis, one transport en route from Wausau, Wis.; one transport and one pursuit plane at Great Falls, Mont., and one pursuit plane at McHose Ranch, fifty miles east of Great Falls.

AID FAMILIES IN SLAYINGS.

Fight Fans and Women Swell Fund in Belleville Hold-Up Murders.

Contributions of $515.98 brought the Newark Star-Eagle fund for the relief of the families of Paul Bohrer and Edward W. Maurer, victims of a hold-up man in Belleville, N. J., to $2,918.23 yesterday. This is exclusive of $1,000 given by the members of the retiring Essex County grand jury, to be administered by a committee of that body, and of the proceeds of two benefit performances to be given today at the Capitol Theatre in Belleville.

Among the contributions were a purse of $82.58 collected by fight fans at the Empire Theatre Athletic Club in Newark, and another of $32.05 given by women attending the Star-Eagle Free Cooking School. The town employes of Belleville collected $109, and the Belleville Patrolmen's Benevolent, $100. The Kresge department store in Newark gave $50.

REPORTS BUILDINGS BILL.

Senate Committee Endorses Measure Already Passed by House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The House bill increasing the public buildings program by $230,000,000 was ordered favorably reported to the Senate today by its Public Buildings Committee.

The additional appropriation is to be divided equally between the District of Columbia and the nation at large.

The authorization would bring the total public buildings program for the District to $190,000,000 and for the country at large to $363,000,000. The measure is part of the expansion policy advocated by President Hoover.

COLONEL ACHESON DROPS DEAD IN CLUB

Chief Engineer of Public Works Department Is Stricken at Albany.

HAD NOTABLE WAR CAREER

Was in Panama Canal Service—A Native of Cohoes, He Lived Lately in Syracuse.

ALBANY, Jan. 25 (AP).—Colonel William M. Acheson, chief engineer of the State Department of Public Works, dropped dead tonight at the Fort Orange Club here.

Colonel Acheson had attended a meeting of the Fathers' Association of Albany Academy, after which he walked up Capitol Hill, laughing and joking with two friends, to the Fort Orange Club.

He approached the cigar stand, called for a cigar and then collasped. Dr. Andrew Macfarlane and Dr. Clinton B. Hawn, who were in the club, said death was probably instantaneous.

Governor Roosevelt, Colonel Greene, Superintendent of Public Works, and other officials were at a dinner in the Executive Mansion when word of Colonel Acheson's death came by telephone. All were greatly shocked.

Colonel Greene said he learned that death was due to hemorrhage of the brain.

After talking with Mrs. Acheson, Colonel Greene said that funeral services probably would take place here Tuesday and that burial would be in Arlington National Cemetery.

William McCarthy Acheson had a notable career as an engineer for New York State, an educator, and an officer of the Army Corps of Engineers during the World War.

Mr. Acheson was born in Cohoes, N. Y., July 16, 1878. He received his preparatory school education in Troy. From 1895 to 1898 he studied at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

He started his career as a public official in the water works department of Troy. He was engaged as an engineer in the Isthmian Canal Service at Panama from 1904 to 1910.

Starting as a supervising engineer with the New York State Highway Department, he later became divisional engineer at Buffalo. From 1915 to 1916 he was in the Syracuse division of the department.

From 1916 to 1917 he was associated with the Crescent Portland Cement Company.

After the United States entered the World War he became a member of the Corps of Engineers, serving first as a Captain and then being promoted to Major.

He was assigned the post of Chief of Roads and Railroads and was made Chief of Road Service in 1918. He was cited by General Pershing and by Major Gen. Langfitt, Chief of Engineers.

After his discharge from the army, Mr. Acheson became connected with the New York State Department of Public Works as divisional engineer in the Bureau of Highways and the Bureau of Canals, and had been chief engineer of the department since 1927.

He was a member of the American Concrete Institute, in which body he was chairman of the committee on highway specifications. He also was a member of the National Research Council, the New York Railroad and Technology Club, the Izaak Walton League and of Beta Theta Pi.

He was married on April 25, 1908, to Inger Thira Miller of Lansingburg, N. Y. They had a son, Thomas Temple, and a daughter, Margaret Miller. His home was in Syracuse until he moved to Albany on becoming chief engineer.

REPORTS ILEANA IS TO WED.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Jan. 25.—The newspaper Cuventul publishes a story that cannot be confirmed of the impending engagement of Princess Ileana to Count Alexander of Hochburg, second son of the head of the German House of Pless.

The Cuventul says that the Count first met the Princess in Paris two years ago. Last Summer the pair again met at Munich and again at Sigmaringen. Recently the Count arrived in Bucharest, where he is pressing the match with the Rumanian royal family, who at the same time are in communication by courier with the Pless family.

Many others, including the consular representatives of many nations attended the reception and celebration.

YALE STUDENTS 'RUSH' ACTRESS IN A STORE

Antique Dealer's Plan to Keep Students in New Haven Necessitates Call for Police.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 25.—Clifford Whitlock, who conducts an antique and music store near the Yale campus, noted the protests of President Angell and Dean Mendell that too many week-end trips to New York were interfering with Yale life and decided that a counter-attraction would keep the students in New Haven. He advertised in The Yale Daily News that Ruth Etting, singer in the "9:15 Revue," which is playing here, would sing popular songs in his store today and would autograph phonograph records sold afterward.

The advertisement checked the noon exodus to some extent. The Whitlock store was crowded before the program began and an overflow reached into the street.

Miss Etting had given only her opening number when Yale began "crashing the gate." The applause greeting her second selection was deafening. Students pressed the store with all the vigor of a sophomore-freshman rush. Other students, gaining the second story of the building, slid down the banisters and jammed toward Miss Etting.

Chairs were wrecked and the piano, beside which the actress stood, was torn from its moorings and swept into a corner. Antiques were tossed helter-skelter, and Mr. Whitlock sent a hurry call for Eddie Moriarity, "Mayor" of the district, and his emergency police squad.

Moriarity's forces counter-rushed from the rear, rescued Miss Etting and repulsed the student mob, but not before the store had been nearly wrecked.

Mr. Whitlock said tonight that, although the piano was hopelessly "scrambled," no antiques were missing, although several he had plucked from the débris were in "poor condition." Several autographs obtained from Miss Etting before the riot started were sold as souveneirs.

Guggenheim Clinic Gets Property.

The Murry and Leonie Guggenheim Foundation got permission yesterday from Supreme Court Justice Levy to transfer to the recently organized Murry and Leonie Guggenheim Dental Clinic the property at 422 to 428 East Seventy-second Street and 425 to 427 East Seventy-first Street, valued at $432,250, and now carrying mortgages for $36,000. The petition declared that it recently arranged to establish dental clinics and schools of oral hygiene and preventive dentistry, but it was considered that the purposes of the foundation were too broad for this project, so the new dental clinic organization was formed.

125 POLICE ROUT REDS IN CITY HALL RALLY

the group and patrolmen, using their hands and prodding with their nightsticks, began to shove the Communists out of the park.

The group gave ground reluctantly and its members began to assemble in little knots, only to be dispersed by the mounted men. In less than five minutes the space in front of City Hall was cleared and the Communists began to reassemble, some of them near Broadway and Chambers Street and others near the Municipal Building. By this time hundreds of homeward bound workers had been swept along by the group and were being freely pummeled by the police, who were unable to distinguish between Communists and spectators. In front of the Hall of Records on Chambers Street a number of such bystanders were beaten. It was nearly half an hour before the streets around City Hall were cleared.

Brooklyn Business Man Struck.

Among those caught in the running battle was Herman A. Tillman, business man, of 98 Nevins Street, Brooklyn. Accompanied by his brother Alfred, and a friend, William Berg, he was driving to Brooklyn and stopped to watch the demonstration. A mounted officer mistook him for a Communist and rode him down, striking him over the head and shoulders with his nightstick. Tillman ran into a restaurant at 28 Park Place, pursued by the policeman. He finally gained shelter on the stairway of the elevated station.

Hickman Powell, a reporter for The New York World, was also the victim of a police club, being struck in the abdomen as he watched the rioting in City Hall Park. At the subway entrance in the colonnade of the Municipal Building Communists and bystanders alike were pursued down the stairs by police and struck with clubs and blackjacks, according to eyewitnesses. At the height of the rioting at Chambers Street and Broadway an unidentified elderly man fell in an epileptic fit and was taken away in a taxicab by friends.

Three girls and two men were arrested. As in the case of previous demonstrations the handful of women in the Communist group showered the police with epithets such as "murderers" and "Cossacks." The girls described themselves as Roselle Schek, 15 years old, of 8,798 Twenty-first Avenue, Brooklyn; Lillian Schek, 17, of the same address; and Minnie Sigel, 16, of 210 East 166th Street, the Bronx. The men gave their names as Abraham Boskof, 42, of 1,800 Bronx Park East, the Bronx, and Herbert Marsh, 19, of 653 Stone Avenue, Brooklyn.

Roselle Schek was sent to the Children's Society, charged with juvenile delinquency. She will be arraigned in Children's Court. The four others were discharged in Night Court by Magistrate Jean Norris. Patrolmen Walsh, Savarino and Brennan appeared against them, but offered no specific evidence except in the case of Boskoe, who, Walsh said, had seized Patrolman Brennan. Boskoe said he had only tried to restrain the patrolman from striking a woman. Magistrate Norris ruled there was insufficient evidence to support the charge of disorderly conduct. The defendants here represented by Jacques Bultenkant.

Daily Worker Editor Hurt.

The roster of injured Communists included Robert Minor, editor of The Daily Worker. It was said last night that he was at a private hospital possibly with concussion of the brain. At the offices of Joseph R. Brodsky, counsel for the International Labor Defense, at 799 Broadway, five more members of the group were treated by Dr. Samuel Minowitz of 662 East Seventh Street, Brooklyn, who happened to be passing City Hall Park when the disturbance began.

They were Harry Stevens, lacerations and bruises on legs and shoulders; Benjamin Intrator, lacerated scalp; Nick Barada, cuts and bruises about the head and face; Samuel Muldofsky, who may have concussion of the brain, and Leo Blum, injury to left eye.

Deputy Chief Inspector David J. McAuliffe, who was in charge of the police detail, declared that the attempted demonstration caused more annoyance than any previous Communist gathering. His check-up after quiet was restored disclosed that four patrolmen had suffered minor injuries. Patrolman Theodore von Eschen of the West Thirtieth Street Station exhibited a slashed right palm. The wound was inflicted through a heavy leather glove. The other patrolmen suffered from bruises about the face and body.

Three patrolmen were on duty at City Hall last night. It was said unofficially that they had instructions to guard against Communist reprisals growing out of the disturbance earlier in the day, and would be relieved by another trio when their tour of duty was ended.

Captain William H. Ward and a detail of fifteen patrolmen were posted near Communist headquarters when the body of Katovis was carried to a meeting hall on the fourth floor of the building at 26-28 Union Square, to lie in state.

There was no demonstration when the body of Katovis arrived at Communist headquarters, nor did the 600 men and women who gathered to listen to speeches denouncing "Whalen's Cossacks" and "the Tammany police" cause the police any trouble. The Communist leaders announced that a guard of honor would be with the body until the funeral on Tuesday. Ten patrolmen were on duty at Communist headquarters all night, and Captain Ward said they would be stationed there until after the funeral.

Several speakers, addressing a gathering of 200 Communists, denounced the "police brutality" at the City Hall demonstration and urged party members to turn out in numbers at the funeral on Tuesday. The police made no effort to interfere with the night meeting, but kept the crowds in front of the building moving.

Shortly after 10 o'clock about 100 Communists who had heard the speeches filed out of their headquarters and marched for a block and a half to the Irving Plaza, at Irving Place and Fifteenth Street. There, on an upper floor, members of the Socialist party were at a dinner. The Communists marched past the hall singing the International. They were kept moving by the police, and when a reserve force of seventeen men, which had been waiting in Union Square, arrived, the marchers returned to their headquarters without disturbance.

The Socialist dinner, attended by 700, was given in honor of Rafael Abramovitch, exiled leader of the Russian Socialist Democrats and a noted opponent of Bolshevism, by the Jewish Socialist Federation, The Jewish Daily Forward and Socialist trade union organizations. The speeches were not interrupted and most of those who attended were not aware of the demonstration until later.

Charge purchases made the remainder of Jan. will not be billed until March 1st

CARLES WINS FIRST PRIZE FOR PAINTING

His Picture, "Still Life," Called Best in Pennsylvania Academy's Show.

571 PAINTINGS COMPETE

Leon Kroll and Abram Poole of New York Take Two of Prizes—All Trends of Art Represented.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—The largest and most inclusive exhibition in the long history of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts opened tonight with a private view. Virtually every trend of art is represented among the 571 paintings which, with 139 exhibits of sculpture, are seen in the 125th annual show, in which 490 artists competed for prizes.

As a special feature of the plastic section two rooms have been set aside for a memorial exhibition of Charles Grafly's works, for which many busts and smaller figures as well as sketches and models of the sculptor's monumental pieces have been gathered from both his Boston and Philadelphia studios.

"We believe that this is the most educational show ever held by the academy," said Hugh H. Breckenridge, chairman of the jury of selection. "It represents every educational and esthetic idea in painting. We have tried to include all forms, from the most conservative to the most radical."

The Awards.

Previous to the opening the awards were announced as follows:

TEMPLE GOLD MEDAL for the best picture in the exhibition, to Arthur B. Carles of Philadelphia for his "Still Life."

JENNIE SESNAN GOLD MEDAL for the best landscape in the exhibition, to S. Walter Norris of Philadelphia for "Arowwark."

BECK GOLD MEDAL for the best portrait, to Leon Kroll of New York for "Joie."

WALTER LIPPINCOTT PRIZE for the best figure painting, to Abram Poole of New York for "Miss Greta Kemble Cooper."

MARY SMITH PRIZE for the best painting by a Philadelphia woman artist, to Grace Gemberling for "Rocks and Flowers."

GEORGE D. WIDENER MEMORIAL GOLD MEDAL for the best piece of sculpture, to Mitchell Fields of New York for "Torso."

JAMES McCLEES PRIZE for the best composition in the sculpture exhibition, to Gaetano Cecere of New York for "Boy and Faun."

The jury of hanging pursued an intentionally haphazard method of mingling the various schools of art, so that one of the abstract conceptions of Mr. Breckenridge himself, such as "Aeronautics" or "Genesis: The Birth of Light," is as likely as not to be in the same general vicinity as a prosaic still life by George Byron Brown showing three eggs about to be fried on a gas plate.

Works From Three Continents.

As representative of conservatism and modernism and the various stages between are the whole assemblage of portraits, nudes, still life, marines, industrial scenes and land scapes. The American artists contributing to the show have sent works from three continents. Scenes of the Basque country have come from Rolf Stoll and George E. Browne, of Spain from Carroll Bill and George L. Boyes, of Paris from Andrew Winter and Guy Pene du Bois, of the Congo forest from Paul B. Travis. Various parts of Europe also are depicted by several other artists.

The central space on the west wall of the large gallery, the most coveted of all spots, is occupied this year by Paul Trebilcock's "Antheia," a large, pale-skinned, nude woman, reclining on a couch in a formal garden. On either side are Charles Kilgore's "Fiesta," a Spanish episode in front of a large red church, and Victor Higgins's "Interior," a mass of flowers on a brass tabouret.

In the same room is found the largest work of the exhibition, Thomas Benton's four tall panels embodying the "History of New York" in its Indian, Dutch, Civil War and recent phases. Although this conception may be characterized as modernist, Mr. Benton is even more up-to-date in his "Smugglers" in another room, a story of bootleggers, hijackers and sleeping policemen.

Among the other paintings in the large room are "Mill of Old Milton" by Welmer Schofield, Edward W. Redfield's "Mill Race," Daniel Garber's "Goat Hill," Charles Taylor's "The Dead Tree," John Graham's "Street Abstractions" and two modernistic still-life productions by Arthur B. Carles.

Portraits Much Admired.

Most of the old contributors among the portrait painters are back, reinforced by comparative newcomers. Violet Oakley's portrait of "Her Majesty, the Queen Dowager of Greece," George Gibbs's likeness of Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, the sculptor; a painting of Mayor Mackey by Cesare A. Ricciardi, and a portrait entitled "The Diplomat," by Robert Susan, attracted much attention at the private viewing. For "The Diplomat," the subject, wearing a bright red cravat to blend with the color of the chair, was Richard J. Beamish, a Philadelphia newspaper man.

Leopold Seyffert, William M. Paxton, Leslie P. Thompson, Charles W. Hawthorn, K. Inukai, Frederick A. Bosley, Lilian Westcott Hale, George Luks, Ernest L. Ipsen, Lazar Radiz, Ada C. Williamson and several other portrait painters are represented.

Among the eccentricities of the exhibition that attracted notice were John Carroll's "The Cloud," showing a lady of somewhat artificial personality floating comfortably in what appears to be an ethereal mummy-case, and Buk's "Music of Spain." "The Duchess Calls Forth" and "Early Teens," by Nura, apparently are presented to indicate a child's idea of life.

Jonas Lie is represented this year with a decorative canvas, "Phantom Ships"; Raphael Sadatini with "Decoration," Morris Hall Pancoast with "Village in Winter," Eugene Higgins with "Flood Victims," George Biddle with a "Mexican Dance" and Yarnall Abbott by "Church of the Holy Spirit at Ronda, Spain." "Miss Barbara" is another of Edwin M. Dickinson's works in a purplish effect.

New York Scenes Popular.

New York scenes appear to be popular. There are Edward Hopper's glimpse of the Williamsburg Bridge, with a group of tenements at the back; Glenn Colman's "Jefferson Market" and John R. Grabach's "The Village, New York," among several others.

The Grafly exhibition proved tonight to be an interesting addition to the sculpture show. How Mr. Grafly developed his ideas is graphically shown by more than half a dozen sketches and finally the working model of his Meade Memorial in Washington. There are several fragments, and also his working model for the "Fountain of Man," shown at the Pan-American Exposition in 1901, and his working model for the heroic pioneer mother monument at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in 1915. Preliminary sketches of the figures "France," "England" and several others for the New York Custom House, the working model for James Buchanan's portrait statue at Lancaster, Pa.; the composition "Flight of Aeneus" (Paris, 1892), and dozens of other bronzes, marbles and plaster figures are included.

The academy's show opens to the public tomorrow and closes on March 16.

THOMAS WOULD SIFT ALL COURTS IN CITY

Declares Legislative Inquiry Should Study Prosecutors, Police and Bar Also.

SKEPTICAL OF CRAIN MOVE

Gotlieb Defends Magistrates at Luncheon and Sweedler Calls Them "High Type and Scholarly."

A legislative inquiry into the entire judicial system in this city with a view to removing alleged abuses was advocated yesterday by Norman Thomas, Socialist leader, at the close of a spirited discussion on the magistrates' courts at the luncheon of the city chapter of the League for Industrial Democracy at the Hotel Woodstock, in West Forty-third Street.

Mr. Thomas's suggestion was made after speakers had attacked the conduct of the Bar Association and conditions in the courts. Morris Ernst, lawyer, called the investigations now being carried on "merely technical," and said the problem of the raising of the standards of magistracies must be met.

Magistrate Maurice Gotlieb defended the courts and his own conduct on the bench. Magistrate David Hirshfield had canceled his acceptance of the invitation to speak at the luncheon. In addition to Mr. Gotlieb, Municipal Court Justice Nathan Sweedler rose to defend the courts. He praised the magistrates, as a group, as the "highest type of men, God-fearing, scholarly, erudite and well-meaning." He told of how, when he was appointed as counsel to the Sheriff in Brooklyn, John H. McCooey, the Democratic leader, advised him to perform his duties well. Heywood Broun, the columnist, later wanted to know what business Mr. McCooey "had to tell Mr. Sweedler to be a good boy," and said that "a man should not have to go to Mr. McCooey for advice."

Mr. Thomas, after listing his charges against the magistrates' courts, said that "one source of the evil" was the Bar Association because of "the difference between its conduct and its ethical professions and its utter supineness." Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of The Nation, joined Mr. Thomas in his attack on the Bar Association, declaring that "it does nothing to remove such abuses as torture, the third degree and similar obvious matters."

Doubt over the benefits of the investigation by District Attorney Crain was expressed by Mr. Thomas, who said that the proceedings "may serve to close the mouths of witnesses."

"Then, we must remember that the foreman of the special grand jury is Mr. Joseph P. Day, a stanch Tammany man," he said.

"The influence of the district leaders in the lower courts is by common report immense," he continued. "Former Magistrate Gordon has declared that many magistrates carry with them lists of defendants, given them by political leaders, whom they are told to discharge. Sometimes influence is brought to bear through favored attorneys."

The Socialist leader recalled the death of Magistrate Macrery and the charges made in connection with it, and went on to declare that an investigation should include an inquiry into bar associations, the Police Department, the prosecuting attorneys, the need for public defenders and the situations in the higher courts.

Mr. Gotlieb had a slight heart attack when he arrived at the luncheon, but was able to speak after a brief rest. He called the attention of critics of lower courts to trade associations which try to influence magistrates to sentence "poor peddlers trying to make a living."

Several hundred persons attended the discussion, which was presided over by Benjamin Stolberg, writer and critic. The speeches were broadcast over Station WEAF.

The next luncheon discussion will be held at the Hotel Woodstock on Feb. 8 and the subject will be "The Prisoner in Revolt." Jack Black, the ex-convict, and Dr. Hastings Hart of the Russell Sage Foundation will be among the speakers.

IN LINE-UP CLAD AS CADET.

Salesman Who Says He Is Former West Pointer Accused of Theft.

Malcolm K. Blackwell, 24-year-old salesman, of 55 West Seventy-first Street, was in the line-up at police headquarters yesterday morning wearing what he said was a West Point uniform and charged with burglary in the theft of $8 last March 30 from the Hotel Astor room of Frank Diddings, a West Point graduate. The prisoner said he had been a cadet for eigh. months, had been dismissed from the United States Military Academy two years ago and had worn the uniform to the Beaux Arts Ball Friday night, when he was arrested.

On Blackwell's breast were four medals which he said represented proficiency in machine-gun fire, rifle fire, revolver fire and wrestling. Six feet three inches tall and weighing 208 pounds, Blackwell, who said he was originally from Richmond, Va., was a striking figure in the line-up.

Blackwell admitted knowing Diddings and that he had stayed at the Astor from last Spring until December, but denied the burglary charge.

RECEIVER IS ASKED FOR DE FOREST RADIO

Stockholder Obtains a Show-Cause Order Returnable Feb. 4 Against Corporation.

SAYS CONCERN IS LOSING

H. C. Von Korff Also Charges Fraud in Exchange of Shares With the Jenkins Television Company.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 25.—An order requiring the De Forest Radio Corporation of Jersey City to show cause on Feb. 4 before Vice Chancellor Vivian M. Lewis here why a receiver should not be appointed for the corporation was issued yesterday by the Vice Chancellor on the petition of H. C. von Korff of Staten Island, who holds 1,300 shares of stock in the company.

Mr. von Korff's action marked the second move in the last four years to place the De Forest company in a receiver's hands. Early in 1926 what was termed a "friendly receivership action" was started against the company in Delaware by Lee De Forest and William H. Priess, a stockholder. Mr. De Forest alleged at the time that within two and one-half years the company had lost $1,250,000 through mismanagement. As a result of this action virtual control of the De Forest company passed to W. R. Reynolds and associates.

Mr. von Korff, in his petition yesterday, charged that a fraud had been perpetrated upon stockholders in the De Forest Company when 345,680 shares of De Forest stock were traded for 604,940 shares of the Jenkins Television Corporation. The petition also charges the company with having issued a false financial statement in September, 1929, showing profits of $261,000, whereas actually it was operated at a loss. That report, the petition says, failed to account for depreciation in patent rights, whose value was listed at $2,000,000.

Referring to the alleged stock-trading fraud, the petition declares that officers of the De Forest company had an interest in the Jenkins Television Corporation and that James W. Garside, president of the De Forest Corporation, was also president of the Jenkins corporation.

On Oct. 21, 1929, the petition alleges, officers of the De Forest Company caused 345,680 shares of stock in that company to be exchanged for 604,940 shares of Jenkins Television stock. Mr. von Korff charges in his petition that by reason of this exchange made on behalf of officers of the two companies who were closely allied, a fraud was perpetrated upon him and other stockholders of the defendant corporation. The reason for this, he alleges, is that the liquidating value of Jenkins Television stock at the time of the exchange was only fifty cents a share, aside from patent rights, which von Korff charges, were carried on books of the Jenkins Corporation at a fictitious figure.

Mr. von Korff further alleges that by reason of the transfer of stock the De Forest Company took control of the majority of the issued stock of the Jenkins corporation, which corporation, he charges, had no visible income and has not only carried on its business at a loss since its incorporation, but has and is spending its capital investment in experimental work.

The petition further sets forth that on June 7, 1929, stockholders of record in the De Forest Company had the right to subscribe to additional De Forest stock at $7 a share; and that 164,109 shares were sold at that figure. By right, the petition says, the proceeds from this sale should have been $1,148,763, but according to statements filed only $1,005,519 was received. This, the petition says, leaves $143,244 unaccounted for.

Mr. von Korff alleges that the De Forest corporation is now being operated at a loss. The De Forest corporation manufactures radio tubes and accessory equipment. It is not paying dividends, Mr. von Korff charges, and the Jersey City plant has been shut down.

N. Y. U. LAW STUDENT ILL OF SMALLPOX

Martin Brewster, Former Skates Champion Stricken—Part of Dormitory Quarantined.

Martin Brewster of Lake Placid, former junior ice skating champion, and a student at the New York University Law School, was discovered yesterday to be the victim of smallpox in the university dormitory, Varick House, at 11 Dominick Street.

Brewster had been ill for a week or more, but it was not until yesterday that Dr. Louis Sanman of 35 West Ninth Street, his physician, diagnosed his illness as smallpox. The Health Department was notified and Dr. J. Rosenbluth went to the dormitory, which houses 110 students. He directed the removal of Brewster to the Kingston Avenue Hospital in Brooklyn, a Health Department quarantine station, and then took measures to prevent the possibility of the spread of the disease.

Part of one floor of the building which had been exposed to the disease was quarantined and inspectors were posted at the front door to arrange for the vaccination of every resident. The building was also fumigated.

Health Commissioner Wynne said last night that he had received only a cursory report, but that from it he was able to declare that there was no cause to fear a spread of the disease. The department officials, he said, were exercising every care to preclude this. Dr. Sanman said that Brewster's attack was a mild one.

N. Y. U. FUND UP $100,000.

Leaders in Drive for Gymnasium Plan Renewed Efforts.

In the drive for $875,000 for the new New York University gymnasium, $100,000 already has been raised, it was announced yesterday at a luncheon at the New York Athletic Club attended by leaders of the campaign committee, athletic coaches, alumni, faculty members and others interested in the campaign. Plans were discussed for a campaign of personal solicitation to begin this week.

Among those at the luncheon were Henry B. Fernald, chairman of athletics; Frank R. Wall, director of intramural athletics; Professor Philip O. Badger, assistant to the chancellor, and Frederick Van Z. Lane, chairman of the Letter Club subcommittee for the campaign.

Mr. Lane and Mr. Meehan pledged that their divisions would raise $100,000 each. Mr. Fernald told of the desire to provide body-building exercise in the gymnasium for the university's 37,000 students. It is planned to close the campaign by March 1.

JERSEY INQUIRIES HAVE COST $500,000

30 Commissions in Last Two Years Show Large Expense Total—More Are Proposed.

ECONOMY SURVEYS MADE

National Institute, Proposing Large Cuts, Spent $100,000—Legislature Awaits Reports.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 24.—Nearly thirty commissions, many of them of a purely investigatory character, have spent more than $500,000 during the last two years, not including those permanent commissions created by the Republican Legislature. The annual report of the State Controller, John McCutcheon, reveals that only one has had an appropriation of less than $1,000, while the others ranged from $2,000 to $170,000.

The question of economy has been pushed to the forefront with the recent report of the National Institute of Public Administration, which proposed drastic changes in the State's financial and administrative make-up with the hope of effecting reductions in cost and greater efficiency.

The work of the National Institute and the McAllister-Case Committee, however, has been the most costly to the State in the past two years. The institute received $100,000 for its survey which lasted more than four months and was done in what observers consider a very careful and exacting manner. The McAllister committee was originally created to investigate questions of public interest, then the acts of public officials and wound up by taking Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City to the courts.

Two tax commissions account for $61,046 of the total, while the Newark Bay and Hackensack Meadows Reclamation Commission has so far used $59,899. The Legislature granted $50,000 to the tax committee, which was the result of the demands that the State undertake a survey of the tax situation to determine how the rising rate might be reduced.

The other tax committee, created to investigate the tangible personal property levies, of which Senator Roy Yates of Passaic is chairman, has paid out $11,046 to date.

While the work of the Meadow Reclamation Commission is regarded as valuable, it has been costly so far and may be even more so in the future. The commission was created to investigate the possibilities of turning the Hackensack and Newark meadows into land for industrial use.

The Legislature granted $25,000 to a commission to survey the educational condition of the State and report its recommendation, and $15,000 for a commission to determine whether the State should assist in curbing floods in North Jersey counties and what form the assistance should take.

The Davis committee, headed by Senator Francis B. Davis of Gloucester County, which inquired into the operations of the Department of Banking and Insurance, cost more than $50,000. The investigation in this case, however, proved of some value, inasmuch as legislation to curb the operations of small loan brokers, correct evils in the Banking Department and place a check on holding companies was enacted.

LASKY HAS CLOSE CALL WHEN CANOE UPSETS

Son Aids Father in Mishap on Mexican River—Indian Risks Life to Save L. Wortley.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 25 (AP).—Jesse L. Lasky, American moving picture magnate, narrowly escaped drowning in the Balsas River in the wilds of the State of Guerrero while on a canoe trip.

The story of his rescue was not learned until tonight when his party returned here after a three weeks' absence. Jesse L Lasky Jr., 19 years of age, assisted in the rescue of his father. Kenneth Wortley of Los Angeles, who had arranged the canoe trip up the little known stretches of the river, had an even narrower escape, but was finally dragged from a whirlpool by an Indian.

A week ago Mr. Lasky and Mr. Wortley were in an eighteen-foot canoe when it was caught and overthrown in the rapids. Mr. Lasky was thrown into the strong current, but being a good swimmer he was able to make his way toward the shore, where his son and another member of the party reached him before he became exhausted.

Mr. Wortley was caught in an eddy and for more than five minutes those on shore watched his struggles, unable to help because of the danger of being drawn in. Mr. Wortley had gone under several times, when an Indian risked his life by plunging into the water. Mr. Wortley was unconscious when his rescuer brought him to the bank.

One of the members of the party said the Indian "will never have to work again," as Mr. Lasky had rewarded him so generously.

The Americans were told by Indians that two Germans, whose names were not learned, had been drowned at the same place the week before, and that two Indians had been drowned at the same time in trying to aid them.

AMERICANS TO ARM BRAZIL.

$1,800,000 Bid for Anti-Aircraft Guns, Below French Figure.

RIO JANEIRO, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Brazilian army probably will be equipped with American-made anti-aircraft batteries with American fire control in the near future. Army authorities decided today to award a contract for four batteries to cost $1,800,000. A French bid which was considerably higher was rejected.

Observers here thought it possible that as a result of the decision the French military mission attached to the Brazilian army might be withdrawn. Only French equipment has been acquired for the army since the World War. It was reported that several of the French officers would return home in a few months and that their places would not be filled.

Should the French mission withdraw, the American naval mission headed by Admiral Noble Irwin would be the only military organization attached to the Brazilian forces.

RICH DETROITER ENDS LIFE.

J. T. Woodhouse, Tobacco Dealer, Shoots Himself in Home.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 25.—John T. Woodhouse, a wealthy tobacco wholesaler, ended his life at his home tonight by shooting himself with a revolver. No reason for his act is known.

He went from his office to his home on Lake Shore Road, Grosse Pointe Farms, at 5 o'clock. His body was discovered two hours later. None of the family or the servants heard the shot.

BAR TO END INQUIRY ON VITALE TUESDAY

Committee Finishes With Its Witnesses and Next Will Hear Any Called by Magistrate.

TO REPORT TO COURT SOON

Feraci Brothers, Detective Johnson and Patrolman Scheedel Give Final Testimony.

The subcommittee of the Bar Association, which is investigating the judicial conduct of Magistrate Albert H. Vitale, is expected to complete its inquiry on Tuesday and report shortly thereafter to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. The committee held an all-day session yesterday in the Bar Association Building, 42 West Forty-fourth Street.

The last of the witnesses called by the committee appeared, and on Tuesday night witnesses which the magistrate may call will be heard. Magistrate Vitale was not at the session yesterday owing to the death of his mother, but he was represented by his attorney, Max S. Steuer.

Four witnesses were examined. Dr. Joseph Feraci and his brother, Dr. James Feraci, were among them. The brothers were guests at the testimonial dinner to Vitale which was held up by seven hold-up men in the Bronx Roman Gardens restaurant on Dec. 8. It was Police Commissioner Whalen's charge that seven of the guests had police records that initiated the inquiry by the bar committee.

Detective Arthur C. Johnson, whose service weapon was taken by the hold-up band, was a witness yesterday. He got his revolver back from Magistrate Vitale, who, after two weeks of refusal to discuss the dinner or the return, explained that the gun had been given him by Dr. Joseph Feraci. The physician explained that he had found the weapon beside his car outside the restaurant.

Another person examined by the subcommittee was Traffic Patrolman Edward J. Scheedel. The patrolman gave an affidavit to Mr. Whalen, who forwarded it to the committee, charging that Magistrate Vitale had tried to induce him to drop a charge of felonious assault made against a taxicab driver and accept a cash settlement.

The Tuesday meeting of the investigators is set for 7:15 P. M.

Holmes to Lecture on Germany.

Present-day travel in Germany is illustrated in Burton Holmes's latest pitcures and color views of industrial tomorrow afternoon. The lecturer revisited Germany, traveling much by air, and has prepared new motion pictures and color of industrial peopeople against the background of ancient cities and quaint towns. With these Mr. Holmes also compares "the Germany that gave to the world Goethe and Schiller, Humboldt, Beethoven and Wagner."

VITALE'S MOTHER DIES.

She Succumbs at 76 After Stroke of Paralysis Three Weeks Ago.

Mrs. Marie Vitale, 76 years old, of 872 East 180th Street, the Bronx, died early yesterday morning at her home. Mrs. Vitale was the mother of Magistrate Albert H. Vitale, who is under investigation by the Bar Association. All news which reached her had been censored for several months and she is believed to have died unaware of the charges made against the magistrate.

Mrs. Vitale, who was a widow, had been a semi-invalid for five years. She suffered a paralytic stroke three weeks ago. The magistrate and two other sons, William J. and Lynn, were at her bedside when she died.

Funeral services will be held at the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, 187th Street and Belmont Avenue, the Bronx, Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

WHALEN SIFTS POLICE RAID.

Orders Two Investigations of Complaints Following Dry Move.

Police Commissioner Whalen announced yesterday that he had ordered two investigations into a raid made by the police three weeks ago at 192 Jay Street, Brooklyn, and the subsequent unsuccessful attempt of Mrs. Jeremiah Walsh, whose home was the object of the raid, to see him at his office.

It is alleged that Mrs. Walsh's husband was beaten by detectives who made the raid before he was taken off to be booked on a charge of violating the Volstead law. Walsh maintains he was innocent of the charges and says no search warrant was shown by the raiders. Commissioner Whalen said this angle was being investigated by Deputy Chief Inspector Thomas Cummings in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Walsh's charge that she was turned away by attendants in Commissioner Whalen's outer office when she sought to lay a complaint before him was investigated by Inspector Obdell, the commissioner said, and as a result Patrolman William Morgan was disciplined.

"If any citizen of this city has legitimate business with the Police Commissioner, I want to see him, and I won't tolerate interference from any member of the force," Mr. Whalen said.

TO SIFT HOOVER LAND PLAN.

Real Estate Boards' Committee Is Named at Phoenix Convention.

PHOENIX, Ariz., Jan. 25 (AP).—With appointment of a committee to study President Hoover's proposal for absorption of all Federal lands by State Governments, the annual midwinter meeting of the National Association of Real Estate Boards closed here today.

George E. Lilley of Phoenix was named chairman of the committee, which will report to the annual meeting in Toronto next Summer.

In addition, a resolution adopted at a States council meeting called upon State real estate boards of the West to appoint committees of three to meet with Governors of the respective States and discuss feasibility of the plan.

No formal action was taken in support or opposition to the proposal. Mr. Lilley asserted that transfer of the Federal land ownership might impose a burden on the States greater than the benefit they would receive.

DAMROSCH PUTS POEM TO MUSIC ON AIR

Conductor Broadcasts Verse by Anonymous Writer Over Nation-Wide Network.

A poem interpreting the spirit of music, written by an anonymous contributor in Springfield, Mass., was read by Walter Damrosch, the conductor, last night as part of the broadcast of the General Electric hour from 9 to 10 o'clock over a coast-to-coast network of thirty-nine National Broadcasting Company stations.

The poem was sent in an envelope which bore the Springfield postmark to the Music Appreciation Hour office of the N. B. C. Mr. Damrosch directs the broadcast of the Music Appreciation Hour every forenoon.

The poem he read:

I AM MUSIC.

Servant and master am I;
Servant of those good, and Master of those living.
Through me spirits immortal
Speak the message that makes
The world weep, laugh, wonder and worship.

I tell the story of love,
The story of hate, the story
That saves and destroys, that damns
I am the incense upon which prayers
Float to heaven.

I am close to the marriage altar;
I call the wanderer home, I rescue
The soul from the depths, I open
The lips of lovers, and through me
The dead whisper to the living.

I know no brother, yet all men
Are my brothers; I am the father
Of the best that is in them, and they
Are fathers of the best that is in me.
I am of them, and they are of me.
For I am the instrument of God.

79c a Carton of Ten Packages

But what does it prove?

Tomorrow we shall ring down the curtain. At 9 o'clock we shall put on sale our entire stock of several thousand cartons of LUCKY STRIKES, CHESTERFIELDS, CAMELS and OLD GOLDS at 79c a carton. They cost us $1.12. We couldn't stay in business long if we sold all or much of our merchandise that way. Neither can any other store. Cutting the price on advertised or identifiable merchandise below cost or below a figure that yields a legitimate profit can only mislead the public. Annual reports of most good stores show profits and they are not earned by selling below cost. We don't pretend always to undersell our competitors. No store can do it. We do assure our customers that we try to keep our prices right at all times.

There must be a limit to folly. We invite the public to observe whether any competitor will continue to sell cigarettes at any such price or will boost the price the moment we are out of the field. When common sense rules again we shall resume selling cigarettes as we try to sell all our merchandise, at prices that are competitively right.

Not more than one carton of each kind, or three in all, to a customer

Our full line of imported and fancy cigarettes will remain on sale as usual

Hearn's on 14th street

saves you money

Observe, if you will, this proud beauty of the Gay Nineties, with the osprey in her hair and the carved gold jewelry which so singularly resembles the jewelry of today.

Nor is this a mere caprice of fashion.

For the couturiers, when they design costume jewelry, design it in the spirit of the period whence they derive their fashion inspiration. And the woman of taste plans her costume jewelry to emphasize the source, the inspiration, of her costume...the carved Roman gold and link bangles of the 90's...the coin jewelry of the First Empire...the festoons and filagrees of Eugenie...the magnificence of what once was Russia...the sleek sophistication of what we call modern.

We are pretty well inured to feats of merchandising at Hearn's but we just can't suppress a trace of pride at this announcement:

Reproductions of Couturier Jewelry Only

Originals by Lelong, Patou, Worth, Lanvin, Callot, Louiseboulanger, Chanel and Vionnet.

GIRL LEADS HOLD-UP OF BRONX SHOE SHOP

Flees With 3 Gunmen After Taking $300 in Cash and Bonds and $150 Diamond Pin.

HUNTED IN OTHER CRIMES

Description Meets That of Woman in Other Robberies—Bandits Get $400 in Broadway Cafe.

A girl robber and three men companions held up Harry C. Trabold in his shoe store at 1,161 Webster Avenue, the Bronx, yesterday morning and escaped with $200 in cash, two fifty-dollar Liberty bonds and a diamond stickpin valued at $150. The girl, according to Trabold's description to the police, resembles the one implicated in several recent hold-ups in the Bronx and Northern Manhattan. The girl and one of the men entered Trabold's store just as he was bending over the safe to open it. The girl tried on a pair of shoes and while he was waiting on her the other two men entered. The first man drew a pistol and covered Trabold, forcing him into the washroom at the rear of the store. As soon as they were gone, Trabold kicked down the door and ran to the street, but the robbers were already out of sight.

Four men held up the C. and L. Restaurant, 2,245 Broadway, early yesterday morning, lining a dozen customers up against the wall and forcing the manager, Alfred Walters, to turn over the contents of the cash register to them. Cash and jewelry amounting to $400 were taken, but the robbers failed to get $600 in cash which was locked in the safe. The bandits drove off in a dark red sedan.

George Gaborsky, chauffeur for Benjamin Gross of 64 West Forty-eighth Street, reported to police that four men had entered his employer's car and covered him with pistols at an early hour yesterday. He said they forced him to drive them down Third Avenue, and at Forty-ninth Street ordered him out of the car and drove away. The car used by the C. and L. bandits answered the description of the Gross automobile.

In the restaurant hold-up the four robbers drew pistols as soon as they entered and ordered all to put up their hands. The cash register yielded the robbers $200, but when Walters insisted he did not know the combination of the safe the men abandoned it after a futile effort to open it by twirling the dial. Two of the four searched the customers, while another guarded the door. Three customers entered the restaurant in the course of the hold-up, one of them a woman, and they were ordered to join the others against the wall.

After the search of the customers was finished all four men ran to the door, scrambled into the automobile and drove rapidly away.

Low Interest on Ship Loans Favored

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The free bill to reduce interest rates on Shipping Board loans for ship construction from 5½ per cent to the lowest rate at which the government can borrow money was approved today by the House Merchant Marine Committee. The measure would not apply to construction for coastwise service.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS DROPS SHARPLY HERE

42 Cases and 15 Deaths in 1929 Were Smallest Number Reported Since 1919.

According to comparative annual figures on the prevalence of infantile paralysis in New York City made public by Health Commissioner Wynne yesterday, the disease during 1929 reached its lowest point since 1919. In the latter year there were 42 cases and 15 deaths. Last year there were 71 cases and 26 deaths. So far this year there have been 3 deaths.

"While the Department of Health can take no special credit for the remarkable decrease in infantile paralysis in 1929," said Commissioner Wynne, "it appears that the efforts of the department to educate the public at large against disease in general are bearing fruit. Evidently parents are heeding our advice and seeking medical counsel when their children become ill, and this procedure is continued it will not be long before the majority of childhood diseases will be so well in hand that they will have been robbed of much of their terror.

"Poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis, is one of the most disastrous of the diseases of childhood, for where it does not kill it almost always leaves some permanent paralysis and renders the victim a cripple for life. While the malady occasionally attacks children beyond the age of 15, and now and then even adults, it is much more frequent among young children. In the last big epidemic of infantile paralysis, in 1916, out of the total 9,023 cases in this city 95 per cent were in children under 10 years of age. Of the 8,488 cases in children under 10 years, 2,315 died. This ratio of case mortality among children under 10 holds good in almost every year."

The following figures compiled by Dr. William H. Guilfoy, Registrar of Records, give the incidence and mortality of infantile paralysis: In 1912 there were 358 cases and 70 deaths, a case fatality of 14 per cent. In 1919 there were 42 cases and 15 deaths, a mortality of 36 per cent. In 1928 there were 572 cases and 149 deaths, a mortality of 26 per cent.

The disease apparently is more fatal to males than to females. In the epidemic of 1916 there were 1,429 deaths among males and 1,019 among females, and this ratio has held in subsequent years.

FIGURES DEPEW MADE 15,000 SPEECHES

George Washington University Professor, at Chair Dedication, Counts 8,000 Banquets.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The belief that the late Chauncey M. Depew made "more speeches than any other man throughout all history" was expressed at the dedication of a chair of public speaking in his honor at George Washington University.

Professor Willard H. Yeager, who will hold the Depew chair, said the after-dinner speaker attended some 8,000 banquets.

"I believe I am making a conservative estimate when I say that he made at least 15,000 speeches during his long and distinguished career," he added.

DRYS HERE IN FIGHT FOR A PORT INQUIRY

New York League Aids Jersey Group to Hunt for Evidence of 'Extensive' Smuggling.

CALL FORAN CASE A DETAIL

But Are Ready for Senate Battle if He Is Renamed—Doran Here, Regrets Lodge Raid.

The Anti-Saloon League of New York has joined forces with the Anti-Saloon League of New Jersey in seeking a governmental investigation of all liquor smuggling into and through the port of New York, G. Rowland Munroe, counsel to the New Jersey league, announced yesterday. Orville S. Poland, counsel to the New York league, already has submitted to Washington authorities documents relative to "extensive" smuggling operations at this port, Mr. Munroe added.

Information supplied by Ernest S. Braidwood of Somerville, N. J., a former customs employe who was discharged after being accused of bootlegging, is being used by both the New York and New Jersey Anti-Saloon Leagues as a basis for a private investigation into smuggling, Mr. Munroe admitted. Braidwood has recently had several talks with Mr. Poland, said Mr. Munroe, and Federal agents, acting independently, have been in touch with Braidwood for several months.

Intimates it Has Evidence.

Mr. Munroe intimated that the two leagues had information pointing toward unusual smuggling activities of one steamship line which has a terminus at Hoboken.

Braidwood signed an affidavit submitted recently to President Hoover which asserted that Herbert L. Pratt, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Company of New York, had received about $25,000 of champagne said to have been smuggled into New York by the Go-Bart Company, several representatives of which are under Federal indictment for violation of the prohibition laws. Colonel Arthur F. Foran, Controller of Customs; Philip Elting, Collector of the Port of New York, and other officials here were accused of neglect of duty and defrauding the government of revenue by not fining Mr. Pratt $5 a bottle.

Poland Won't Discuss Move.

Mr. Poland, reached last night by long-distance telephone at Springfield, Mass., where he stopped in the course of a business trip, declined either to confirm or deny Mr. Munroe's assertion that he had submitted evidence of liquor smuggling here to the Washington authorities. He added that he would be glad to cooperate "in any proper and well-considered endeavor to help stop the shipment of liquor through the port of New York."

"My part, if any, in any proceedings with the government is a matter between the government and myself until such time as there might be reason for the proceedings to become public," said Mr. Poland. "Until then I shall have nothing to say, and anything concerning the progress being made in the proceedings must come from the government."

Mr. Poland made no direct reference to the charges that Mr. Pratt had received smuggled champagne, but had this to say:

"My interest and, I assume, that of the government, is to see that the violator of the law, no matter who he is, no matter whether or not he has social position, is punished. The same position should be taken whether the goods smuggled in are jewels or hooch."

Mr. Poland addressed a public meeting in Springfield last night and will speak at Amherst today. He will attend a directors' meeting in Boston and is expected to testify at a hearing there this week on the Massachusetts prohibition statute.

Mr. Munroe admitted yesterday that the New Jersey league's fight to prevent the reappointment of Colonel Foran as Controller was a detail of its plan to bring about a governmental investigation of conditions at this port. The fight against Colonel Foran included a raid on his hunting lodge at Mount Airy, in Hunterdon County, N. J., where no liquor or gambling device was found. Investigators, including Braidwood, employed through the Rev. James K. Shields, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New Jersey, had reported the presence of such things, including a bar, in the lodge.

Prepared for Senate Fight.

Should President Hoover reappoint Colonel Foran in spite of the league's accusations against him, the New Jersey league is prepared to carry its fight against him into the Senate, according to Mr. Munroe.

"We do not start things which we are not prepared to carry through to a finish," he continued. "I do not think it will be necessary to fight against Senate confirmation of Colonel Foran, because I do not expect him to be reappointed. I think the case is one which can be judged by the standards President Hoover has set up and applied."

In this connection Mr. Munroe again called attention to the purported letter of President Hoover to Fred E. Britten, secretary of the Florida Republican Committee, from which he previously had quoted the President as having said: "No longer shall the laws of the United States be flouted by Federal officials."

Prohibition Commissioner James M. Doran, who was in New York yesterday, said he would investigate the part played by Federal prohibition agents in the raid on Colonel Foran's hunting lodge, which he deeply regretted.

"I regret very much that Federal prohibition agents took part in the Foran raid," said the Commissioner, "because one of the rules of the department is that no agent shall search a house without sufficient cause. There were no indications in this instance, however, that the agents behaved improperly."

Asked if he sought a Congressional investigation of the Port of New York, Mr. Munroe said:

"We do not know whether that will be necessary. We hope not. We think Congress has enough else to do. If the investigation is made it will be done by such agency as the administration sees fit to choose."

Braidwood, according to Mr. Munroe, has furnished information concerning a number of specific cases which will be laid before officials at Washington, if Braidwood's reports are confirmed by the leagues.

Mr. Munroe ridiculed a statement attributed to United States Senator Baird that the attacks on Colonel Foran had been inspired by religious bias.

"I used to think Mr. Baird had good judgment," said Mr. Munroe, "but now I beg leave to revise my opinion of him."

Expects Senate Inquiry.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—James K. Shields, superintendent of the New Jersey Anti-Saloon League, said today he expected a Senate investigation of the charges against Colonel Arthur F. Foran, Controller of Customs of the Port of New York, if President Hoover nominated Foran for reappointment.

Mr. Shields has said that if the nomination were sent to the Senate the President would "flout the wishes of every dry in the country."

102 TO FACE DRY LAW TRIAL.

Oklahoma Officials Are Accused in Case of Alleged Ring.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Jan. 25 (AP).—One hundred and two Oklahomans go on trial here Monday in Federal court on charges that they were members of a well-organized liquor ring which dominated the rich oil fields of Pottawatomie County for three years.

Among the defendants are County Attorney Ralph Pitman, Frank Fox, former Sheriff, and several other county officers.

Pitman has charged that the government prosecution was inspired by his prosecution of W. W. Thomason, Federal prohibition agent, and Jeff D. Harris, a deputized aid, on murderder charges after the killing of two farmers near Tecumseh last July 4. Harris was convicted in the State court and sentenced to fifty years in prison. The government took jurisdiction in Thomason's case and he has not been tried.

prohibition and other authorities that the provision in the national prohibition act treating as intoxicating all beverages containing one-half per cent or more of alcohol places the limit well below the intoxicating-in-fact point.

"For instance, Wayne B. Wheeler, when national superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, stated frankly, to a legislative committee at Albany, N. Y., that the half per cent was substantially below the point where beverages become intoxicating on account of alcoholic content. He explained that the reason for using this figure in the original national prohibition act was that a number of State prohibition laws prior to the Eighteenth Amendment had used that figure, that figure having originally been adopted in the States because the National Government, under the internal revenue laws, treated any malt liquor as subject to tax if it contained one-half per cent or more of alcohol.

"A large amount of the difficulty under the national prohibition act is due to illicit brewing of poorly made beer of the ale character, which, on account of its quick manufacture without adequate apparatus or fermentation control, is of high alcoholic content. The same is true of home brewing, by which a poor quality of malt liquor is secured, of high alcoholic content, through amateur methods of manufacture in the home.

Easier Enforcement Visioned.

"The benefit of increasing the limit of alcoholic content, within the non-intoxicating range, would be threefold:

"First, legitimate manufacture of such a beverage would be possible without dealcoholizing the naturally malted and fermented beverage. A sound product of non-intoxicating alcoholic content could be produced by scientific and sanitary mechanical processes. Secondly, the availability of this non-intoxicating beverage of healthful and palatable quality would eliminate the presently illegal but widespread practices of home brewing, alley brewing and brewing in plants formerly breweries and now illegally operated. Thirdly, it would reduce the field of enforcement and enable the National Government to pay more attention to prosecution of hard liquor violations.

"There is every reason to anticipate that, if the people were enabled to secure these non-intoxicating beverages in compliance with law and in consonance with actual prohibition of the Eighteenth Amendment, respecting liquors intoxicating in fact, the public would be more amenable to the prohibition enactment.

"The Wickersham commission, dealing with law enforcement and crime, would undoubtedly report to the President and to Congress that beverages containing not more than 3 per cent of alcohol are non-intoxicating in fact, and very possibly would express the conclusion that such a change in the law to make the statute more nearly conform to the actual prohibition of the Eighteenth Amendment in this regard would reduce the problem of prohibition enforcement and, pro tanto, make the enforcement of the law as a whole in the general field of its proper operation against intoxicating liquors the more effective.

Asks Commission to Act.

"There exists the possibility of the securing, through the President or direct from the commission by Congress, of an expression in this regard, and if a provision thus correcting the law were coupled with enforcement measures now pending, such as the proposed revision regarding jury trials, the two coupled together would so revise the law as to reduce the problem of enforcement and make that part of the problem which would remain the more easily to be treated in judicial proceedings.

"The suggestion herein comes down to the proposition of asking the Wickersham commission: First, what is the intoxicating point that could be tolerated in full compliance with constitutional prohibition of the Eighteenth Amendment; and, secondly, whether such adjustment of the national prohibition act to conform with the constitutional prohibition would be a benefit in actual prohibition enforcement."

Enforcement Hearings Slated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Both branches of Congress today laid plans to resume hearings on legislation proposed to carry out President Hoover's recommendations to strengthen prohibition enforcement.

On Monday the House Expenditures Committee is to hear Attorney General Mitchell and W. C. Deming, president of the Civil Service Commission, on the Williamson bill to effect the prohibition enforcement transfer, which previously had been opposed by Mrs. Willebrandt.

While hearings have been delayed in the House judiciary subcommittee on the Christopherson bills to broaden the powers of United States commissioners in an effort to relieve congested Federal courts, the Senate judiciary subcommittees expect to begin hearings on both the transfer and commissioner bills next week.

In the House, Representative Cox, Democrat, Georgia, demanded final determination of the law which permits the transfer to Federal courts of cases brought against Federal dry agents, in order to prevent abuse of the privilege. A better spirit would pervade among the people in the States, he said, if some assurance were given that the right to transfer cases from State to Federal courts was not abused.

ASKS WOMEN TO AID IN CURBING CRIME

Whalen Says 60 Policewomen Can Do More in Checking Youths Than Rest of Force.

HEALTH PLANS REVEALED

Dr. Wynne Asserts Walker Has Pledged Himself to Create 20 Centres in City.

Declaring that he regards crime prevention as the most serious and weighty duty of the Police Department, Commissioner Whalen, who spoke at the annual luncheon of the Women's Civic Organization at the Commodore yesterday, expressed his confidence in the newly created Bureau of Crime Prevention. He said he expected to derive more good from the work of the sixty women of this bureau in checking juvenile crime than from the curative attempts of the combined police force.

The commissioner asked for the support of women's organizations in this work. "There isn't a day," he said, "when youth under 18 cannot be seen in the police line-up, charged with serious crimes."

The need for health service stations, distributed in the city in a manner similar to police stations and fire departments, was urged by Health Commissioner Wynne, who told of results already obtained from clinics for diphtheria and tuberculosis. He announced that Mayor Walker had pledged himself to create twenty health stations in the city within the next four years.

Dr. Wynne declared that great improvements were made by the consolidation of hospitals in New York, which, he said, had reduced the mortality rate. The care given to patients in city-operated hospitals is second to none in the world, he said.

Dr. Wynne stressed the necessity for combating the smoke evil, which, he said, deprived New York of from 40 to 60 per cent of sunshine, menaced health and added a tremendous amount to the expenditures in cleaning bills.

Pointing out the great improvements made in tuberculosis, diphtheria, smallpox, yellow fever and other diseases, Dr. Wynne claimed that fourteen years could be added to the lives of the average New Yorker if people would take advantage of the knowledge on hand and concentrate more upon prevention than on the cure of disease.

The modern maiden was scored heavily by Judge Alfred J. Talley, who said that while the future of boys appears secure, the reckless girl of today marches straight to ruin under prevailing conditions, which, he said, eliminated all measures of protection and restriction for girls. He blamed indecent books, plays and prohibition for the increase of juvenile delinquency, declaring that "the saloon at its worst would be preferable to the evils which have followed in the train of prohibition."

Other speakers included former Lieut. Gov. George H. Lunn of Schenectady, William J. Pedrick, vice chairman and assistant manager of the Fifth Avenue Association; Dr. Joseph M. Sheehan, associate superintendent of schools, and Mrs. Anna Moskowitz Kross.

Among the 600 women participating were Mrs. Grover A. Whalen, Judge Jeanette Brill, Mrs. John J. Campbell and Judge Jean H. Norris.

AUTHORIZES SHIFT OF SYRACUSE RAILS

I. C. C. Decision Eliminating 55 Grade Crossings Marks End of 50-Year Campaign.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Interstate Commerce Commission today authorized the New York Central Railroad to relocate its lines in Syracuse and the village of East Syracuse to eliminate grade crossings.

The application was unopposed and received the unqualified endorsement of the city of Syracuse and the County of Onondaga.

Cost of the work was estimated at $30,000,000, of which 50 per cent is to be paid by the carrier, 49 per cent by the State and 1 per cent by the county.

Gratification over the decision permitting removal of the railroad's tracks from Washington Street in Syracuse was expressed today by Representative Hancock, Republican, of New York. He said that it marked the final step in a campaign of almost fifty years and that "the people of Syracuse will be very grateful to the commission for its prompt action."

Observing that the commission's report had been made less than two weeks after hearings on the application were held on Jan. 13, Mr. Hancock said that President Crowley of the New York Central had informed him that the work of removing the tracks would be started in April.

The plan approved by the commission, he continued, was drawn up by the Syracuse Grade Crossing Commission. It provides for the operation of the New York Central's trains on an elevated structure over the tracks of the West Shore line.

Mr. Hanock said that the change would eliminate about fifty-five grade crossings in the city, which have taken an annual toll of six or eight lives and caused an almost intolerable traffic situation.

1812 WAR SOCIETY MEETS.

State Branch Honors General C. H. Whipple of Los Angeles.

The Society of the Second War with Great Britain in the State of New York, the State branch of the General Society of the War of 1812, held a meeting and luncheon yesterday at the University Club, 1 West Fifty-fourth Street, at which amendments to the constitutions of both societies were approved. Brig. Gen. Charles Henry Whipple, U. S. A., retired, of Los Angeles, was elected an honorary member.

Henry Harmon Noble, secretary of the society since 1901, received a certificate as past and honorary president of the organization. Others present included the Very Rev. George Lynde Richardson, D. D., dean of the Cathedral of All Saints, Albany; James W. Cox Jr., president of the New York society; J. Albert Van Horn of New Jersey, secretary general of the general society; Dr. J. E. Burnett Buckenham of Philadelphia, surgeon general of the general society, and James W. Cox, treasurer of the New York society.

MANILA PROTESTS CALIFORNIA RIOTING

Governor General Davis Cables Plea to Washington for Protection of Filipinos.

BELIEVES CAUSE ECONOMIC

Charges of Red Propaganda Are Made on West Coast and Precautions Redoubled.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MANILA, Jan. 25.—Governor General Davis has cabled to Washington asking immediate protection for Filipinos in California. He believes the recent riots in which Filipinos were killed and beaten were economic, not racial.

Antonio de las Alas, acting speaker of the Philippine House, has cabled to Señor Roxas in Washington outlining the alarm felt here. Labor leaders are planning a mass meeting to protest against the outbreaks. Labor comment condemns the riots and bases a demand for immediate independence on them.

MANILA, Jan. 25 (AP).—Governor General Davis today forwarded a message to Brig. Gen. Parker, head of the Bureau of Insular Affairs in Washington, containing a request by the Philippine Government for the protection of Filipinos against violence such as that which occurred in the riots at Watsonville, Cal., this week.

The request followed by a few hours a charge, cabled to Representative Francisco Varona by Secretary Tagle of the Filipino Community League of Salinas, Cal., that authorities of Watsonville connived with rioters who killed one Filipino and beat others.

Tagle said Watsonville authorities knew of the intended attacks at least two weeks before they occurred, but did nothing to prevent the trouble.

WATSONVILLE, Cal., Jan. 25 (AP).—Circulation of scores of seditious communistic pamphlets throughout the Pajaro Valley today caused police and other officials to redouble precautions against further rioting here and in Monterey County.

The circulars urged white and Filipino workers to join forces and fight the American Legion, police and farm owners as common enemies. Police said they were signed by "the Communist party, Young Communist League, District 13, of San Francisco."

Mayor C. H. Baker, aware of an increased tenseness, was prepared to assume personal charge of the Watsonville police force should there be further clashes here.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25 (AP).—Special police patrols were detailed to Filipino districts here today after reports of threats that white men would be attacked if they entered the localities. The ill-feeling, the police were told, was engendered by the clashes between the races at Watsonville, Cal.

The reports were received from white girls employed at Main Street dance halls where Filipinos congregate at night. Riot squad cars were stationed in the area and officers displayed weapons as a warning that outbreaks would be dealt with severely.

200 OLD HERALD MEN HOLD REUNION DINNER

Revival of "Owl Club" Marks 10th Anniversary of Passing of Paper as Separate Entity.

More than 200 men who worked on the staff of the old New York Herald when it was owned by James Gordon Bennett attended a reunion and dinner at the Hotel St. Regis last night. The occasion marked the tenth anniversary of the discontinuance of the publication of the old Herald as a separate entity.

The dinner also marked the revival of the annual Owl Dinner formerly held by The Herald staff, so-called because the owl was The Herald emblem. Two of the bronze owls which adorned the Herald building were perched on pedestals. Fifteen other owls were perched around the room. As the men entered they donned owl masks of paper, wearing them until they were reintroduced to one another at the start of the dinner.

Hamilton Peltz, who was on the staff of The Herald for thirty-two years, presided as Chief Owl. William A. Willis, the last city editor of the old Herald, was the only other speaker. The other members of the dinner committee were J. Norman Lynd, Owen Oliver, Deltus M. Edwards and Major J. S. Richardson. Major Richardson, Colonel Ernest K. Coulter, Albert Campbell, Sid Greene, Harry Newman and Edward D. Sullivan furnished the entertainment.

Others present included William J. Guard, Eward Ziegler, Roland R. Harrison, executive editor of The Christian Science Monitor; William S. Gill of Hollywood, Winsor McCay, Byron R. Newton, former Collector of the Port; Daniel L. Ryan of the Board of Transportation; James Blaine Walker, secretary of the Transit Commission; John T. Burke, Michael F. Haggerty, Joseph J. Canavan, Albert Stephens Crockett, George W. Daly, Frank B. Flaherty, John F. Flinn, Andrew B. Ford, Omar Hite, Stanley Walker, Harry D. Kingsbory, Robert E. Livingston, George S. Wheat, George D. Morris, Samuel Morse, Robert H. Patchin, Arthur G. Peacock, George Henry Payne, Truman J. Talley, John McHugh Stuart, Frank Parker Stockbridge, Burr Price, John Warren and John N. Wheeler.

7 STOWAWAYS IN SHIP HERE.

Six Portuguese and a Porto Rican Found on the Bordonnais.

Seven stowaways, six of them Portuguese and one who says he is a Porto Rican, arrived yesterday on the French liner Bordonnais.

The ship left Vigo Jan. 11, and three days out the alleged Porto Rican was found hiding in the hold. On Jan. 19 the Portuguese stowaways were discovered when the purser checked up the third-class passengers. They said that they had slept in empty cabins and mingled with the passengers at meal times. The Porto Rican said he is Fernando Garcia, a seaman, 19 years old, and that his ship had left him stranded at Vigo. He was sent to Ellis Island with the other stowaways, but if he can prove he is a Porto Rican, Garcia will be released, the immigration officials said yesterday.

POLICE RAID 3 CAFES IN MIDTOWN AREA

Four Are Arrested in Alleged Speakeasies—Fifth Is Seized in Station.

HAD GIN AND EGGS IN BAG

Man Who Came to Protest Removal of Parked Auto Is Held on Charge of Having Liquor.

Detectives of the staff of Inspector McCormick went into action yesterday against midtown speakeasies. Three raids in two hours netted four prisoners, and several cases of assorted liquors, not to mention a hapless individual who walked into the West Forty-seventh Street station to enter a protest only to be charged with "possession" when police discovered the bundle under his arm contained three quarts of gin and three dozen eggs.

Thomas Murphy, a waiter in a restaurant at 373 West Forty-sixth Street, was arrested and charged with violation of the Volstead act in the first raid. The second raid, at 148 West End Avenue, resulted in the arrest of Gianano Delaino, a waiter, on a similar charge. The other two prisoners were taken in a raid on 11B West Fifty-first Street. They were John Sorgo and Francesco Benito, both waiters in the restaurant, where the detectives said they found three cases of wines, whiskys and liqueurs.

While Sorgo and Benito were being booked by Detectives Creed and Wund, Eugene Sanger, a sales manager, who lives at the New York Athletic Club, walked in to report that his automobile had been stolen from in front of a restaurant at 314 West Fifty-eighth Street, where he had been having lunch. It developed that the car had not been stolen, but had been removed to the Department of Street Cleaning garage on Twenty-fourth Street for overstaying the time limit on parking.

Sanger was indignant. He gave his opinion of the police, the Department of Street Cleaning and of Max Krauss, the foreman in charge of the wrecking crews. He became so indignant that Wund and Creed surveyed him. The neck of a bottle was sticking from the package under his arm. They searched him and a little later entered his name on the blotter. The eggs and the gin were kept as evidence.

Land Inquiry Reconvenes Feb. 3.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Special Deputy Attorney General Wise announced today that the extraordinary grand jury investigating land transactions in Westchester would be reconvened on Feb. 3 instead of Feb. 17. The early recall, he said, was to "clean up a few unfinished matters." The trial of Supervisor Howard R. Washburn will begin on Monday.

STOCK FRAUDS HERE TRACED TO CANADA

New York and Montreal Firms Said to Have Been Linked in $390,000 Swindles.

BUCKET SHOP PLOT SEEN

Records Seized Here—$1,000 a Day Phone Calls Alleged to Have Been Made by Dominion Salesmen.

Through seizure of records at the stock brokerage office of Fitzharris & Co., 11 West Forty-second Street, by State authorities, as a result of a raid by the Monotreal police Friday of the offices of Martin & Martin, Ltd., in that city, a scheme was disclosed through which American investors lost more than $390,000, Assistant Attorney General Watson Washburn, in charge of the State Bureau of Securities, said yesterday.

The Canadian and the local stock brokerage concerns were linked in a bucket shop scheme, the officials here asserted, and the location of offices in Montreal was to evade jurisdiction of the New York and Federal authorities.

From the seized records here and in Canada more than $390,000 was obtained from American investors with which to buy stocks on margin. The money, it was said, was obtained through the Canadian offices and the purchase of the stock was promised the investor through the offices of Fitzharris & Co. Complaints from investors that they were not able to receive any profits when stocks bought on margin went up in market price led to the action by the Canadian and local officials.

Visit Local Offices.

Richard Cornell of the State Bureau of Securities, Frank Reidy of the Better Business Bureau, 280 Broadway, and Harold J. Inns, general manager of the Better Business Bureau in Montreal, visited the offices of Fitzharris & Co. yesterday for a second time in two days.

It was learned that the quarters occupied by Fitzharris & Co. had been rented several weeks ago by a person said to be William Rankin now on trial in the Federal Building on charges of using the mails to defraud. A telephone operator in the office of the renting agents of the building identified a photograph of Rankin as the one who had leased the office.

Mr. Inns said that warrants had been issued in Canada against those accused of defrauding the American investors and that Charles Beaden, who is a co-defendant with Rankin, may be the James Martin of the Canadian firm. The investigation has disclosed, he declared, that the only ones to suffer financial loss were American investors, all of whom were solicited from the Canadian offices by telephone. No attempt was made to interest Canadians in the purchase of stock. The name of legitimate stocks were used as bait, it was said.

According to Mr. Inns and Mr. Cornell, the firm of Martin & Martin began operations in Canada about Jan. 1. The Fitzharris company, it was said, started operations about three weeks ago.

Fitzharris Is Sought.

Mr. Cornell said that a subpoena had been served on Harry Fitzharris at 308 West 102d Street, requiring his appearance at the offices of the Bureau of Securities, but that the subpoena was ignored. Search is now being made for Fitzharris.

On Jan. 14, Mr. Cornell said, Fitzharris filed in the New York County Clerk's office documents declaring that he and John Coyle of 1,118 Bergen Pike, North Bergen, N. J., were the ones operating the concern. Mr. Cornell said action would be taken to enjoin the Fitzharris firm from doing further business in this city.

According to the officials the concern in Canada spent more than $1,000 a day on telephone service in long distance calls. High pressure salesmen who put the calls through, it was said, drew on an average of $200 a week each, which was four times as much as was paid N. Dufresne, said to have been the dummy president of the concern.

NEWSPRINT EXPORTS RISE.

But Value of Canadian Volume in December Is Behind 1928.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Jan. 25.—The value of newsprint exported from Canada in December shows a decrease of about $400,000, compared with December, 1928, although there was an increase of about 7,000 tons in the volume of export, according to a report issued today by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. The figures are $12,904,162, as against $13,408,647, with a tonnage of 220,171 as against 213,162.

For 1929, the value of newsprint exports increased $7,500,000 and the volume of export about 300,000 tons compared with the previous year. Exports in 1929 were valued at $148,656,611, against $141,103,527, while the tonnage was 2,510,633, against 2,206,587 in the previous twelve months.

Exports of pulp and paper, all grades, in December were valued at $16,820,880, which was a decrease of $1,131,128 from the previous month's total, and $1,193,747 below the total for December, 1928.

Wood pulp exports for the month were valued at $3,382,926 and exports of paper at $13,437,954, as compared with $4,152,432 and $13,799,576 respectively in November.

MURDERER GETS LIFE TERM.

Jury Convicts Virginian of Killing Veteran and Burning Body.

LOUISA, Va., Jan. 25 (AP).—A jury this morning found Robert L. MacDonald, aged 23, guilty of first-degree murder in connection with the death and subsequent burning last July of John Ross Marshall, World War veteran, and recommended life imprisonment. Defense attorneys noted an appeal for a new trial.

Judge A. T. Browning, after overruling the motion for a new trial, imposed the recommended sentence and MacDonald was taken to the Henrico County jail at Richmond.

The State contended that MacDonald shot and killed Marshall following an altercation at the latter's home at Byrd Mill, Va.; carried the body into the house and then burned the building. The defense contended that MacDonald suffered with epilepsy.

DEVISE QUICK METHOD OF ANALYZING COLORS

University of Pennsylvania Physicists Build Accurate Electrical Apparatus.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—An automatic apparatus with which the colors of transparent and opaque objects can be analyzed with scientific accuracy in less than ten seconds has been developed in the graduate laboratories of the University of Pennsylvania.

The device was perfected by Joseph Razek and Peter J. Mulder, instructors in the Department of Physics, to whom the practicability of constructing such an apparatus suggested itself while they were engaged in a problem of pure research as candidates for the doctorate.

The new "color analyzer" is portable and is built into a box about the size of a large suitcase. It can be operated either by connection to any electric light socket or from batteries.

The sample to be tested is placed over a small rectangular opening on the top of the box, where it is illuminated by a powerful light. The light, reflected perpendicularly from the sample, is admitted to a spectroscope in which it is separated into its component colors.

A selected portion of the dispersed light is then allowed to pass into a photo-electric cell, the very feeble current passed by this cell as a result of the light falling upon it being amplified about a million times. This is done by means of a special amplifier, known as a "bridge grid resistor amplifier" developed for the purpose.

The amplifier employs two vacuum tubes such as are used in the last stage of many radio sets, with certain adaptations which greatly increase their sensitivity, and the amplifier current is indicated on a sensitive galvanometer, whose reading can be noted on a scale on the front of the machine and at the same time recorded on a photographic film.

By turning a small crank different portions of the spectrum are successively admitted to the photo-electric cell until the entire spectrum has been covered, while the photographic film is moved through a corresponding distance. Co-ordinate lines and an identification number are printed on the film in a separate compartment of the machine.

The entire operation of analyzing a color is thus automatic and a complete record of a colored sample can be obtained in less than ten seconds.

TINY FISH COMPETE FOR PRIZES AT SHOW

Breeders of Guppyis Hold an Exhibition at the Natural History Museum

An exhibition of guppyis, a tiny tropical fish, was held by the Aquarium Society at its monthly meeting last week in the East Room of the American Museum of Natural History.

There was also a competition for the best species of the male and female pairs of this very small fish, the females being about one inch long and the males only half their mate's size. Judges awarded ribbons to the winners just as they do at horse and cattle shows.

Carl Dieckman, newly elected secretary, of the organization, won first place with his pair, and Herman Ernst received the second and third awards. The judges were Richard Buettener and Joseph Lingg.

This diminutive fish are life-bearing, and just to show how prolific they are, there was a glass jar filled with baby guppyis, most of them about one-eighth of an inch in size.

The tiny male guppyis continually flits about the female. What he lacks in size is made up for in coloring of the most alluring hues, with spots, red, blue and black, resembling peacock eyes.

Richard Dorn, president of the society for thirty years and now honorary president, told how the guppyis were called million fish in the West Indies, owing to the fact that they propagate in such numbers.

They were introduced into Trinidad by the British, he said, and are of great economic and scientific value in the West Indies. They are used in the extermination of the mosquito, and as a result there is very little malaria around the ponds in which they thrive. They cannot stand the cold weather of the North, however, and must be kept in water of a temperature around 60 degrees.

COLOMBIAN OPEN DOOR FAVORED BY OLAYA

Presidential Candidate Says He Would Make Foreign Capital Feel Welcome and Secure.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOGOTA, Jan. 25.—Enrique Olaya Herrera, who came home from his post as Minister at Washington to become candidate for President on a National Coalition ticket, outlined his program in a speech at Medellin, in which he said he favors a "government with a modern and broad concept and with an open door so that foreign capital would enter and submit to our laws with confidence, feeling an atmosphere of mutual cooperation and never one of hostility and distrust."

Speaking of foreign relations, Señor Olaya said he favors a "government that would appreciate the great foreign interests of the republic and clearly comprehend what our geographic situation signifies; a government that would protect our growth as a sovereign nation in peace and harmony with other States."

The great enthusiasm for Señor Olaya's candidacy has disturbed the opposition and the archbishop primate has sent a telegraphic circular to all dioceses saying it is obligatory for all Catholics, regardless of political party to vote for Dr. Guillermo Valencia, the Conservative candidate, "on account of the danger which threatens Christian institutions."

The archbishop admits that the Liberal candidate's intentions may be good, but he fears his party.

The situation of the Conservative party is still confused. General Alfredo Vásquez Cobo, the Independent Conservative candidate, after a conference with Dr. Valencia yesterday, announced they had reached no agreement. He said "I continue firm. I have not renounced my candidacy."

Many of his followers announce they will support Señor Olaya if General Vásquez withdraws.

REV. M. D. LENNON DEAD.

Was a Former Assistant Pastor of a Church Here.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 25 (AP).—The Rev. Michael D. Lennon, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church here for the last nine years, died today at the age of 57.

Father Lennon was born in Longford County, Ireland, and was educated at St. Joseph's Seminary, Troy, and at the Canadian College in Rome, Italy. He was ordained in 1897, and for twelve years was assistant pastor of the Church of St. Thomas the Apostle in New York. He was pastor of the church at Rhinecliff for eleven years before coming here.

He is survived by four brothers, the Rev. Patrick J. Lennon of St. Cecilia's Church, New York; the Rev. James D. Lennon of California, and Dr. John J. Lennon and Joseph Lennon, both of New York, and by two sisters, one of whom is Miss Nettie Lennon of New York.

CORNELIUS ELDERT DIES IN 82D YEAR

SERVED IT FROM AGE OF 16

Former Head of Underwriters—A Leader in Charity Work—Walked Across Brooklyn Bridge Daily.

Cornelius Eldert, president of the Atlantic Mutual Insurance Company of 51 Wall Street, with which he had been associated since 1865, died on Friday night at his home, 557 First Street, Brooklyn, in his eighty-second year. He is survived by a widow, Isabelle K. Cameron Eldert, a daughter, who is the wife of the Rev. Joseph P. Smyth of Belleport, L. I., and a son, Henry C. Eldert, a member of the law firm of Taylor, Blanc, Capron & Marsh.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon in St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, by the Right Rev. Ernest M. Stires, Bishop of Long Island. Mr. Eldert had been a communicant of St. Luke's for forty-five years, and had long been a vestryman and warden.

Mr. Eldert was 16 years old when he started in business. He began with the Atlantic Mutual and never left it, devoting his entire career to marine insurance. He had held the presidency for many years. He also served for a long period the Board of Underwriters of New York as a director and president, resigning the presidency only a few years ago. He was a trustee of the Seamen's Bank for Savings, vice president and a director of the Atlantic Safe Deposit Company and a director of the Underwriters Salvage Company and of several other corporations.

Many Brooklyn charities have received aid from Mr. Eldert in one form or another. He was president of the Life Saving Benevolent Society, and for years had been vice president of the Brooklyn Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor.

To regular pedestrians on Brooklyn Bridge Mr. Eldert was a familiar sight, even to those who did not known him, owing to his custom of walking to and from his office on the bridge. In nearly sixty-five years of working he missed only a few days through illness.

MORRIS STERN DEAD.

Dress Manufacturer, 59, Was Active in Jewish Philanthropies.

Morris Stern, president of the dress manufacturing business of Morris Stern & Co., 498 Seventh Avenue, which he founded thirty-seven years ago, died at his home, 180 Riverside Drive, in his sixtieth year. He left a wife, Celia, two sons, Louis and Alvin, both in their father's firm, and two daughters, Mrs. Laura Friedman and Mrs. Helen Weinberg. Funeral services will be held from the home at 10:30 A. M. today.

For a long time Mr. Stern had been active in various educational, communal and religious organizations. He was one of the founders of the Young Men's and Young Women's Hebrew Association of Washington Heights, a former chairman of the American Committee of the Hebron Yeshivah in Palestine, a trustee of Congregation Shaare Zedek. He was also a supporter of the Home of the Daughters of Jacob, United Synagogue of America and the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropies.

CAPTAIN J. McLAUGHLIN.

Retired Policeman Was Bodyguard at Lincoln's Bier Here.

Captain James McLaughlin, who as a New York policeman was a bodyguard over the bier of President Abraham Lincoln while it lay in State before the funeral, died at his home at 205 Warburton Avenue, Yonkers, on Friday night of heart disease in his eighty-seventh year.

He was born in Ireland and came to this country with his parents at 7. He was reared in Norwalk, Conn., and educated there. He was appointed a New York patrolman in the latter days of the Civil War. He was one of the policemen who tried to solve the mystery of the murder of Benjamin Nathan, rich broker, near Madison Square, New York, in 1868, which remained as one of the outstanding unsolved crimes of the city.

When the Yonkers department was organized in 1871 McLaughlin was transferred to Yonkers. When he was one of the officers of the Yonkers department he investigated the mysterious bomb explosion which killed the late Hamlin Andrus, brother of John E. Andrus, financier. This mystery was never solved.

He was retired on a pension, after thirty-six years of police service, in 1901. For some years after that he engaged in real estate business in Yonkers.

He leaves, besides his wife, five sons and two daughters, a brother and a sister. Services will be held tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in St. Mary's Catholic Church, South Broadway, Yonkers. Burial will be in St. Joseph's Cemetery, Yonkers. Police Chief Edward Quirk will send an escort of Yonkers policemen with the funeral cortège.

MISS SARAH T. VAN CLEEF.

Principal of Bergen School for Girls in Jersey City Dies.

Miss Sarah T. Van Cleef, for many years principal of the Bergen School for Girls in Jersey City, with which she had been associated since its establishment in 1891, died on Thursday at her home, 2,540 Boulevard, Jersey City. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. A. V. C. Dodgshun of Chicago; a brother, James P. Van Cleef, of Jersey City, and two nieces.

Miss Van Cleef was a daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Paul D. Van Cleef, who was for more than half a century pastor of the Wayne Street Reformed Church, Jersey City, which is now a part of the Faith Von Vorst Reformed Church. She was its oldest member in length of membership and had been a teacher in the Sunday School and the Bethel Chapel.

The development of the Bergen School has been largely credited to the ability and personality of Miss Van Cleef.

DOM MOCQUEREAU DIES IN MONASTERY

Noted Liturgical Scholar Led in Restoration of the Gregorian Chant.

JOINED THE BENEDICTINES

Wrote Many Volumes on Medieval Chant to Which He Devoted Most of His 80 Years.

Receipt of a cablegram telling of the death of Dom Andre Mocquereau of the Monastery of Solesmes, France, was announced today by the Dom Mocquereau Schola Cantorum Foundation, Inc.

Dom Mocquereau, an eminent liturgical scholar, 80 years old, was credited with a large part in the world-wide restoration of Gregorian chant, which has been formally adopted by the Catholic Church and published in its official editions. He was the author of thirteen volumes of the Paleographie Musicale and the Nombre Musical Gregorienne.

He visited this country twice: in 1920 he directed the International Congress of Gregorian Chant at St. Patrick's Cathedral, this city, and in 1922 he came to teach at the Summer session of the Pius X School of Liturgical Music.

Dom Mocquereau was a Frenchman, born at La Tessonalle, near Cholet, France. He studied music at Paris and was only a boy when he played the 'cello in Dancla's chamber music concerts. In 1875 he joined the order of the Benedictines of Solesmes. He lived and worked at the ancient Abbey of Solesmes, founded in 1010, until the expulsion of the monks from France in 1901. Then he moved to their present home on the Isle of Wight.

Soon after taking holy orders, he became interested in Gregorian music, to which he devoted the remainder of his life. In 1889 there appeared the first of his series of photographic reproductions of medieval manuscripts, with accompanying explanatory monographs, which is known as the Paleographie Musicale. In 1904 Pope Pius X decreed that all subsequent reprints of Gregorian music in the Editio Vaticana must conform to the versions in the Paleographie. Dom Mocquereau also wrote "L'Art Gregorien" and other works on his favorite subject.

DETECTIVE EDWARD TOBIN.

Finger-Print Expert Dead—On the Police Force Since 1893.

Detective Edward Tobin, finger-print expert of the Police Department, died on Friday night at his home, 63 East 230th Street, the Bronx, of an intestinal ailment, at the age of 66. He is survived by a widow.

Detective Tobin joined the department in 1893, was one of the first members of the Bicycle Squad, organized that year, and since 1908 had been in the photograph department, where he became familiar with finger-prints. It was his work which resulted in the arrest in the Fall of 1923 of five men, including the Diamond brothers, for a murder in connection with a $45,000 robbery of bank employes at an elevated railway station in Brooklyn.

He made the identification through finger-prints left in the bandits' deserted car. Three of them were executed, and two were sentencd to life terms.

Dr. Charles O'Donovan.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 25.—Archbishop Michael J. Curley, members of the clergy from many parts of the city and representatives of various religious orders, attended the funeral services for Dr. Charles O'Donovan, who was personal physician to the late Cardinal Gibbons, which were held at the cathedral today.

Scores of relatives and friends of the physician, one of the most prominent Catholic laymen in Baltimore, attended the requiem mass which was said for him by his brother, the Rev. Louis O'Donovan, pastor of St. Martin's Church.

Other Obituary Notices are printed on Page 7, Section Two.

By OLIN DOWNES.

Rimsky-Korsakoff's fantastical and legendary opera, "Sadko," gorgeously mounted, had its American première yesterday afternoon by the Metropolitan Opera Company. According to the public response to the production and by all the signs of yesterday's audience this was one of the most successful novelties produced by the Metropolitan in late seasons.

The richness and fantasy of the stage pictures, suiting well the legendary nature of the theme, spectacles which included the highly anticipated ballet, supposed to take place in the Sea King's palace in the depths of the ocean, and the prevailing scenic novelty of the whole work, had one doubt a great deal to do with its success. But the score of "Sadko" proves to have much music of fresh, melodious "folk" character, some striking recitative in the ancient manner, very fine choruses and an orchestral score which is a blaze of color and varied effect from the first page to the last. The musical style, like the poetry, is partly lyrical, partly epic. Certain songs composed in the style of ancient Russian minstrelsy, sung by Sadko and the young minstrel Niejata, are unique, so far as American experience of Russian opera goes. There is a primitive and bardic quality in these passages not duplicated in other works of Rimsky-Korsakoff known here—a certain primitive and freely rhythmed majesty of speech, highly suggestive of the olden time of the bylinas, which nevertheless forms an impressive and harmonious background for melodies of later derivation. Indeed, the score, like the tale, which is full of disparate elements of pagan and Christian origin, pleasingly jumbled together, seems to have a thousand colors and designs, apparently incongruous, actually emanating from a central conception and enriching it. Mr. Soudeikine's stage settings and costumes envisaged these lines and colors. Rimsky-Korsakoff's score, so admirably interpreted by Mr. Serafin, reflected them.

Probably this is Rimsky-Korsakoff's most effective opera, from the point of view of audience and stage. Certainly its production proved that Russian opera need not be the hopelessly unappreciated exotic that some in America have claimed it to be. How original the fantastic plot! How refreshing in its freedom from cut-worn European conventions of the stage! "Sadko" is now more than thirty years old. Many of its musical characteristics which caused astonishment in 1897 are already relegated to the past. Yet it falls on our eyes and ears today, in spite of a number of thin places, with a sense of extraordinary freshness, and with something of the vastness and grandeur of its native land, as translated in terms of poetry and music by the Russian imagination.

Its Score Is Naive.

It is the quality of this imagination which overcomes certain defects and clichés of the music, or at least compensates for them sufficiently to make the opera significant and suggestive to the imagination today. We know that the original conception of the opera dates from the symphonic poem composed by Rimsky-Korsakoff in his unformed youth as a composer, and that this symphonic poem (which has been heard here in its orchestral form and as an accompaniment interpreted by Diaghileff's ballet) contains the nucleus of the music of the opera. Its derivations are plain. They are Liszt, Wagner and Bolokireff. This was in a day before the Ring had been performed. The opera was mounted thirty years after the symphonic poem. Wagnerisms in music were then general, and so instinctive that few composers could avoid them. The young Russians eschewed Wagner, but it is idle to say that the score of "Sadko" would have been written as it is without him. Nevertheless, the imagination which created the youthful tone-poem and which, in that tone-poem and its eventual magnification into the opera, utilized discoveries of many European composers, was completely Russian. It was also—and let us be thankful for this—truly naive. The naiveté of the score of "Sadko" is one of its most grateful and convincing characteristics. Rimsky-Korsakoff was more a pagan and nature-worshiper when he wrote this opera than he himself may have known. He writes with the old faith, not the new one, the faith that created Russian myth and poetry, and that regarded the imaginary creatures of lake, forest and sea as tame domestic animals! No wonder that Sadko fearlessly descended to the floor of the deep, got on the best of terms with the old Sea-King, ensorcelled his daughter by his magic art and lived to bring up a wife and family on the proceeds, and tell the tale!

We listen and watch this tale unfold, and enjoy taking it in good faith. It may be that the River Volkhova, and the depths of the sea, have too much to do with the River Rhine and its gladsome daughters. We may listen now to a delicious folksong, again to an epic chorus, again to tonal metamorphoses, accompanying strange shifting panoramas on the stage, which spoke of Berlioz as well as Liszt, and Italy as well as Russia. But in toto the effect is racial and deliciously naive, and decorative rather than passionate or dramatic (the one human accent in the whole score is the complaint of Lioubava, Sadko's wife).

Orchestration Is Gorgeous.

But if the period of this work is considered, it has astonishingly prophetic things in it. The whole-tone scale which Debussy made famous is there. The use of nodal harmony, which later became fashionable in Europe, is extensively employed by Rimsky-Korsakoff, as by other Russians. The orchestration, though inspired by Liszt and Berlioz, is really his own, and incomparably gorgeous, varied and transparent.

Realizing, no doubt, how much of the effect of this opera depended upon the stage, Mr. Gatti-Casazza had commissioned Mr. Soudeikine to create the scenery, and this Mr. Soudeikine has accomplished with an unstinted invention and fantasy. These are some of the best sets we have seen at the Metropolitan. The scenes of the feast, of the market place, of the sea and Sadko's ship; the transformation scene as he descends to the Sea King's palace; the ballet of the rivers, the fishes and monsters of the deep, some of which crustacea, animalcula, monstrosities, &c., were funny rather than fantastic! The dragon Fafner was recognized, and hardly made a representative sea monster. Other deep-sea specimens caused laughter. But, taken all in all, this ballet; the sea, tossed by the wild dance of the old King and his court, illuminated by lightning flashes, then subsiding to darkness and immobility after the exorcism of St. Nicholas; and the finale transformation, were expressive of the spirit of the opera. There should have been a burst of brilliant sunlight on the shores of Lake Ilmen, at the end of the second tableau, to Rimsky-Korsakoff's great chord of E-flat. Other scenic details could be heightened, but when the limitations of the mechanical apparatus of the ancient Metropolitan stage are considered, this achievement was creditable in an exceptional degree.

Some scenes, such as those of the banquet and the market place, are too crowded, but Mr. Lert, in general, also acquitted himself with imagination.

Johnson Sings Sadko Admirably.

There are two "star" parts in this opera, those of Sadko and the sea princess Volkhova. Mr. Johnson's Sadko was admirably sung from the point of view of beauty of tone, clear and excellent French diction and prevailing elegance of style. In so far he graced the part. In another way he was deficient, for there is a certain grandeur of bearing and style that the minstrel Sadko, poet and hero of legend, had not yesterday. When the bard smites his harp—or rather his gusli—we are justified in anticipating a broader and more heroic delivery. Perhaps this is asking too much of Mr. Johnson's voice and style. A singer cannot be expected to go out of his particular métier. Granting the musicianship and the charm of an accomplished singer's performance, it may be said that the ideal Sadko would have been more credibly a bard of ancient legend, and that one that would have felt in his voice and bearing more of his background of Russian nature and the Russian legendary part.

But Miss Fleischer's impersonation of the sea princess must be considered one of the best parts she has undertaken at the Metropolitan. She sang with a sensuousness of tone in the love-music which conferred upon it an intensity not always vouchsafed by the pen of Rimsky-Korsakoff. The color of the tone was cunningly altered as text and situation demanded this. A colder and more fantastical quality was reserved for those moments when the sea princess revealed her magical power and her inhuman ancestry. This color changed in the love-duet with Sadko in the second tableau. It changed once more when, suddenly imperious, she bade the minstrel seek the fish of gold in Ilmen Lake. In bearing and in effect the figure on the stage had illusion. And there was the poignant and sensuous accent when she kissed the sleeping minstrel, and, parting from him forever, melted, before the eyes of the audience—thanks to cunning scenic transformation—into the river Vohlkov, flowing to the sea.

Miss Bourskaya, sometimes shrill of tone, was nevertheless, especially in her part, singing her lament in the third tableau with a peasant accent, a simplicity, a certain wail fitted to the moment and the music. It cannot be said that the three songs of the merchants in the market place were done justice, unless we except the breadth and appropriate roughness of Mr. Gustafson's Varangian merchant, and the good intention of Mr. Diaz's song of India, which was none too good in sustained quality of tone or pitch. Mr. Basiola sang the Venetian's song poorly, shouting, chopping the melodic line, ending triumphantly on his best note. Miss Swarthout's Niejata was sung intelligently, if not with all the fullness, resonance, and breadth that the bardic solos demand.

Serafin Masterfully Conducts.

These were the principal parts. A number of the other minor rôles, such as the jesters of Messrs. d'Angelo and Bada, were hopelessly Italian in style, nor were the attendant jesters either Russian or ingenious in their fun. They succeeded principally in getting in the way. The abiding excellence of the performance was its co-ordination; the intelligence of the leading soloists; above all, Miss Fleischer; the splendid singing of the choruses, which included much of the best music in the opera, much of the choreography of the ballet and Mr. Serafin's masterly exposition of the orchestral part. Therein was the color, the imagery, the poetical intention of the creator of the score.

Indeed, the orchestra is Rimsky-Korsakoff's court of first and last resort. If his ideas fail him he has nevertheless an instrumental imagination which supplies tonal painting where it cannot always furnish the original and revealing melodic idea. Mr. Serafin felt all that there was in the music and translated it accordingly. He, Mr. Soudeikine, the chorus and the leading artists and others who had to do with scenic effect supplied an essentially vital and pictorial production which brought to Rimsky-Korsakoff's opera the credit that it deserved and added a generally brilliant episode to Metropolitan history.

GATTI VIEWS FROM STAGE.

Tells of Great Difficulty in Staging Spectacle in Limited Space.

Giulio Gatti-Casazza, the Metropolitan's general manager, keenly anxious for the fate of his chief novelty this season, watched the American première of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Sadko" yesterday from backstage. During the submarine ballet he had his chair moved forward to a niche of the proscenium arch, just at the curtain's edge.

To a caller there the impresario spoke of what the company had done in creating the elaborate counterfeit presentment of an underworld "that never was" on land or sea, a phantasmagoria of sea serpent, seahorse, horseshoe crab, octopus, goldfish, silverfish, crustaceans of every size, from giant lobsters to the least shrimps of the pony ballet.

"Remember, I am deeply sensible always," Mr. Gatti said, "of the honor America has done me in giving me a place unique in the operatic world. Mais, regardez!" he exclaimed in French, the language his singers were using on the stage at the moment.

"See for yourself what he have done, and with what means. Where else in the world would one be asked to produce such a spectacle on a stage not only limited in space but bare of modern facilities and unmechanized?

"This audience would be amazed to know something of the inconceivable difficulty under which we have operated today. And not only today, but equally with our other novelties and entire repertory to date—thirty-five operas in the brief space of three months.

"Where would any company have prepared 'The Girl of the Golden West,' in a prduction such as we gave it, or 'Don Giovanni,' which has mechanical as well as musical difficulty, or 'Luisa Miller,' and now 'Sadko'? The public has been pleased, no doubt, but it cannot realize what this has meant in a theatre which is practically that of a former century."

DOROTHY GORDON HAILED.

Last "Young People's Concert Hour" Given at the Town Hall.

Dorothy Gordon, assisted at the piano by Adele Holsten, gave the third and last "young people's concert hour" yesterday afternoon at the Town Hall. Her program included many favorites like "The Old Woman and the Pedlar," "The Barley Straw" and "When I Was a Young Girl," the last by request.

"Jan's Courtship," another request, was sung by Miss Gordon for the boys who had written her that only girls were being considered.

Other groups included characteristic children's songs from Continental sources, four musical settings by M. Wood Hill of Aesop's fables, "For the Very Young" and "Now We Are Six."

The young people and grown-ups in the audience gave frequent evidence of their pleasure in Miss Gordon's songs and her illustrative action and explanations.

TAPESTRY OF 1750 SELLS FOR $10,000

P. W. Shaw Also Pays $8,000 for Five Painted Fans as Kessler Sale Closes.

AUCTION TOTALS $204,977

Furniture, Rugs and Other Art Objects of Great Age Bring $161,772 for Day.

The three-day sale, ending yesterday, at the Rains Galleries of the furniture, tapestries and art objects from the Paris home of the late Mrs. George A. Kessler, totaled $204,977, yesterday's session amounting to $161,772.

An eighteenth century Brussels tapestry from a cartoon by Le Clerc, coat of arms of William of Orange of England, with Knight of the Garter on border, dated 1750, 9 feet 8 inches by 8 feet, sold for $10,000 to P. W. Shaw, who also bought the five famous fans at $8,000, or $1,600 each. Each blade of these fans was painted by a celebrated artist. In 1906, when sold at the American Art Association, they brought $43,000.

Sam Schepps bought a seventeenth century Brussels tapestry from a cartoon by J. F. Van Den Hecke, "La Science" 12 feet 10 inches square for $7,250 and paid the same sum for another tapestry of the same period from a cartoon by the same artist, "L'Apotheose de Louis XIV." Mr. Schepps also bought a Louis XVI commode signed by Sageot 1770, for $1,275.

O. Franckel bought a pair of bronze groups of the Louis XIV period, "Daphne and Apollo," after Le Bernini, and "Enlèvment de Proserpine par Pluton," after Jean 2d de Bologne, on Buhl pedestals from the Duc de Beauforts Estates for $3,200. He also paid $1,400 for an original pastel of an "English Lady" attributed to John Russell; $1,000 for a pastel of "Mrs. Jackson," attributed to the same artist, and $1,000 for a Kermanshah rug of medallion pattern.

A. J. Seligsberg paid $4,000 for a Kermanshah prayer rug with eight borders, and $900 for a still-life painting of flower subjects by Jean Baptists. L. Golden paid $2,250 for a painting by Greuze, "Girl with Dove."

A private buyer who concealed his name paid $2,600 for a set of four original colored engravings painted by Wheatley and engraved by Annis. Seligman, Ray & Co. bought a set of three original colored French engravings by Janinet, "L'Aveu Difficile," "L'Indiscretion" and "La Comparaison" for $1,950 and a Louis XVI ormolu and Sevrès clock by Dubois, Paris, 1780, flanked by two female figures for $1,500. Vivian Siegel paid $1,150 for a carved and gilded Louis XVI bed covered in Beauvais point blue satin, with drapes to match for $1,500; $1,000 for a Chinese ivory group of two girls, one with fan, the other with a basket of flowers, and also $850 for a pair of Louis XVI Kingwood commodes. Mrs. Mecklewait paid $1,200 for a royal princess Bokhara rug.

Molinari Leads Student Concert.

The Philharmonic Symphony Society, Bernardino Molinari conducting, devoted its student concert last evening at Carnegie Hall to Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in A minor, Beethoven's fourth symphony, Malipiero's "Pause del Silenzio," Casella's "La Giara" and Richard Wagner's "The Ride of the Valkyries." Mr. Molinari conducted with his wonted intensity and was warmly applauded by the audience, receiving an ovation at the end of the Wagner work.

Bishop Anderson Still Very Ill.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25 (AP).—The condition of the Most Rev. Charles Palmerston Anderson, presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in America, was reported still critical today following prostration by a heart attack Tuesday. His physicians said the general condition of the prelate was "unchanged."

LOUIS GRAVEURE GIVES RECITAL AS TENOR

Artist Who Achieved Success as Baritone Sings Many Opera Airs.

Louis Graveure, who has joined the ranks of tenors after achieving success as a baritone, gave a recital yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, assisted by Lewis Richards, harpsichordist, and Sanford Schlussel, piano accompanist. The singer's program, which contained more operatic music than is customary on the recital platform, was obviously designed to give ample scope for the display of the recently developed upper register of a voice notable for its range and flexibility.

Mr. Graveure has succeeded in gaining a marked degree of freedom, power and resonance in the production of these upper tones. In doing so, however, he has sacrificed an appreciable degree of the native richness and individual timbre of the voice, which if it seldom sounds driven or shrill, has a "white" quality that after a time verges on the monotonous.

The opera airs, which were sung with the impeccable taste of a finished musician, included the "O Paradis," from "L'Africaine"; Lohengrin's Narrative and the Prize Song, from "Die Meistersinger"; "Non piangere Liu" and "Nessun dorma," from "Turandot"; the "Questa o' Quella," from "Rigoletto," and an excerpt, sung in German, from "The Magic Flute." Songs in French by Chausson, Bember and Bachelet, the Old English "Pretty Creature" and "Three Fishers," and Purcell's "When I am laid in earth" completed the list, to which were added the Vermont folk-song, "The Birds' Courting," and other encores.

Mr. Richards played with his customary fleetness of touch and delicate phrasing several works for the harpsichord by John Bull, William Byrd, John Ayrilton, Handel, Rameau, Desmarets and Mozart.

CONCERT FOR CHILDREN.

Schelling Conducts Philharmonic in First of Second Series.

The first of the second series of children's concerts by the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Ernest Schelling took place yesterday morning in Carnegie Hall. The five members of the Society of Ancient Instruments from Paris were the assisting artists, playing on their antique stringed instruments the four sections of C. F. Clement's "Les Récreations de la Campagne." René Pollain, a member of the orchestra, also played the solo viola part in De Lamarter's "Serbian Folksong" arrangement. Other items on the program were the overture to Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor," Bach's Arioso for Strings, Debussy's "Golliwog's Cakewalk" and Dvorak's "Slavonic Dance."

Henry Street Musicale Benefit.

The annual beenfit musicale of the Henry Street Music School will be held on Sunday night at the Junior League clubhouse, 221 East Seventy-first Street. The musical half of the program will include specialties by Jack Buchanan and Tilly Losch of the cast of "Wake Up and Dream," Jack Donahue, star of "Sons o' Guns," and Gertrude Lawrence. Those on the musical half of the program will include the Stradivarius quartet, Nina Koshetz, soprano, and Fraser Gange, baritone. From Friday to Sunday night, the Henry Players will present J. M. Barrie's "A Kiss for Cinderella" at the Playhouse, 466 Grand Street, under the direction of Eva M. Fry.

"Il Trovatore" Draws Throng.

A special performance of "Il Trovatore" for the benefit of the Italian Hospital attracted a capacity audience last night to the Metropolitan Opera House. The opera, seldom heard in recent seasons on Broadway, was sung by a cast of favorite artists that included Rosa Ponselle, Julia Claussen, Minnie Egener and Messrs. Lauri-Volpi, Danise, Pasero, Paltrinieri and Gandolfi, Mr. Bellezza conducted.

SOLOMON GOLUB SINGS OWN COMPOSITIONS

He Is Assisted by Five Artists in Testimonial Concert Given for Him at the Town Hall.

Solomon Golub, Jewish poet, composer and singer, appeared in a program of modern Yiddish lyrics, some of which were representative examples of his own poetry and music. The recital was a testimonial concert in his honor.

It was announced from the platform that Naomi Ritter, soprano, although suffering from a recently broken ankle as the result of an accident, had insisted upon appearing. A few moments later the curtain parted and disclosed Miss Ritter supporting the injured foot on a chair. Her performance of Mr. Golub's "Sabbath Eve," "At the River" and "The Fiddler," set to Yiddish words by various authors, apparently did not suffer in the least, for they were sung with much understanding and native feeling.

The program was intended to present divers aspects of Jewish life and thought, containing, however, a universal appeal. The poetry, culled from selections of the last three decades, included words by Mr. Golub, Leivick, Einhorn, Bialistosky, Greenblatt, Almi, Lieb, Halpern, Slonim, Reisen and Bloom.

The other assisting artists were Nancy Morgan, harp; Namu Goroshin, 'cellist, who played Mr. Golub's "Sabbath Twilight" and "A Mother's Lament, and Lilyan Rosoff, soprano. David Sapiro was at the piano.

The audience was invited to sing Mr. Golub's setting of "Night" by Greenblatt and Reisen's "Boruch Atho."

MUSIC NOTES.

Mme. Schumann-Heink arrived here yesterday from the West and is staying at the Hotel St. Regis.

Franz Kneisel, son of the late leader of the Kneisel String Quartet, is to give a violin recital at the Town Hall on the evening of Feb. 25.

David Mannes last night conducted the final symphony concert of the current series at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The second series will follow in March.

Begins tomorrow!

ORATORICAL CONTEST WILL OPEN ON FEB. 3

Competition on Constitution Offers Greater Rewards to Pupils Than Previously.

2 AWARDS TO EACH SCHOOL

Regional Winner Will Receive $1,000, Trip to Europe and Gold Medal.

CHAIRMEN ARE SELECTED

Four-Minute Ex Tempore Talk and Six-Minute Prepared Oration Included in Test.

The National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution, now one of the outstanding collective efforts of American secondary schools, will open for the seventh year on Feb. 3. THE NEW YORK TIMES again will conduct the contest in the region comprising New York City, Westchester, Long Island and Northern New Jersey—one of seven regions into which the country as a whole is divided.

Educational and patriotic in purpose, the National Oratorical Contest is financed and sponsored annually by thirty-five American newspapermen. They offer it as their contribution to better citizenship, and design it to aid greater interest in and respect for the American Constitution among coming voters.

The 1930 contest offers even greater honors and awards to the high school boys and girls in this region than in the four other years it has been conducted here by THE NEW YORK TIMES. Ex tempore speaking will be combined with delivery of prepared orations for the first time, thus making success broader and the more convincing. This year there will also be a prize for every entrant school. Two prizes are offered, in fact—one for the best written oration, and one for the best delivered oration.

Reginal Finals May 16.

Town Hall again will be the centre for the regional finals, as for the past four years. This championship will be held Friday evening, May 16. All eight contestants will receive the same prizes awarded in the other years, and the winner will receive $1,000, a Summer trip to Europe, with all expenses paid, and a gold medal. He or she will qualify also for the national championship to be held at Washington, D. C., Saturday evening, May 24, meeting there the six other regional champions. The national champion will represent the United States at the fifth International Oratorical Contest to be held at the capital on Saturday evening, Oct. 25.

The regional prizes to be awarded by THE NEW YORK TIMES in 1930 in this region as a whole, exclusive of the New York City junior public high schools, are as follows:

Town Hall Regional Finals.

FIRST PRIZE—$1,000 in cash, trip to Europe and a gold medal.
SECOND PRIZE—$500 and a gold medal.
THIRD PRIZE—$250 and a gold medal.
FOURTH, FIFTH, SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH PRIZES—$50 each and silver medals.

23 Borough and District Finals.

FIRST PRIZE—$15 each.
SECOND PRIZE—$10 each.
THIRD PRIZE—$5 each.

Prizes for Each Entrant School.

RESEARCH PRIZE—$10.
ORATORICAL PRIZE—$10 and a bronze medal.

The prizes to be awarded in 1930 by THE NEW YORK TIMES to the junior public high schools of New York City are as follows:

Town Hall City Championship.

FIRST PRIZE—$100 and a gold medal.
SECOND PRIZE—$75 and a gold medal.
THIRD PRIZE—$50 and a gold medal.
FOURTH, FIFTH AND SIXTH PRIZES—$25 each and silver medals.

Three Borough Finals.

FIRST PRIZE—$10 each.
SECOND PRIZE—$5 each.

Prizes for Each School.

RESEARCH PRIZE—$5.
ORATORICAL PRIZE—$5 and a bronze medal.

Supplementary ex tempore speaking and, as shown above, "a prize for every school" are national and regional innovations, respectively, which are being introduced in the 1930 National Oratorical Contest for the first time.

To Stress Ex Tempore Speaking.

Ex tempore speaking will be prescribed as an additional test of contestants in the later stages of the regional and national competition this year. For example, at the Town Hall regional finals here and at the eight regional semi-finals preceding it, the speakers will give six-minute prepared orations and follow in rotation, after forty minutes' study, with four-minute extemporaneous talks. They will be judged upon both performances.

The new ex tempore feature has been patterned here after the plan which Colgate University has developed successfully in its annual interscholastic contests during the past fifteen years. This use of the "Colgate plan" was made possible through the courtesy and cooperation of Dr. George B. Cutten, president, and Professor Elmer W. Smith, department of public speaking. Both placed the plan at the disposal of participants in the National Oratorical Contest as a contribution to the cause of improved public speaking.

Regional Prizes Increased.

The regional prizes offered by THE NEW YORK TIMES this year have been substantially increased to provide prizes for every school. Save in the Assemblyman E. S. Moran Will Seek Amendment of State Constitution for Tribunal.

ALSO ASKS JUVENILE PRISON

Segregation of First Offenders From Hardened Criminals Is Planned in Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 25.—A new constitutional court, to be known as the "Juvenile Court," is contemplated in a bill which will be introduced on Monday evening by Assemblyman Edward S. Moran of the Twelfth District in Kings.

The proposed new tribunal would occupy an intermediary position between the Children's Courts and already existing legal machinery of criminal jurisdiction. It would have jurisdiction over cases involving defendants between the ages of 16 and 20 years.

The measure will come before the Legislature in the form of a concurrent resolution to amend the State Constitution and will require favorable action by the present Legislature and that of next year, as well as popular approval at a referendum before the law-making body can pass the necessary legislation to render the constitutional amendment operative.

Another objective in view is to empower the Legislature to make provision for the erection of a juvenile prison, in order that, with a separate court also, there shall be complete segregation of first offenders from the hardened criminals with whom they now come in frequent contact at the penal institutions of the State.

This objective, if attained, it was pointed out at the capitol, would solve another problem now much to the fore in discussions relating to crime and its punishment, and the overcrowding at practically all the prisons, held responsible, in part at least, for recent uprisings at Auburn and Dannemora.

Criminal cases coming before the Juvenile Court would include both misdemeanors and felonies, the former to be tried as in the Court of Special Sessions without a jury, the latter to be determined at jury trials as in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, the Court of General Sessions and the county courts. Original jurisdiction in juvenile cases would still be exercised by the magistrates' courts and by the grand jury in felony cases.

To keep youthful offenders apart from habitual criminals at these early stages, however, it is proposed to establish separate detention pens for the juveniles. There would be very extensive probation and investigating machinery connected with the proposed new tribunal and its judges would have wide latitude in the imposition of sentences, without regard to punishments now fixed by the penal law.

"I appreciate the fact that this legislation proposes a radical change in the treatment of youthful wrongdoers," Assemblyman Moran said in discussing his proposed Constitutional amendment. "But I feel confident that it will prove the solution of a much discussed and perplexing problem confronting society. It will provide the means for segregating the youthful offender from the old time, hardened criminal.

"I propose that the juvenile prison I have in mind be run on the order of a military school, the sole object being to save these boys from a life of crime. There would be a long period of supervision by trained probation officers upon their discharge from the institution. It will mean the expenditure of a large sum of money by the State, but I am confident most people will feel that this will be justified. As two years and more must pass before the project can be acted upon, it will give time to provide for financing the work."

FOR NEW POWER BOARD.

Celler Files Plan for Independent Commission, as Urged by Hoover.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—A bill to amend the Federal Water Power act so that, as recommended by President Hoover, the Federal Power Commission would be set up as an independent board, with full-time commissioners, was introduced in the House today by Representative Celler, Democrat, of New York.

Mr. Celler proposed that the commission should consist of three men, appointed by the President for terms of seven years each, two to receive $10,000 annual salary each and the other, the chairman, $12,500. The commission is now composed of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of War.

The bill also provides for a technical staff and for an expert accountancy service to conduct the necessary audits of the books and to handle licenses of projects under the jurisdiction of the commission.

GALES DELAY REPAIR OF ATLANTIC CABLES

But Companies With Five of Twelve Breaks Fixed Carry All News of Naval Parley.

WORKERS FACE HUGE TASK

Have Laid 300 Miles of Wire Despite Handicaps Since Earthquakes of Nov. 18.

Although only five of the twelve ocean cables which were snapped by the undersea earthquake of Nov. 18 have been repaired in the ten weeks which have elapsed since the upheaval of the ocean bottom, the cables that are in operation are able to handle with little difficulty the additional traffic resulting from the London naval conference, officials of the principal cable companies reported yesterday.

To restore communication on the five cables already reconnected by the Western Union, Commercial Cable Company and French Telegraph and Cable Company, 292 miles of new cable, costing on an average $1,000 per mile, had to be laid. Five ships belonging to these three companies are still fighting the Atlantic gales in the attempt to undo the work of destruction accomplished in a few hours by the quake. The persistent bad weather and difficulties of Winter repair work in mid-ocean are blamed by cable officials for the delay in completing the repairs. They regard the work already done as a noteworthy achievement.

Slight Delays Reported.

Slight delays on naval conference material have been reported in some cases, but executives of the companies said the lines were able to handle all that was sent to them. The Western Union was reported as handling without delay practically all business, the Commercial Cables operating at more than 85 per cent of capacity, and the French company, which suffered the greatest damage, at little more than 50 per cent. The Western Union connecting cable via North Sydney to Newfoundland, has been speeded up since the earthquake, it was said, and messages are being sent at three times the former normal rate.

Only two of the five cables repaired are actually transatlantic lines, the other three being coastal connections for the transatlantic cables. The Western Union has reconnected its important high speed line between New York and Newfoundland, which took 100 miles of new cable. Two lines of the Commercial Cable Company, the No. 4 and No. 6 cables between Canso, Nova Scotia, and the Azores, have been repaired with 120 miles of new cable. The French company has restored its coastal line joining Orleans on Cape Cod with St. Pierre et Miquelon, for which repeated efforts and seventy-two miles of new cable were necessary.

In addition, the British Imperial cable, connecting Halifax with Harbor Grace, Newfoundland, broken in several places, has been spliced by the repair ship Cambria, which is at sea again to repair that company's Halifax-Azores lines. All of these repairs have been made in the last four weeks.

Repair Ships Battling Gales.

The seven unrepaired lines include four transatlantic and three connecting cables. Four of the five repair ships belonging to the three major companies, weighted down by coatings of ice and tossed in stormy seas, are in the region 200 miles south of Newfoundland, where the greatest damage was done, looking for one-inch cables lost on the ocean bottom. The fifth is cruising 200 miles east of Cape Race, Newfoundland.

Two of the seven ships originally sent out by the three companies have been diverted to other tasks after aiding materially in the repairs so far achieved. The Cyrus Field of the Western Union is off the coast of Nova Scotia working on that company's Canso-Duxbury cable, reported out of commission from unknown causes on Jan. 2. The All-America has been returned by the Commercial Cable Company to the All-America Company, and is doing repair work off Cape Hatteras.

An example of the difficulties encountered is seen in the Western Union report that its vessels have lost between fifteen and twenty miles of steel grapnel rope, used in grappling for the broken cable ends. "Standing by for gales" has been the almost daily report from the ship working on the New York-Horta cable, according to company officials.

Miles of Cable Buried.

All three of the principal companies reported that many miles of cable had evidently been buried by the undersea catastrophe. The parts of the old lines picked up were "torn apart like cotton twine" and "mangled for 1,500 feet from the end," messages from the ship captains said.

The Lord Kelvin of the Western Union is now 900 miles northeast of New York and 210 miles south of Newfoundland, laboring on that company's second broken cable between New York and Bay Roberts, Newfoundland. There are two breaks in this cable, 167 miles apart. The Lord Kelvin, after many vain attempts, has succeeded in raising and repairing the southern break, and by electrical testing has found the cable to be in good condition for 95 miles to the north. The Dominia, abandoning temporarily its work on the Azores cable, is trying to raise the southern end of the northern break and establish communication with the Lord Kelvin in order to determine whether the cable is good for the entire distance between the two breaks.

The third broken line of the Western Union, that between New York and Horta in the Azores, has presented exceptional obstacles because the break is at a depth of nearly three miles, and the rough seas have made it almost impossible to lower the grapnels or to tell whether they were cutting into the ocean bottom or not. Officials are not sure just how this problem is to be solved. The Survey Shows Loans to Employes Widespread; Two-Year Total of 108 Concerns Is $2,000,000

Proof that many New York workmen and "white-collar" men faced with unexpected financial emergencies need no longer turn to loan sharks for relief was cited yesterday by the Merchants' Association of New York, which made public a survey it had just completed showing that many large manufacturing, industrial and commercial houses now make loans to their employes.

Although definite figures were not received from all of the 182 companies, representing all branches of business, which replied to the association, it was found that 108 concerns had loaned their employes $2,000,000 or more in the past two years. In that period all but forty-one of the 182 made such loans and seventeen of the forty-one indicated their willingness to make loans. In 108 companies employes borrowed in a total of 7,533 instances, the amounts ranging from $3 to $10,000, and most being less than $500.

The survey established that many of the companies lent money to their employes reluctantly. Thirty-four of the 182 concerns said they did not favor the practice. Nevertheless, fifteen of these admitted that they had granted loans during the past two years.

Only nineteen companies reported cases in which employes had failed to repay loans, seventeen adding that they had lent a total of $337,483 with a loss through failure to repay of $3,631.61, giving a loss ratio of about four-tenths of 1 per cent on $883,893 which eighty-eight companies reported as the total of their loans. The losses were spread over forty-eight individual cases.

Illness, hospital expenses and death were not the only reasons for which the employes borrowed. Other reasons included marriage, insurance, taxes, moving, vacations, mortgage foreclosures, automobiles, radios, homes, education and the purchase of stocks, bonds and other securities.

A wide variety of borrowing methods was reported by the companies. Many lent money directly and twenty-seven through special funds. The officers of one company contributed their personal means to establish a fund which was placed in the hands of a trustee and loaned for purchases of company stock, the stock being held as collateral. Another company appropriated a revolving fund administered through a committee.

Among all companies where interest was charged the rates ranged from 4 to 12 per cent, six per cent being the most common rate exacted. The 12 per cent rate was found in only one company where it was applied only against so-called small loans.

Thirty-five companies charged interest and nineteen required collateral. Of the thirty-five charging interest, eleven set the rate at 6 per cent on all loans. In the others interest was charged only on certain classes of loans, exemptions depending on the amount of the loan. In other cases exemption was based on the character of the loan, no interest being attached to money applied toward the relief of destitution, death, illness and like emergencies.

Almost universal among the companies surveyed was the policy of requiring that loans be liquidated by the payment of stipulated amounts at regular intervals. Usually these payments took the form of regular salary deductions, sometimes as low as $1 per week. Eighteen companies, however, indicated that they made no prearrangements with borrowing employes, preferring to allow repayments entirely within the borrower's convenience.

MAP EASTERN LINKS TO 38TH ST. TUNNEL

Regional Plan Engineers Lay Out Brooklyn and Queens Approaches for Tube.

FAVOR EXPRESS HIGHWAYS

Route of One Would Use Van Alst Avenue—Underground Roads and Viaducts Proposed.

Detailed engineering studies of the Brooklyn and Queens approaches to the projected Thirty-eighth Street-East River vehicular tunnel were made public yesterday by the Regional Plan of New York and its Environs. The proposals advanced would, according to Harold M. Lewis, executive engineer of the Regional Plan, provide a shorter approach for Queens, and would considerably simplify the construction problems of both approaches.

In the Regional Plan scheme, an express highway system in Brooklyn and Queens would connect up with the tunnel. When these highways are established, it is recommended that they should not be on a toll basis, but that the tunnel itself should be. Connection with an intersecting express highway route using Van Alst Avenue is worked out in the plans.

The explanation of the plan, as outlined by Mr. Lewis, follows:

"The plan would bring the East River tunnel to the street surface at Fifty-first Avenue and Eleventh Street in Long Island City, as proposed in one of the studies made by the Department of Plant and Structures. At the easterly edge of Vernon Boulevard, which would form the portal to this tunnel, the Brooklyn connection would swing downward, passing under the Queens exit to the East River tunnel and over the four Pennsylvania Railroad tunnels, one of which is quite near the surface at this point. It would then swing under Fifty-first Avenue which it follows to a point between Twenty-first and Twenty-third Streets. There it swings southwesterly under Newtown Creek.

"Queens connections with the East River tunnel are complicated by the railroad tracks in this part of Long Island City, particularly by the main passenger line of the Long Island

URGES QUICK BUYING OF BATTLEFIELDS

Assemblyman Esmond Says Saratoga Land Purchase Should Be Completed.

FAVORS GRANT OF $200,000

Organization of Special Board to Care for Oriskang and Bennington Sites Is Recommended.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Appropriation of an additional $200,000 by the Legislature for the purchase of the remaining lands of the Saratoga Battlefield, and the restoration of the battlefields board or some similar agency to look after the Battlefields of Oriskany, Saratoga and Bennington, were advocated by Assemblyman Burton D. Esmond of Saratoga County today.

Assemblyman Esmond pointed out that it had been two years since the Legislature appropriated $190,000 for the purchase of the remaining lands, and that even then the appropriation was cut to $90,000 on the theory of some that the options were too high.

Since then two farms in the battle area have been purchased at option prices under that appropriation, and six have been condemned and will be acquired eventually at a cost in excess of the option prices, according to the witnesses examined in the condemnation proceedings.

Meanwhile the acquisition of farms in the battleground is boosting the prices of farms that ought to be bought for the national shrine at Saratoga, according to Mr. Esmond, who estimates that the total cost of all the lands to be included in the symmetrical park as mapped by the Conservation Department and the former Board on Battlefields and Historic Sights, would approximate $325,000 or $350,000.

Quick Action Is Urged.

"There has been appropriated for the purchase of lands at the Saratoga Battlefield altogether $145,000," said Mr. Esmond, "and $200,000 more would complete the whole job of acquisition of lands for the Battlefield Park.

"This should be done at once, and not by piecemeal, as it will cost the State more in the future to acquire

ENDORSES MEASURE FOR A CRIME BUREAU

Committee of Police Chiefs Association Urges Early Action by Senate.

NEED IS TERMED URGENT

Bill, Which Has Passed the House, Provides a National Clearing House for Police Data.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Legislation establishing at the Department of Justice a general clearing house for information concerning crime and criminals, such as fingerprints, photographs, measurements and other data for use of police agencies in identifying and capturing lawbreakers, probably will be enacted at the current session of Congress.

During the past week the House passed a measure known as the "fingerprint bill," introduced by Representative Graham of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Judiciary Committee. It creates, under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice, a "division of the Bureau of Information to be known as the Division of Identification and Information," which is vested with the duty "of acquiring, collecting, classifying and preserving criminal identification records and the exchanging of said criminal identification records with the duly authorized officials of government agencies, of States, cities and penal institutions."

The bill passed the House by a unanimous vote, and its supporters expect to have it brought before the Senate in the near future. It was prepared by the International Association of Chiefs of Police, and its enactment was recommended by Attorney General Mitchell in his annual report.

Committee Gets Plea for Action.

A statement urging action on the bill was filed today with the Senate Judiciary Comittee, of which Senator Norris is chairman, by Bruce Smith, director of the Committee on Uniform Crime Records, a branch of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, with headquarters in New York City.

"The proposed central bureau for criminal information and identification will be necessary if law enforcement bodies are to be enabled effectively to cope with crime," Mr. Smith said.

"'The surest way to wipe out the criminal is swift apprehension and certain punishment.' The saying is commonplace enough to be trite. Yet the problem of apprehending criminals grows more complicated and difficult to solve daily.

"The astonishingly rapid improvement in means of transportation, such as development and widespread use of the airplane and the constantly expanding network of smooth highways over which the automobile can speed at a bewildering pace, simplifies tremendously the escape of criminals.

"A few years ago reports of a crime could reach the police hours after its commission, and they would be certain their quarry was not far away.

Police Now at Disadvantage.

"Today a start of a few minutes often gives the criminal a lead which makes the chase almost a hopeless task. Give the criminal time to cross State lines, and the authorities immediately are confronted by a wall of conflicting jurisdictions, the necessity of obtaining extradition papers, and other similar problems of which the average citizen knows little.

"To combat the advantages which modern inventions and developments provide the criminal, the police must make use of every method which science can devise.

"One of the most intricate problems they are called upon to solve is identification of the criminal. Who were his associates, where was his home, what were his physical peculiarities and what was his previous record, if any?

Transmission and availability of fingerprints, photographs and other means of identification is of the highest importance. Nowhere in the United States is there a central bureau of crime statistics to which police of any jurisdiction may apply for criminal records when their own files, often haphazardly kept, do not contain the desired information.

"In these days of powerful groups of so-called 'racketeers,' who intimidate high officials and extort millions of dollars annually from business men, when the problem of the masked bandit and other forms of lawlessness is foremost in the minds of law enforcement authorities, much is heard of cooperation and coordination on the part of public agencies as a combative measure.

"That the United States is faced with serious crime conditions is apparent. But what has been done toward bringing about the desired cooperation and coordination of the forces opposed to lawlessness?

Need Called Obvious.

"The necessity for quick and accurate identification of criminals is obvious. How many cases can be recalled wherein there was doubt as to the identity of the accused, and the jurors for that reason refused to convict! How many cases can be recalled where the only clue to the perpetrator of a crime was a fingerprint left behind! How many nation-wide man-hunts have there been in which thousands of photographs of the criminal sought were distributed throughout the country, making the capture only a matter of time!

"A notable case which demonstrates the value of the fingerprint was that of a bank robbery in a Colorado town. Bandits broke into the bank, shot to death the president and his son and the cashier and paying teller and escaped with more than $200,000 in cash and negotiable securities.

"They kidnapped a physician to treat one of the bandits, who had been wounded. They took the physician to the outskirts of the town, and when he had treated the wounded robber they killed the physician.

No One Bids for Mayflower; Yacht's Sale Fails Third Time

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—Apparently nobody wants the former Presidential yacht, Mayflower, at the price of $100,000 put upon it by the navy.

Not a single bid was received today on the third attempt to sell the craft. Twice previously the navy had attempted to dispose of the ship sent into the discard by President Hoover. The high bid the first time was $17,000 and the second time it had mounted to $51,000. Both were rejected, however, as naval officers explained the Mayflower was valued at $100,020.

It was expected that when Spring comes around the navy will try once more to sell the yacht.

N. Y. U. BUILDING WILL OPEN FEB. 3

12-Story Structure to House School of Education's Varied Activities.

DEDICATION PLANS BEGUN

Many Prominent Persons Accept Invitations to Ceremonies Beginning Feb. 27.

The new twelve-story building of New York University's School of Education will be ready for occupancy on Feb. 3, the beginning of the university's second term, it was announced yesterday by Dean John W. Withers and Dean Milton E. Loomis, under whose joint supervision the structure was planned. The building is located at Greene and Fourth Streets at the university's Washington Square centre.

Extensive plans are under way for the dedication ceremonies to be held on Feb. 27, 28 and March 1. Among those who have accepted invitations to the ceremonies are:

Dr. WILLIAM JOHN COOPER, United States Commissioner of Education.
Mrs. DAVID C. MEARS, president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.
DAVID SARNOFF, president of the Radio Corporation of America.
CLIFFORD W. BEERS, founder and secretary of the National Committee of Mental Hygiene.
Dr. FRANKWOOD E. WILLIAMS, medical director of the National Committee for Mental Hygiene.
E. K. HALL, vice president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.
Dr. LINSLY WILLIAMS, president of the New York Academy of Medicine.
Dr. FREDERICK W. MARONEY, president of the American Physical Education Society.

The new building is said to be one of the largest and best equipped university schools of education in the country. It contains 120,000 square feet of floor space and will accommodate about 3,000 students. The architecture is fundamentally Gothic although many of the characteristics of modern American buildings are to be found in the design.

The structure includes an auditorium, two complete gymnasium units, thirty-six private music studios and specially equipped laboratories and workshops for the various departments in the school, in addition to six large class rooms. The roof is finished for an outdoor playground.

The auditorium on the ground floor will seat 450 people. The stage is equipped with a large switchboard and the most modern stage lighting. A fireproof motion picture projection room and an organ loft also are provided.

Two complete gymnastic units, one for men and the other for women, will occupy two floors each. These units are practically identical, each gymnasium occupying 60 by 90 feet. In addition there are large rooms for boxing, wrestling, dancing, fencing and other special sports and exercises.

On the sixth floor are the laboratories for experimental physiology. The immediate problem to be taken up will be the development of a standard physical examination comparable to the standard intelligence test.

The seventh floor will house the department of business education with offices and laboratories equipped with an extensive collection of office machinery. On the eighth floor are six large classrooms which will be used by all departments. The department of music education has twenty-five private practice studios and eleven studios for individual instruction on the ninth floor as well as a large orchestra room.

A completely furnished three-room practice apartment is one of the features of the home economics department on the tenth floor. According to present plans, groups of twelve girls will take over and operate the apartment for six-week periods.

The eleventh and twelfth floors will be shared by the department of art education and industrial arts.

BRITONS WIN WORLD PRIZES

Lead Normal and Teachers College Sections in Seabury Awards.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Jan. 25 (AP).—Winners of the annual world essay contest for prizes offered by the Misses Helen and Mary Seabury of this city were announced here today. They are:

Normal school and teachers, college section—First prize, $75, Miss Victoria Armstrong of Furzedown Training College, London, England; second prize, $50, Miss Edna Maragaret Goff of Louisville Normal School; third prize, $25, Miss Katherine Turner of Illinois State Normal University.

Second school section—First prize, $75, Mervy Guy Terrell of Queen Elizabeth's Hospital, Bristol, England; second prize, $50, Miss Lillian Libman of Girls' Latin School, Boston; third prize, $25, Clyde Kirby, Central High School of Tulsa, Okla.

The normal group wrote on "The Influence of Education in Eliminating War," the secondary group on "Above All Nations Is Humanity."

THRILL AT AMUNDSEN CAIRN

Leaving Rock Hammer Upon It, Sledgers Turned Back Over the Perilous Trail to Base.

This is the second instalment of Dr. Gould's account of the Antarctic exploration trip of the Byrd geological sledging party. On Friday, he told of the trek to the Queen Maud Mountains, the establishing of a base and the ascent of Mount Nansen to a rock layer.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LITTLE AMERICA, Antarctica, Jan. 25.—On Dec. 8 we moved further westward to get at another spur of Mount Nansen, and Norman Vaughan, Ed Goodale, Mike Thorne and I climbed again to the rocks—up ice faces where we had to chop our steps, and over ragged, pinnacled columns of basalt—lots of fun and amazingly interesting rocks.

Another day's work about this side of Mount Nansen, and then we headed back down the glacier to make preparations for our trip eastward along the foot of the range. What a riot it is driving the dog teams down the steep slopes of the glacier! The sledges are rough-locked—ropes are put around the runners to prevent their sliding easily, and then the driver yells "Yake!" and tries to keep his team from getting too near another team, and away from any chance crevasses.

Coming down, Norm's team and Eddie's got too close together and mixed in one grand fight. I was sliding along between the sledges. Immediately the fight commenced, and purely from the standpoint of self-preservation, I tried to stop, but instead I slid right into the middle of the mêlée, and in trying to extricate myself from the jam without getting bitten I parted the dogs, and have not yet confessed to the drivers that I did not deliberately try to separate the dogs for them. I am sure an awkward dog driver, anyhow, so that when I made a grand splurge like this one I hated to confess that it was accidental.

Failed to Find Cache.

Before returning to Strom Camp we climbed what we believed to be Mount Betty, both to make a search for a cache left there by Amundsen eighteen years ago and to get a look up the eastern part of Axel Heiberg Glacier. We failed to find the cache and did not get much of a view of Axel Heiberg. We returned to our base camp to make ready for our proposed eastern trip.

On the 12th, Ed Goodale and I made a successful search for the cache of food and gasoline laid down by Admiral Byrd before the polar flight. We brought the food back to camp and glad to have it, for it gave us a great additional margin of safety for carrying out our plans without taking too long chances.

On the morning of the 13th—and it was Friday too—we started on our eastern trip. To our left the barrier was heavily blanketed with clouds, but it was brilliant sunny weather over the mountains, and what a setting for our start! Ahead and disappearing toward the east a great range of mountains, unknown and unexplored—fifteen miles away to our right was Mt. Nansen in all his glory.

A great sight is this mountain, dignified and grand, as befits anything named for such a man as Fridtjof Nansen.

We camped part way up Axel Heiberg glacier, with Mount Ruth Gade towering above us—a fairyland setting in this world of white in the brilliant sun.

Snowbound Three Days.

How different it was the next morning—sky overcast and snow beginning to fall! For three days we were snowbound with a fall of sixteen inches of soft wet snow, and so warm that it melted on everything it touched. We were wet and, of course, very cold, much colder than we had been at 25 below, when we could keep dry.

Time hung heavy on our hands. When we left Little America each man was allowed to bring one book, but, of course, these had been left at Strom Camp when we started eastward.

Some one has brought a pack of cards, so we played hearts with our daily issue of chocolate for stakes.

How different our camp looked when the sun finally came back! The dogs, as they lay curled in the snow, had melted themselves down into wells. They were half buried, and the tents, sagging under their load, reminded one of evergreens at home, with their branches sagging after a heavy fall of wet snow.

On the 7th, when the sun returned, we dug ourselves out and were under way again—very heavy sledging and skiing. Directly ahead of us the surface was so badly crevassed that we had to head out into the Barrier to go eastward.

We made frequent stops for Obie and Mike to do their surveying. About 2 o'clock on the 18th we saw that we were coming to a great ice field and decided to turn sharply to our right and go into the mountains and climb up for a look around. We camped at the foot of an interesting looking ridge, up which we climbed 2,000 feet after supper.

Observation later showed this to be our furthest south—85 degrees 27 minutes, and even here, as at Mount Nansen, we found lichens on the rocks—the furthest south that life has yet been found. Here we also found copper minerals.

Ice Field Extends for Miles.

We looked out away from the mountains and to the east, and the surface was ice as far as we could see. But we had decided to go eastward at least as far as Marie Byrd Land, which begins at the 150th meridian. In my log for the 19th I find that:

"We headed out to avoid the ice, but it was no use—soon became so bad that we couldn't stand on our skis, but had to take them off and hang on to the sledges. Ice was fairly smooth at first, but after about two hours' traveling we found ourselves in an area that had been much crevassed.

"Fortunately most of the crevasses were not of great extent, but they gave us some nasty spills nevertheless. We had to play a sort of game of tag with them. We could see them easily enough, for they were in part bridged with snow, whereas the rest of the ice was swept clean. But seeing the crevasses and avoiding them were two different matters.

"It was almost impossible to guide the sledges or make the dogs go where we wanted them to go. The dogs have gotten pretty smart about crossing crevasses, and have learned that their best chance of keeping themselves out is to head straight across them. But once they are across they forget that a change in their course may pull the sledge into the very hole they have been able to avoid.

"So we often crashed into them with our sledges. We wrecked one of our best sledges and had to abandon it, and badly damaged the runners on the others. We had to travel twenty-five miles before we could find a piece of snow big enough to anchor our tents on."

Party Reaches Marie Byrd Land.

Same thing over again next day, but most of it down hill, as we made another 25 miles to find ourselves well to the east of the 150th meridian and in Marie Byrd Land, on American territory here in the Antarctic.

Again we slipped and skidded our way on skis up to the nearest mountain, which we climbed and which, with Admiral Byrd's permission, we want to call Supporting Party Mountain. From here we had a great view fully 35 miles further east and to the north over the Queen Maud Range proper. Here the mountains are fairly smothered with ice that debouches from the great glaciers coming down from the plateau. We had achieved our objective. We had demonstrated that there was no Carmen Land and we had reached Marie Byrd Land and so after making some glacial observations and collecting some rocks we headed back toward Strom camp.

Recrossing the glacial ice was almost as much of a nightmare as it had been the first time we crossed. Otherwise the return journey was devoid of special happenings until we camped Christmas Day at the foot of Mount Betty. We had determined to make a last thorough search of this mountain for the Amundsen cache, for there was no other place that would fit Amundsen's description of Mount Betty.

As we broke camp Mike and I skiied ahead down to a ridge where we thought we saw something that looked like a cairn of rocks. It was.

Amundsen Cairn Intact.

We signaled the dog teams to come along. What a thrill we did all get on this Christmas Day, to stand where Amundsen had once stood, and to find perfectly intact the cairn he erected eighteen years ago.

We could not help standing at attention with hats off in admiring respect for the memory of this remarkable man before we touched a rock of the cairn.

It was one of the most exciting moments of the Summer when I pried the lid off the tin can in the cairn, and took out a bit of paper which had formerly been a page in Amundsen's note book, and on which he had briefly recounted his discovery of the South Pole.

Back in Strom Camp again on the 26th. I had wanted to make one more journey into the mountains, but the dogs were too tired. We had to give them a few days rest before we began our long trek northward to Little America.

We carefully overhauled our gear, and discarded pretty much everything except our instruments, our food, and my rock collection. Our good discarded equipment we cached on Mount Betty, not far from Amundsen's cairn. In a tin can within the cairn we left a note giving a brief account of the expedition and of the geological party. I left one of my rock hammers on top of the rock cairn.

On our homeward trip we decided to travel at night, both in order to have the sun behind, and because the sledging and skiing would generally be better than in the day.

Sought to Avoid Crevasses.

We had no wish for recrossing the crevasses in front of the Liv Glacier, so we laid our course northeast from Strom Camp, hoping to avoid them and to pick up our trail later, when we were well out onto the solid barrier again.

For several days clouds had hung over the barrier and mountains, but as ever a good omen, they drifted just as we were ready to leave Strom Camp at 1 o'clock in the morning of the 30th.

Could you who read this have seen the picture that greeted us then, you would know that there had been much besides our geology and cartography to make the Summer fascinating. To the north and south of us lay Mount Nansen in all its splendor—his cap of shining ice, his blackish shoulders of bare rock loosely wrapped in a ragged old shawl, and the whole made glorious by the touch of the long, skilled fingers of the early morning sun.

This grand old mountain had somehow come to hold first place in our affections, and this sight was just what we would all have wished to keep as our last intimate view of the mountains. We finally turned our backs to it and headed northward toward Little America and home.

Quite as we had planned, we did miss the worst part of the crevassed area we had crossed when we arrived at the mountains, and on the second day of travel we picked up our old trail. How much more easily we traveled along now than when southward bound!

We had become much more agile on skis, and the dogs were fairly lightly loaded.

Weather Lends Variety.

Two things gave us variety in the homeward trip until we were again in the crevassed area, between latitudes 81 and 82. These were the weather and the character of the barrier surface, as it affected sledging and skiing.

For Jan. 3 I find the following entry in my log:

"Now the morning sun is out, and the sky is gorgeous with a great variety of ethereal cirri, and there is a bit of wind from the southeast. It had been overcast and foggy the whole night and most of the morning; in fact, late in the morning there was a light fall of fluffy snow as though 'the angels were moulting.'

"We had to keep close together to keep each other in sight, and even then it frequently happened that we with the front sledge could not see the last sledge behind us.

"I had to watch the compass fairly closely and call directions to Mike occasionally, in order to keep on the course. And I don't believe we missed a single flag that we had previously placed to mark our trail. The thorough marking of the trail on our southbound trip was a good idea, and is already repaying us for the time we spent in doing the work.

Fourth Day the Hardest.

"We came by Depot 6 shortly after noon, and stopped only long enough to take on some dog pemmican and some dog food."

On the 4th the following:

"Much the hardest day we have had since leaving the mountains. Weak crust on the snow broke through under the dogs, who plodded and waddled heavily along, hauling sledges, slowly crushing their way through the snow rather than gliding over it easily.

"The dogs are sluggish. There will be no fighting among them tonight, for they are very tired. A thin streak of clear sky to the south about midnight gave us one last glimpse of the snow-capped mountains which are now behind and which none of us will likely ever see again."

We didn't need to worry about the weather until we reached the crevassed region. On Jan. 10 the weather was overcast and things were pretty completely hidden from our view by a light fog. And we were nearing the broken area. I carefully watched the sledge meter and at what I thought was the proper time I said, "We'll camp here."

We had the usual experience that we encountered before in areas where there is active deformation of the ice—an almost constant fusillade of rifle shots about and under us as the ice cracked under its tension.

Noises Resume in Morning.

But in the middle of the night, after the dogs and the whole camp had been quiet for several hours, I woke up and lay awake for a long time without hearing a sound. But when we got up in the morning and began moving about the noises began all over again.

Even though the Barrier is here some hundreds of feet thick, it appears that where we camped it was under such a delicate state of stress that our movements disturbed the equilibrium. When the clouds lifted we found that we had accidentally camped just between two good-sized crevasses, either one of which we might easily have fallen into with skis.

We had to abandon our former trail through the crevasses, on account of the roofs of old ones on the former trail having fallen in and new crevasses having formed.

We traveled three miles and had to stop on account of heavy fog. We waited two days for it to clear, but it did so only partially. Our dog food was getting so low that we could not stay long without killing some dogs.

We did not want to do that, so Norman, Mike and I roped and started out on skis in an attempt to find a route that we could follow with safety. This we were able to do, and, hurriedly retracing our steps, we broke camp and headed out.

Welcomed by Byrd on Return.

The next day we picked up our old trail just south of Depot No. 3 as we had planned to do. The rest of the homeward journey was uneventful until we arrived on the low snow hills south of the base. Then we thought we had stumbled onto a Fourth of July celebration—but no, it was the welcome of Admiral Byrd and our other friends.

Even now, when I begin to wonder why men like to do such things as we all elected to do when we came on this expedition, I think of these lines written by a man named Gould—but not Larry.

Yonder the far horizon lies, and there by night or day
The old ships draw to port again, and the young ships sail away.
And go I must, and come I may, and if men ask you why,
You may lay the blame on the stars and the sun,
And the white road and the sky.

Ours was the white road, the white and silent road.

DEFENDS JONESBORO AS HUSTLING TOWN

Tennessee Editor Says County Seat Is Trade Centre With Eight Trains Daily.

The civic pride of Jonesboro, Tenn., has been crushed by what its citizens insist is "an absolute, flagrant and odious misrepresentation of the facts" as given in a special dispatch from Knoxville to THE NEW YORK TIMES announcing plans for Jonesboro's sesquicentennial celebration this year.

That dispatch, published on Jan. 12, explained that Jonesboro, once the capital of the briefly constituted State of Franklin, had in the passage of unrelenting time become "a quiet, sleepy, rural village, except on court days when horses and buggies, quite as numerous as automobiles, line about the court house" and that the Southern railroad trains stopped there now only when flagged.

Rising to the defense of Jonesboro, E. S. Depew, publisher of The Herald and Tribune, "the only weekly and oldest paper in Washington County," retorts:

"Every statement in the above paragraph is absolutely false. It presents no semblance of truth. Far from being a quiet, sleepy village, Jonesboro is wideawake, hustling and thriving. It is the county seat of one of the wealthiest counties in the State, located on a State highway, with hard surface roads leading in from all sections. In the heart of one of the greatest tobacco, dairying, poultry, cattle and farming regions in the South, the town is, and has always been, an important trade centre."

But Mr. Depew is only warming up to his subject, for he continues:

"More often than on court days do large crowds assemble here, but the horse and buggy as a means of travel is seldom seen. Our people have purchased automobiles and the most of them have pianos, phonographs and radios, while airplanes are no novelty here. As to the town's being a flag station, any citizen of Knoxville who ever stayed all night away from home could have told the reporter better than that. The truth is, the town has eight passenger trains daily and each of them stops on regular schedule."

Finally, with true Southern hospitality, Mr. Depew remarks:

"Then, the story puts up the sad wail that the town will have a problem to house the visitors to its 150th annniversary, but we want to assure all that no one need stay away on that account. No one has ever starved to death or had to sleep out in the rain in Jonesboro. Let them come from all over the country. Our guests will be cared for with good old East Tennessee hospitality."

COLUMBIA TO WIDEN ITS ALUMNI COURSES

More Than 100 Enrolled in Weekly Experimental Classes Begun Last Fall.

CLUB REPORTS SUCCESS

Finds Discussions Hold Interest and Graduates Are Eager to Keep Up Cultural Relations.

Expansion of Columbia University's experimental course program for graduates, begun last Fall at the Columbia University Club, 4 West Forty-third Street, was announced yesterday. The weekly classes, in the term recently ended, were attended by more than 100 Columbia graduates, including successful lawyers, bankers, manufacturers, physicians, engineers and accountants. Their object is to develop wider interest in the university among the alumni than they can gain from witnessing athletics, sentimental tradition and reunions.

The Fall classes were so successful, according to a report of the Alumni Federation's Committee on Adult Education, of which Milton L. Cornell, '05, president of the Cornell Iron Works, Long Island City, is chairman, that further courses will be given this Spring and a broader curriculum will be provided next Fall.

Find Alumni Eager.

"Previous efforts to realize the possibilities of an intimate intellectual relation between the university and its alumni have been very limited," read the report. "Our experiments have shown that alumni are anxious to maintain cultural relations with their alma mater.

"In most of the original classes it was necessary to refuse applicants because of lack of space. Attendance was regular at the informal meetings and the discussions provoked by the opening lectures of the professors often continued long past the scheduled closing time of classes at 9 o'clock in the evening."

Discussion was unrestricted at the class meetings, according to the announcement, and often embraced many divergent fields. At a typical meeting of the economics group the topics included standardization in the nut and bolt industry, department store credit systems, the present value of the $24 paid for Manhattan Island if interest on it had been compounded and the local price of rowing machines.

Courses in international relations were given by Professor Parker T. Moon; in finance, securities and banking, by Professor A. H. Stockder; in economics, by Professor Rexford G. Tugwell; in psychology, by Professor A. T. Poffenberger, and in social science, by Professor Robert MacIver. At the final class meeting of Professor Stockder's class he awarded a silver tray to C. P. Davis, assistant to the vice president of the American Cynamid Company, for the best final examination paper.

Honorable mention was given to Felix E. Wormser, secretary and treasurer of the Lead Industries Association; Stephen P. Burke, research director of the Combustion Utilities Corporation, Linden, N. J., and William Heyman, president of Heyman & Goodman, subway contractors. This course will be repeated this Spring for the benefit of twenty applicants who could not be included last Fall.

Plans for Next Year.

The Winter courses will be continued by Professors Tugwell, Poffenberger and Moon and the latter and Professor MacIver will repeat their courses in the Fall. Professor MacIver probably will include next year in his study of the modern family the subject of the evolution of customs, manners and laws.

Four meetings of the School of Business will be held at the club monthly, beginning tomorrow, at which professors of the school will lead discussions on various aspects of modern business and finance. Courses to be offered during the Spring include business law, technical English writing and composition and public speaking. A reading list, based on Professor Stockder's course, will be distributed for the benefit of out-of-town alumni.

Besides Mr. Cornell, the members of the Alumni Federation's committee on adult education are William B. Symmes, lawyer; John K. Fitch, publisher; Frederick P. Keppel, president of the Carnegie Corporation and former dean of Columbia College; Roy U. Wood, engineer, and Francis A. Nelson, architect.

50-YEAR MEN AT PRINCETON.

Five Served on Faculty Half Century, Article Reveals.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 25.—During the history of Princeton University, five members of its faculty have served a half century with the university, it was learned here today from an article published in the Princeton Alumni Weekly.

President John Maclean of Princeton was the first to complete a half-century of service. President Maclean was graduated in 1815 and entered the faculty in 1818, resigning in 1868, the closing year of his presidency and the opening year of that of Dr. McCosh.

Professor Duffield, Professor of Mathematics, is second in the list of half-century men, who holds the record as to length of service. He was graduated in 1841, joined the faculty in 1852, and resigned after fifty-four years of educational activity.

Following him is Professor Cameron, Professor of Greek. Graduating in 1847, he entered the faculty in 1852 and resigned in 1902.

Fourth in the list is Theodore W. Hunt, Professor Emeritus of English, author of the article, who was on the Princeton faculty from 1868 to 1918.

Dean William F. Magie, Henry Professor of Physics, completed half a century of service on the Princeton faculty last year.

HUNTER ALUMNAE TO MEET.

Graduates Will Hold Annual Breakfast Here Feb. 12.

The annual alumnae breakfast of Hunter College will be held this year, the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the college, on Feb. 12, at the Hotel Astor.

The program will open with a speech of welcome by Mrs. Maxwell Hall Elliott, president of the Alumnae Association. James M. Kieran, president of the college, will answer with a greeting from the college. Two gifts in the form of a section of the fence for the new building will be presented by Mrs. Maurice Vober, president of the class of '80, celebrating its golden anniversary, and by Mrs. James Ticker, president of the class of '05, celebrating its silver anniversary.

INITIATIVE FOSTERED IN PRINCETON COURSE

Students Forced to Rely on Their Own Resources in Study on World Relations.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 25.—Conducted in the nature of an experiment, a course in international relations at Princeton University under the direction of H. Alexander Smith of the politics department was brought to a successful close with the ending of the present academic term. The object of the course was to foster student initiative and, at the same time, was a step forward in the four-course upper-class plan of study at Princeton.

Professor Smith placed the burden of the work on the students, who had to rely on their own examination of authoritative material to cover the work. No textbooks were used.

The course is given in the politics department, open to members of the senior class. About forty enrolled. In working out the new plan Professor Smith formed eight committees and appointed a member of each committee as chairman of his group. The chairman acted as points of contact among the committees and Professor Smith.

The work was done cooperatively, each of the eight committees having special problems to report on. All the committees met each week, two at a meeting, when a group member would read his report, which was then discussed.

With the completion of the individual reports, each committee then met and drafted resolutions concerning the committee problem which represented the opinions of the students as arrived at from three and a half months' study. The resolutions adopted by the committees were then read to the members of the course meeting as a whole and commented on. Professor Smith judged the merit of the work submitted.

HART WILL AIDS UNIVERSITY.

Clothing Manufacturer Left $30,000 to Northwestern to Honor Nephew.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—The will of Harry Hart, a founder and president of the clothing company of Hart, Schaffner & Marx, was filed yesterday in the Probate Court. It disposes of an estate estimated at $6,000,000.

The bulk of the estate is left to his family, with bequests totaling $130,000 to charitable and other institutions.

The Associated Jewish Charities are to receive $50,000, the Art Institute $25,000, the Women and Children's Hospital $25,000 and Northwestern University $30,000. The bequest to the university is made to honor Mr. Hart's nephew, Dr. Isaac A. Abt, whose "unremitting study in the field of pediatrics have brought him deserved fame."

The will provides that if the university should build a children's hospital with which the name of Dr. Abt may be associated, the gift may be used for the maintenance, construction or operation of the hospital.

Three grandchildren, Henry L. Kohn, Louis H. Kohn Jr. and Harry J. Lowenbach, are each to receive $50,000. The children of his wife's daughter, Hilda W. Taussig, will receive $10,000 each. Mrs. Taussig is left $20,000. Ephraim Heller of New York is to get $1,000, and an employe, Mrs. Ida Hanson, $500.

His second wife, Mrs. Sara Hart, will receive $100,000 outright. The residue of the estate is divided between his wife and three children, Mrs. Louis H. Kohn, Mrs. William L. Lowenbach and Jacob Hart.

GIRLS' COLLEGE PLANS PLAY

Cast Picked for Musical Melodrama at New Brunswick, N. J.

Special to The New York Times.

EX-KAISER DENIES POTSDAM COUNCIL

Former Emperor Gives His Views in Letter Quoted by Ex-Consul General Gaffney.

PEON INFLUX IS DECRIED

Remsen Crawford Voices Fear of Mexican Immigration in February Current History.

"The Potsdam Crown Council is a myth, a lie, it never took place," writes the former German Emperor in a personal letter to former U. S. Consul General T. St. John Gaffney, which is reprinted in fac-simile in February Current History.

"The lie of the Potsdam crown-war-council was concocted with all its exciting details by my own Ambassador, who took up a rumor and welded it into the fantastic instrument he intended for the benefit of his country," the former Kaiser adds. "It is a vile, malevolent lie without the slightest foundation of truth."

"The Kaiser," writes Mr. Gaffney, "is a greatly misunderstood man," and quotes his denunciation of the Versailles treaty as a treaty "built on the foundations of vengeance, fear, suspicion and hatred." Mr. Gaffney further retells the story of the Kaiser's abdication in 1918, saying: "At the urgent request, indeed the command, of Hindenburg and Ludendorff, against his own protest and will, he made the supreme sacrifice, not as fugitive, but to relieve the country of the embarrassment which it was alleged his presence was causing. The Berlin Cabinet joined the General Staff in quoting President Wilson as declaring that no satisfactory terms would be accorded Germany so long as the Kaiser was at the head of the government."

Decries Influx of Peons.

A matter of grave national concern, according to Remsen Crawford, is the rapidly increasing influx into the United States of Mexican peons. Mr. Crawford says that since the introduction of the national origins plan Mexico has furnished more "immigrant labor to the United States than any country of Europe." He lists some of the conclusions drawn from a set of Congressional questionnaires sent out to professional men in the Southwestern States.

"The replies indicate in the main a growing dread of the Mexican invasion," he says. "There is almost perfect unanimity that these people can never be assimilated with white Americans. The answers all show that the Mexicans work for less pay than even the native negroes and that the native white's only chance is to move on to some other State where the Mexican is, as yet, not so much in the way."

The theory that extensive expenditures for naval defense are necessary to preserve our neutral commercial rights is attacked as a commercially unsound doctrine by Professor Benjamin H. Williams. "With the world ablaze in war," he writes, "the temptation to be drawn into the quarrels of other nations has proved irrestible and the gains of neutrality have been destroyed. It seems to be a fallacy that American neutral prosperity can be maintained and promoted only by the building of a large navy to engage in war, if necessary, against a strong maritime power. Whatever else such a plan may be, it is distinctly not a business proposition."

Bolton C. Waller contributes an article on one of the national problems arising after the World War, the relation of Ireland to the British Empire. Another nation in the post-war limelight has been Spain, whose six-year dictatorship, according to Julio Alvarez del Vayo, Madrid representative of the Buenos Aires Prensa and Manchester Guardian, is "in the grip of a financial crisis, a crisis of distrust and political insecurity, with the dictatorship not knowing where to turn."

Sees Ready-Made Experts Waning.

Louis E. Van Norman of the United States Department of Commerce, asserts that by our exports of American-made machinery, which "enables other countries to make the same sort of product as we do," our export trade of ready-made articles has alarmingly decreased. "For the first nine months of 1929 the value of our exports of machinery was $462,000,000, the largest item in the list of our exports for that period. This was probably the first time in our history that machinery overtook cotton and motor vehicles as an export." In Europe, continues Mr. Van Norman, "on the whole, industry is reviving and developing, and buying power is increasing to an astonishing extent."

E. Pendleton Herring in February Current History, writing on legalized lobbying, says that "in greater or less degree steps have been taken in Europe to provide that the chief organized occupational groups may make their voice heard when the government has their interests under consideration. Simply put, there has developed abroad, within the last decade, a system whereby the lobbies of economic and social interest have been recognized and given a place in the law-making process."

The general state of unrest in the tropics is dealt with in three articles. Of our policy in Haiti, A. C. Millspaugh says: "It is time to face frankly that unavoidable conclusion that we have not created conditions of stability in Haiti and probably cannot do so before the expiration of the treaty."

On the Caribbean islands in general there are two articles—one by Captain C. S. Baker, who maintains that climatic conditions in the tropical regions have a degenerating effect which cannot be cured by economic or political conditions, and one by Wallace Thompson, who believes, that, despite climate, race and political interference, the introduction of modern machinery and its vast accomplishments will eventually "turn the tropics into gardens productive not alone for the temperate zone, but for the dwellers in the tropics themselves."

Current History for February, also contains articles on the French methods of occupation of the Rhine; on the engineering schemes of President Hoover for harnessing the floods of the Mississippi River; and on the dramatic effect of the introduction of industrial life into the Tennessee mountains. There are also book reviews—among them one by Professor Sidney B. Fay of "The New German Republic," by Elmer Luehr. The issue also contains fourteen monthly summaries of events in the nations of the world by fourteen historians.

Discounts of 25%, 33⅓% and 50% are featured in this great Furniture Sale of Flint & Horner

The discounts, of course, are important! But even more to be stressed is the high quality of the furniture itself and the wide range of the values offered. For this is a store-wide event, a cellar to attic clearance of all our lovely things. Nothing is reserved . . . every one of our seven floors has been delivered over, lock, stock and barrel to the Sale reductions.

POTTER AND CLERGY DEBATE HUMANISM

He Tells Republican Club That a Belief in God Is Contrary to Modern Knowledge.

DR. KRASS DEFENDS FAITH

Says Spiritual Experience Proves Religion—Dr. Sockman and Dr. Reisner Also Speak.

A luncheon symposium at the National Republican Club yesterday on the scheduled topic of "Modern Religious Trends" resulted in an informal debate on the validity of the proofs of God and the values and defects of humanism.

Dr. Charles Francis Potter, founder of the First Humanist Society of New York, spoke in behalf of humanism, which he described as "a new type of religion altogether" and one which rejected the idea of God and concentrated on man's possibilities as an ideal.

Dr. Nathan Krass of Temple Emanu-El, the Rev. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, pastor of the Madison Avenue Methodist Church, and the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of the Broadway Temple Methodist Church, were ranged on the opposing side.

Dr. Potter asserted that a belief in supernatural beings was foreign to modern man's understanding of the universe and that his knowledge of science prevented him from finding any room in the world outside himself for either gods or demons. Jesus might have given credence to such beliefs, he said, but the modern man could not reconcile them with the explanations of physical phenomena offered by science.

Calls Man Supreme.

"Recent researches in psychology," he said, "have prepared the way for the coming of humanism, a positive constructive religion built upon man's faith in his own powers. If humanists were to make a creed, the first article would be, 'I believe in Man.'

"To some, such a statement sounds sacrilegious, because they have for so long been accustomed to the idea of the fall of man and his inherent depravity, and have repeated so many times the false aphorism, 'Human nature cannot change.' They have thus created in their own minds a barrier to belief in the limitless possibilities of mankind.

"There is good scientific justification for believing that man is really just beginning his career upon this earth and that 1,000,000 years or more of development, mentally and spiritually, lie before him. What may not be accomplished if man dares to believe in his own future and to take his vast responsibilities to those who come after him more seriously than has been possible when religion has centred his attention on 'otherworldiness.'"

Dr. Krass Defends Religion.

Dr. Krass admitted an admiration for the "ethical idealism" of humanism and for its "glorification of man." But he added, "Man does not live by man alone." Science, he avowed, was not such an enemy of religion as many persons suppose.

"Humanism, as a friend of mine said," Dr. Krass continued, "may banish God, but the Humanists will miss Him. Let them show me an electron or a proton and I will show a Humanist how to find God."

Dr. Krass asserted that the proofs of God were found in man's mystical experiences, out of reach of the test of science, something beyond mere physical experience.

"I feel," he said, "that any religious system that wants to influence human beings must reach out into the infinite. It cannot be egocentric and homocentric. It must seek out God. Man needs the great urge of the infinite."

Dr. Sockman, admitting that religion needed constant revision, contended that humanism with God rejected would change the mechanism but lose the motive power.

"You can start by loving men and come to love God," he said, "or you can start by loving God and come to love mankind. It is the same in the end."

Dr. Sockman too based his proof of the existence of God on the mystical "apprehension of God" experienced by so many persons.

Scoffs at "Revelations."

Dr. Potter in rebuttal asserted that such "mystical apprehension" of God was explained by pathology, rather than theology, and that such experiences were "trances" which could be self-induced even by atheists." Dr. Potter avowed that to say "I believe in God because I know God" was an ill-founded argument.

Dr. Krass, following him, reiterated, however, that despite such criticisms, the mystical experience was true, and he went on to declare that humanism, without God, would lack on its ethical side the authority, inherent in other religions, to lead men to obey its rules of conduct.

Dr. Reisner presented himself as an advocate "of old-fashioned religion," and upheld Christianity on the ground that it "makes character, arouses the best in man, rescues the worst from evil and supplies leaders."

Thomas C. Desmond presided. The addresses were broadcast by WJZ.

ASSAILS JAILING OF BOYS.

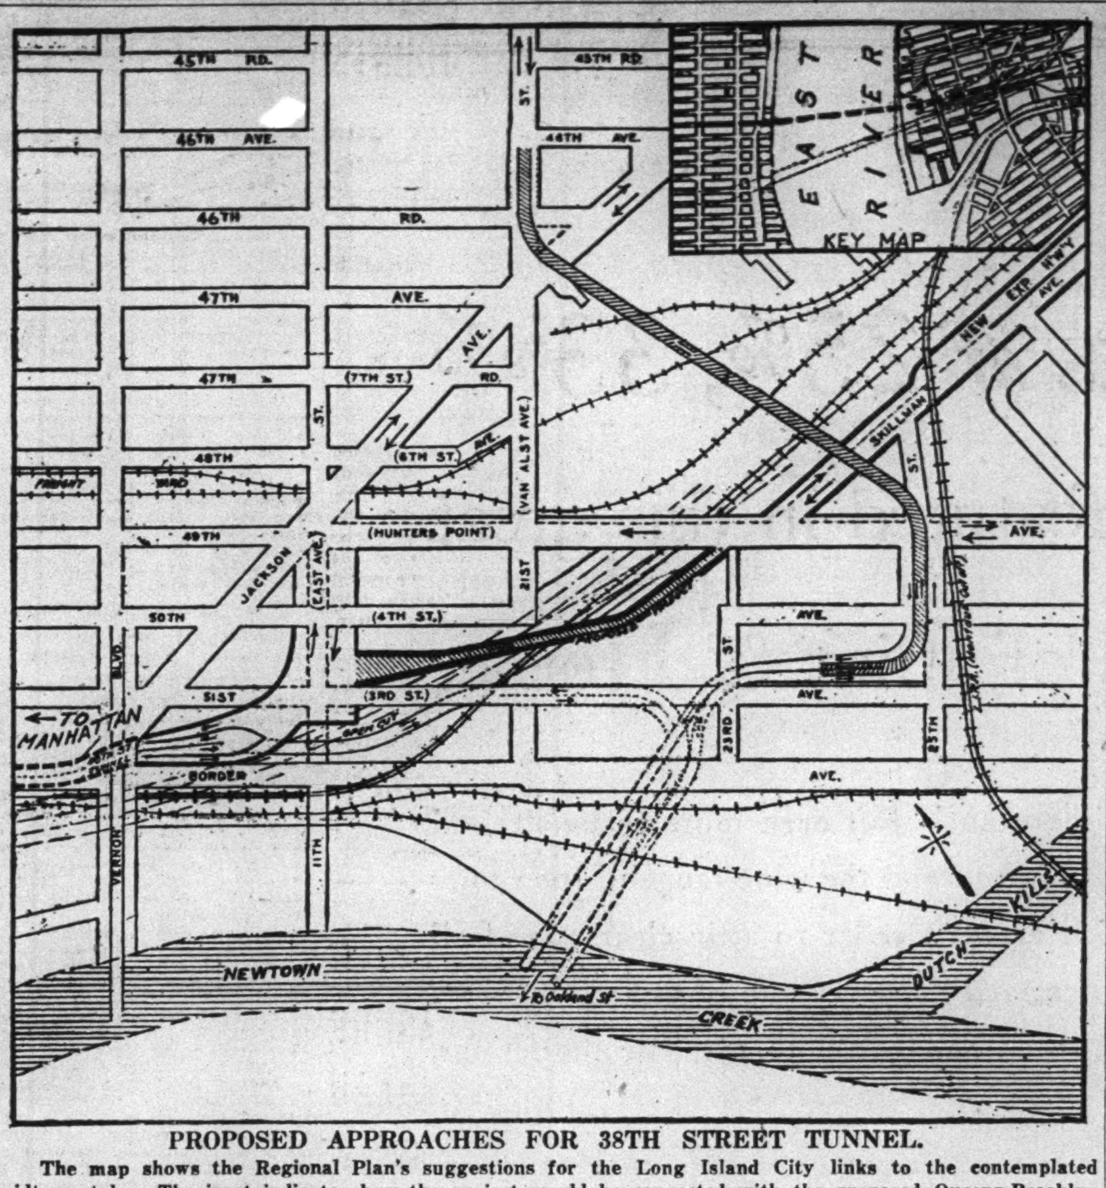
Dyer May Seek Repeal of Federal Auto Theft Act, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Repeal of the Federal automobile theft law unless it is administered with "more humane justice" was urged in the House today by Representative Dyer, Republican, of Missouri, author of the act. He warned the Department of Justice that unless it took steps to stop its various agencies from sending "mere children" to prison for casual and petty violations of the act he would offer the repealer himself.

"We are convicting too many young men and sending them to Federal penitentiaries and reformatories for mere joy rides across State lines," Mr. Dyer said. "The law itself is helpful. It has been of great service both to the automobile industry and to the automobile owner. But we don't want to fill the penitentiaries and reformatories with boys from 12 to 17 years of age."

Mr. Dyer said that of the 450 boys confined at the National Training School, a local reformatory, 200 were there for violations of the automobile theft act. Two of these boys were 12 years of age; six, 13; nineteen, 14; thirty-one, 15; sixty-four, 16; forty-eight, 17; nineteen, 18; one, 19, and one, 22.



PROPOSED APPROACHES FOR 38TH STREET TUNNEL.

The map shows the Regional Plan's suggestions for the Long Island City links to the contemplated midtown tube. The inset indicates how the project would be connected with the proposed Queens-Brooklyn express highway.

Railroad which crosses both Fifty-first Avenue and Borden Avenue at grade. There are also several spur freight tracks serving the industrial areas in this vicinity.

"Most of the Queens traffic will probably come to or from Borden Avenue, Skillman Avenue, Jackson Avenue or Van Alst Avenue. To facilitate connections with Skillman and Borden Avenues an eastbound viaduct has been shown from the Plaza at Eleventh Street over the main line of the Long Island Railroad and entering Hunters Point Avenue near its intersection with Skillman Avenue. Borden Avenue could be reached via this viaduct and Hunters Point Avenue, which runs into Borden Avenue about a mile to the east. Convenient connections are provided to both Jackson and Van Alst Avenues via existing streets and a proposed widening along part of Eleventh Street.

"Queens connections for the vehicular tunnel under Newtown Creek would swing off from the Brooklyn-Queens tunnel under the Long Island Railroad freight yards south of Borden Avenue and come to the surface in the block bounded by Fiftieth and Fifty-first Avenues, Twenty-third and Twenty-fifth Streets. At this point traffic coming to or from the northeast part of Queens would find convenient connections to Skillman Avenue, Borden Avenue and Hunters Point Avenue. The Brooklyn-Queens express highway would continue to the north by a proposed viaduct passing over Hunters Point and Skillman Avenues and swinging north across Long Island Railroad classification and transfer yards and coming to grade in Van Alst Avenue at Forty-sixth Avenue.

"Van Alst Avenue is proposed as an express highway route to the Triborough Bridge. It passes beneath the Queensboro Bridge and would be relatively free from cross traffic. The separation of highway grades at only the most important of these cross streets would be sufficient to convert it into an express route.

"The maximum grades in the Brooklyn-Manhattan connection through Long Island City would be 4.07 per cent. The maximum grade on the proposed viaduct in the Brooklyn-Queens express highway would be 4.15 per cent."

case of the New York City junior public high schools, which are cared for otherwise, each school will be eligible to receive two prizes of $10 each. A preliminary $10 research prize will be awarded for the best written oration, whether this winner eventually becomes the school's oratorical candidate or not, but provided this student enters the oral competition in which the school's oratorical candidate is selected. This winner must be selected in advance of the oral competition. A second $10 prize will be awarded to the student the school finally enters as its oratorical candidate in subsequent interscholastic competition. Thus each entrant school is assured of $20 in awards.

Two such prizes of $5 each instead of $10 each will be presented to each of the fifty-seven junior public high schools of the city which enter the oratorical contest. Each junior high school is thus assured of $10 in awards.

The city junior schools again will hold a separate competition of their own and have their own prizes, as in 1929. They will conduct their own borough eliminations and hold an exclusively all-junior city championship at Town Hall on Friday afternoon, April 11, and thus escape the competitive disadvantage their younger students might be under in meeting older contestants from higher grades.

Age Limit Is 19 Years.

The 1930 contest in this region will be open to any recognized secondary school which prescribes the writing of contest orations as classroom work for at least one class or section. Any regularly enrolled undergraduate student is eligible to compete if he is not taking post-graduate work and is not more than 19 years of age on Feb. 1, 1930. Any student who has previously progressed to a Town Hall regional or city junior finals of this contest is ineligible to compete again.

Orations must be original and must not require more than 6 minutes to deliver orally. In other years the time limit has been 10 minutes. Typewritten copies of orations of school candidates must be filed by the principals with THE NEW YORK TIMES prior to the first interscholastic competition in which their candidates appear. Quotations must be indicated as such in speaking as well as in manuscript. If a quotation is of more than four words the author's name must be given, orally as well as in manuscript. This applies even to well-known poems.

Some phase of the speaker's own subject which he has not developed in his oration, but with which original preparation of that oration would make him familiar, will be drawn upon for the topic assigned him in the later supplementary extempore speaking. At the various regional semi-finals, at the regional finals at Town Hall and at the national finals in Washington, each speaker will receive this topic at the conclusion of his prepared oration. He will retire for the approximately forty minutes of private study, free from interruption and without the privilege of consulting persons or authorities. Returning on call, he will speak for four minutes.

Fifteen Topics Suggested.

Fifteen topics are suggested for written orations. These topics, together with a valuable bibliography, have been prepared for the convenience of contestants by a teachers' committee authorized by Dr. William J. O'Shea, Superintendent of Schools. Dr. Harold G. Campbell, associate superintendent, in charge of the high school division, appointed the following: Dr. Alfred J. Bryan, High School of Commerce, Manhattan; Martin Wilson, James Monroe High School, the Bronx; Winfield Rice, Boys High School, Brooklyn; Dr. George Luetcher, Jamaica High School, Queens, and M. M. Dodge, Curtis High School, Richmond. Frank A. Rexford, director of civics and civic activities, was chairman.

The fifteen topics are "suggested" only and are not compulsory. Contestants are at liberty to choose others if they prefer, and an additional range of choice is offered in concrete phases of the Constitution having special timeliness in the light of present-day applications and in other current aspects of the subject. The suggested topics are:

1. Federalization as a Force in the Development of Our Nation.
2. America, a Rejuvenating Force in Modern Political Life.
3. The Separation of Powers Versus the Supremacy of the Legislature in Present-Day Political Practice.
4. The Value of the Federal Principle in Modern Constitution-Making.
5. The Constitution in the Daily Life of the Individual.
6. Adaptation of the Constitution to Changing Needs of the People.
7. The Value of Political Parties in the Functioning of the Constitution.
8. Thomas Jefferson and the Spirit of Religious Liberty.
9. John Marshall and Federal Supremacy.
10. Abraham Lincoln and the War Powers of the President.
11. Freedom of Speech and Press: Its Scope and Limitations.
12. Daniel Webster and the Indestructability of the Union.
13. The Growth of Federal Control of Business Activities.
14. The Constitutional Powers of the President and World Peace.
15. The Constitution and Civil Liberties.

Libraries Offer Help.

Students will find specially convenient arrangements and facilities awaiting them at the branches of the New York, Brooklyn and Queens Borough public libraries. Every cooperation has been assured by the librarians to bring source books on the Constitution within easy reach.

E. H. Anderson, director of the New York Public Library, has provided all of his forty-five branches and ten sub-branches in Manhattan, the Bronx and Richmond with the necessary additional volumes to enable them to present complet files of the books listed in the suggested bibliography the high schools are using. Special reference departments for consulting this material also are being set aside at these branches where possible.

"The New York Public Library will be glad to cooperate as far as possible with THE NEW YORK TIMES and the New York City high schools in the National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution," Mr. Anderson said. "Each one of its branch libraries located in the Boroughs of Manhattan, the Bronx and Richmond will place the volumes which it has in its possession and which are listed in the bibliography prepared on the subject on a special reserve shelf, where they will be available at all times for use by the students.

"The library requests, however, that the students refrain from comin to the central building at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street for this work. There are no facilities there for service of this kind, and if students come, it will be necessary to ask them to go to one of the branch libraries."

Special Facilities Provided.

Frank P. Hill, chief librarian of the Brooklyn Public Library, which has no central building, similarly reported that virtually all the books listed in the bibliography were available to students at all his thirty-three branch libraries in that borough.

Owen J. Dever, director of the Queens Borough Public Library, announced that complete files of the listed books, supplemented by specially selected current events clippings, pamphlets and periodicals, will be provided in students-reserve departments at the branches immediately local to the borough high schools. This will also apply to the Ridgewood branch, close to Bushwick High School in Kings.

"The six branches of the Queensborough Public Library, located at Richmond Hill, Elmhurst, Jamaica, Far Rockaway, Ridgewood, Flushing and Astoria because of their close proximity to the high schools," Mr. Dever said, "will become strategic points at which to concentrate the books, periodicals, pamphlets and clippings that the Queensborough Public Library will provide so that the students of the high schools in the borough of Queens may compete favorably in the national oratorical contest on the Constitution. A major portion of the material will be permanently located at each branch; the remainder will become a floating collection appearing at each branch in turn for a limited period of time. Faculty members in charge of the work in each high school will receive a schedule through which any portion of the collection may be located at any time."

Official Schedule for Region.

The official schedule for the 1930 national oratorical contest in this region follows:

Contest opens	Feb. 3
School's best written oration selected,	By March 7
School's oratorical candidate selected,	By March 21
Borough elimination (junior)	By April 4
Town Hall City Junior finals	On April 11
Borough and district eliminations (senior),	By April 16
Vacation (Easter, April 20)	April 17 to 28
Eight regional semi-finals	By May 9
Town Hall regional finals	On May 16
National finals (Washington)	On May 24
International finals (Washington)	On Oct. 25

The eight finalists who will speak at the Town Hall regional championship on May 16 will be derived as follows: New York City public senior and evening high schools, 4; Westchester schools, 1; Long Island schools-New York City preparatory schools, 1, and Northern New Jersey schools, 2.

The all-junior city championship at Town Hall the afternoon of April 11 will bring together six speakers—Manhattan, 3; the Bronx, 1, and Brooklyn-Queens, 2.

In High School Curriculum.

Dr. O'Shea has again incorporated written preparation for the oratorical contest into the city high school curriculum, following the precedent he set in the 1929 contest. This makes the writing of orations on the Constitution part of the regular course of study for the 50,000 students taking history and civics in the Spring term. This writing will supplement the regular study of the Constitution which is a fixed part of the civics curriculum.

The Town Hall finalists in 1930 will be produced by the same process of elimination prevailing in other years.

Each school will be responsible for the selection of its own oratorical candidate by March 7. All details of this selection are left to the principal and staff.

The school candidates thus selected will then compete together by the districts into which the regional territory has been divided. This division is made according to borough or county, and produces convenient local units. Each district is in charge of a leading local principal, acting as district chairman, who has charge of all details of this phase of the competition.

The district winners thus selected then compete in regional semi-finals to determine the finalists who appear at Town Hall.

The earlier dates of the city junior high school competition correspondingly quicken the calendar of these particular events.

Dr. O'Shea has placed Mr. Rexford in general charge of public school participation within Greater New York.

Borough Committees Named.

Dr. Harold G. Campbell, associate superintendent in charge of the high school division, has appointed the following borough committees for the senior and evening schools:

MANHATTAN—Edward C. Zabriskie, senior high schools, chairman; John M. Loughran, evening high schools.
THE BRONX—Elmer E. Bogart, senior high schools, chairman; Henry E. Hein, evening high schools.
BROOKLYN—Eugene A. Colligan, senior high schools, chairman; Miss Angela M. Keyes and Limond C. Stone, evening high schools.
QUEENS—Charles H. Vosburgh, senior high schools, chairman; Wallace L. Cremin, evening high schools.
RICHMOND—William M. Halloran, senior high schools; William Flanagan, evening high school.

Dr. Gustave Straubenmüller, Associate Superintendent, and Benjamin Veit, District Superintendent in charge of Junior High Schools, have approved the following borough chairmen for the junior institutions:

MANHATTAN—William A. Kottman.
THE BRONX—Hugh J. Smallen.
BROOKLYN-QUEENS—Augustus Ludwig.

New York City preparatory schools, denominational and private, are divided into two districts. Charles C. Tillinghast, principal of Horace Mann School for Boys, Manhattan, is chairman for the Manhattan-Bronx district. The Rev. Brother Samuel, principal of St. Michael's Diocesan High School, Brooklyn, is chairman for the district comprising Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond.

Westchester County will have four districts, Long Island two and Northern New Jersey ten. The district chairmen are:

Westchester.

Miss M. EMMA WILLIAMS, principal, Yonkers H. S.
LESLIE V. CASE, principal, Washington Irving H. S., Tarrytown.
FRANK H. NYE, principal, White Plains H. S., also county chairman.
GEORGE H. ECKELS, principal, New Rochelle H. S.

Long Island.

HARLAN B. ALLAN, Superintendent of Schools, Mineola, Nassau County.
MERVIN D. LOSEY, principal, Northport H. S., Suffolk County.

Northern New Jersey.

GEORGE W. PAULSEN, principal, Englewood H. S., Bergen County.
JOSEPH F. MANLEY, principal, Central H. S., Paterson, Passaic County.
FRANCIS A. BRICK, principal, Bayonne H. S., Hudson County, chairman.
The Rev. WILLIAM S. F. DOLAN, principal, St. Peter's Coll. Prep. School, Jersey City, co-chairman.
A. C. BARKER, principal, Emerson H. S., Union City, co-chairman.
HAROLD A. FERGUSON, principal, Montclair H. S., Essex County, outside Newark.
RALPH F. PERRY, principal, Morristown H. S., Morris-Sussex-Warren Counties.
ALAN JOHNSON, principal, West Side H. S., Newark.
GEORGE F. FREIFELD, principal, Roselle H. S., Union County.
CHARLES S. HUFF, principal, Asbury Park H. S., Monmouth County.
G. HARVEY NICHOLLS, principal, Bound Brook H. S., Middlesex-Somerset Counties.
PAUL H. AXTELL, supervising principal, Flemington Public Schools, Hunterdon County.

Many Schools to Compete.

A great majority of the schools in this region which have already indicated they will take part in the 1930 National Oratorial Contest are entering for the fifth consecutive year. They say that the contest offers proven educational as well as material advantages for student-contestants and that it deservedly commands acceptances as an annual "institution."

The eight contestants who qualify for the regional finals at Town Hall gain additional honor for the quality and quantity of the competition they surmount. Last year the total number of students who wrote the initial orations here was more than 65,000. Incidentally, the Town Hall finals in the last four years have been won twice by girls and twice by boys. Such victories are further measured by the tuition for a four-year college course which the $1,000 first prize secures and by the cultural advantages derived from the annual prize tour which goes with it.

The decennial Passion Play at Oberammergau will be one of the highlights of the European tour awarded this year to the seven regional champions. Personally conducted and chaperoned, they will sail from New York on July 2 on the America of the United States Lines and land at Hamburg on July 12. After visits to Berlin, Munich, Heidelberg and Leipzig, the young travelers will arrive at Oberammergau in time for the religious drama on July 20, and remain there two days. The Continental itinerary will then include the Bavarian Highlands, Austria, Switzerland, Belgium, France and Holland. Crossing the English Channel, they will proceed to London, out of which various excursions will be made to Oxford, Stratford, the lake district and other places of interest. Sailing from Southampton on the George Washington Sept. 4, the party will reach New York on Sept. 12.

Nation's Leaders Help.

Town Hall here has had as chairmen and speakers since 1926 such figures as former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Lieut.-Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, Benjamin N. Cardozo, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, and President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University.

Former Governor Nathan L. Miller, former Governor A. Harry Moore of New Jersey, George W. Wickersham, former Attorney General of the United States, and many others of prominence have acted as judges.

President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce; President Coolidge, Vice President Dawes and others have made the addresses at the oratorical contests at Washington. Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court have always acted as judges. The national finals is held annually in the Washington Auditorium, seating 6,000 persons, which offers the only available seating capacity at the capital commensurate with the usual attendance. As at Town Hall here, the orations there are broadcast throughout the country by radio.

The International Oratorical Contest held last October presented nine speakers who had been reduced from an original entry list numbering twenty-two nations. Canada won the 1929 honors, which had gone in 1928 to France, in 1927 to Mexico and in 1926 to the United States.

Entries for the 1930 international competition have been received to date from England, France, Germany, Mexico, Canada, Holland, Cuba, Belgium, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Austria, Poland, Yugoslavia, Switzerland, Rumania, Argentina, Chile, Brazil and Uruguay.

Big Pennsylvania Still Seized.

LEWISBURG, Pa., Jan. 25 (AP).—A detail of prohibition agents and State police early today seized a $50,000 moonshine plant, with an estimated capacity of one gallon of liquor every twenty seconds, in the Bald Eagle Mountains about five miles from Jersey Shore. No arrests were made.

SAYS MOTHERS FAVOR DAY FOR BOTH PARENTS

Assemblyman Berg Confident of Adoption of His Bill to Designate One.

Assemblyman Julius S. Berg of the Bronx explained yesterday why he thinks Parents' Day should replace Mother's Day, which in recent years has been observed the second Sunday in May. The Assemblyman introduced a bill in Albany last Monday to designate the second Sunday in May officially as Parents' Day. It has been referred to the Judiciary Committee.

"For several years," he said, "the day has been celebrated as Mother's Day. It may be that many who have been accustomed to honoring mother on that date will be jealous of having any part of the day devoted to any one but mother. I believe, however, that the mothers of the State will not complain.

"I feel convinced that the mothers will be glad to share with the fathers in whatever good may come both materially and in tributes. Surely nothing is to be lost and much is to be gained by honoring both together. It will tend to remind children of the unity of the family and that they should be a little more thoughtful, more considerate of both their mothers and their fathers."

His bill, Mr. Berg said, has the approval of President Hoover, Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, Mayor Walker, Governor Roosevelt, the American War Mothers, the Clergy Club, the Grand Lodge of Elks and many others. He expects to obtain its passage early enough to permit its becoming effective this year.

JAPANESE ART EXHIBIT.

Four Moderns of Tokio Will Display Work Here Tomorrow.

Twenty-two examples of Japanese color prints by four young modern artists of Tokio will be placed on exhibition tomorrow at the Fukushima Gallery, 18 East Fifty-seventh Street, for three weeks. The work is by Genjin, Hasui, Taisui and Soseki and is planned to give a representative example of recent advances in the art of wood-block color-printing in Japan, resulting from a study of European art. The subjects include flowers, birds, landscapes and figures.

A "Nude" by Genjin is without unnecessary detail. Half kneeling, half crouching, a rosy figure shows the curve of the back as she combs a mass of black hair. Genjin is a descendant of the Torii family of Kiyonaga, famous for their painting of beautiful women. He has five other prints, "The Toilette," "The Red Kimono," "Rain," "Kotatsu and Snow" and "The Bath."

Soseki's "Geese" is a typical example showing the work necessary to make these prints. "Herons," "Moor Hens in Lotus Pond," "Gold Fish" and "Ducks" are other prints by Soseki.

Taisui exhibits flowers, modern renditions of old Chinese still life. Hasui is best known for his landscapes and as a follower of Hiroshige.

$50,500 COROT WORK IN ART SALE HERE

'Les Baigneuses des Iles Borrowes' and Four Others by That Artist to Be Auctioned.

OWNED BY COL. ELVERSON

Many Other Paintings Which Will Be Offered on Thursday Are Put on Exhibition.

Corot's celebrated painting "Les Baigneuses des Iles Borrowés," sold in 1926 for $50,500 to Colonel James Elverson of Philadelphia, owner of The Philadelphia Inquirer, now on exhibition at the American Art Association-Anderson Galleries, Inc., together with four other Corots, will be auctioned Thursday evening there.

One of the four, "Au Bord d'une Rivière" also was sold to Colonel Elverson by the American Art Association. The other three were in the Charles H. Senff collection and were purchased by Colonel Elverson at an Anderson Galleries auction in 1928. They are "La Vachère de Ribagnac," "Les Trois Commères au Bord du Lac" and "Morning."

An unusually fine Ziem in the collection is "Fete Day: Venice." Back of a gondola filled with gayly clad people is a sailing ship rich in flags and at the left is the sunlit cupola of the Santa Maria della Salute. The columns of Molo and the Doge's palace are at the right and beyond them are the campanile and the blue cupola of St. Mark's.

There are other paintings than those of the Elverson collection. Among them a Jean Clouet, "Charles V, Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire," Troyon's "Coast of Normandy," Jacques's "Landscape with Sheep and Herdsmen," J. B. Crome's "Village on the Yare," Dupre's "Le Chene (Silvery Moonlight)," Henner's "Reclining Nymph," Schreyer's "Cossacks," J. Francis Murphy's "River Landscape with Figure," Bouguereau's "A Roman Beauty," Blakelock's "Sunset," Inness's "Albano, Italy," A. P. Ryder's "Our Lord with the Woman of Samaria," Ranger's "Landscape with Figures," L'Hermitte's "The Gleaners," Marie Cazin's "Evening," "Marine," by Edward Moran, Alfred Gilbert's "Landscape with Cattle and Figure," Henry Baron's "The Revelation" and Singleton's "The Burning of the Bastile."

Other Elverson items are Jacquet's "La Boutonniere" and "Sleeping Lady," Berne-Bellecour's "Devant le Camp" and "A French Hussar," Simoni's "Morning Salutations," Kaemmerer's "Returning from the Fair," Jacques's "Stacking the Wheat," Edward Moran's "Sinking of the Cumberland," de la Pena's "Nymphs Bathing," Van Marcke's "Animaux Revenant du Pasturage," Harpignies's "Autumn: Evening Landscape," J. C. Cazin's "Entree du Village Escault-pres-Equihen," Huguet's "Arabian Scene," Clay's "Near Rotterdam," Morland's "At the Tavern Entrance," Mignard's "Anne d'Autriche," Netscher's portrait of a "Lady Seated by a Fountain," "The Duchess of Buckingham," by Mytens the elder, Berthelon's "The Marne," Gregorius's "Anne Louise Germaine Necker, Baronne de Stael-Holstein" and de Larghilliere's "Madame de Rohan, Duchess de Chevreuse."

SALOMONS RARITIES TO BE OFFERED HERE

Part Two of English Library to Be Auctioned This Week.

Part two of the library of Sir David Lionel Goldsmid-Stern Salomons, Bart., of Broomhill, Tunbridge Wells, England, will be auctioned on Wednesday afternoon and evening, and Thursday afternoon at the American Art Association-Anderson Galleries, Inc. The first section of the library was dispersed recently at the same galleries.

Sporting books, color plates and sets of periodicals illustrated by Cruikshank are among the rarities listed in the catalogue. Included in the first session of this auction will be a first issue of Boydell's Claude le Lorrain, the "Liber Veritatis," a collection of 300 prints after original designs by Claude le Lorrain.

The Bruton copy of the first state of Captain Marryat's "The Progress of a Midshipman," will be auctioned on Wednesday evening. Inserted in the volume is Captain Marryat's original drawing for the last plate. At this same session will be auctioned a first edition of William Mudford's "An Historical Account of the Campaign in the Netherlands in 1815," embellished with twenty-seven colored plates, including three by Cruikshank. Included also will be the Bruton copy of Robert Nixon's rare "Past! Present!! and to Come!!!" written in the reign of Queen Anne, with the plate autographed by Cruikshank.

More than 1,000 etchings of the antiquities of Greece and Italy are contained in the set of Piranesi's "Opera," which also will be included in the sale. A complete set of the rare humorous periodical "Quizzical Gazette Extraordinary! and Wonderful Advertiser" also appears in the catalogue, as do "The Satirist, or Monthly Meteor," illustrated by Cruikshank and others, and a complete set of the rare periodical "The Scourge, or Monthly Expositor of Imposture and Folly."

Rescued From Nashua Coke Pile.

NASHUA, N. H., Jan. 25 (AP).—Firemen and policemen today rescued Paul Lizotte, 30, from a pile of nearly forty tons of coke in which he was buried. He had entered a coke elevator which had become clogged by frost to free it and the frozen crust gave way. An hour's furious work freed Lizotte's head and he was soon hoisted out with a rope from the elevator. He was taken to a hospital, but his injuries were not believed serious.

PLANS NEW EDITIONS OF RARE OLD BOOKS

Facsimile Text Society Formed to Make Inaccessible Volumes Available to the Public.

PRICE RANGE FROM $1 UP

Exact Reproductions to Be Based on Photographs—109 Titles Are Listed for 1930.

Rare printed texts and manuscripts which have been inaccessible to modern scholars except in distant libraries and museums and in private collections are to be reproduced in popular editions by a recently formed organization of writers and scholars known as the Facsimile Text Society. A list of 109 texts in five fields of scholarship, which are being considered for reproduction, was made public yesterday by Professor Frank A. Patterson of the English Department of Columbia University, the society's acting executive officer.

Supported by academicians in all parts of the country, the society's publications are expected to prove an "incalculable" boon to thousands of research students who cannot afford the time and expense of going to the original volumes, Professor Patterson said. The first volumes should appear about March 1, the announcement said. Prices will range from $1 net for a book of ninety-six pages or less upward, according to the cost of reproduction and the probable sale.

One of the books being considered for reproduction this year is Chapman's Homer, the volume which inspired Keats's sonnet beginning: "Much have I traveled in the realms of gold * * *"

Poe and Whitman Reprints.

Early editions of such writers as Poe and Whitman may be reprinted in time, it was said. Arber's "A Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers of London," a copy of which recently brought £100 and is practically a collector's item, together with the first edition item, also the first edition of Drayton's poems and the revised edition of 1619, have been suggested by a number of American scholars for early reproduction.

Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve of Barnard College, Dr. John W. Cunliffe, director of the Columbia School of Journalism; Robert Frost, noted poet and Pulitzer Prize winner, and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, are among those who have pledged their support to the society.

The society is sponsored by members of the Modern Language Association, the American Historical Association, the American Philosophical Association, the History of Science Association, the American Economic Association, the Modern Humanities Research Association, the English Historical Association, the British Royal Economic Association, the British Philosophical Association and the British Economic Association.

British scholars are planning to form a similar organization in England, it was said. Membership is open to any individual, library or association upon payment of a yearly fee of $5, which entitles them to select books to that amount. In addition, members will be allowed a 33 1-3 per cent discount from the list price of the society's reprints.

For the present the society will reproduce texts in five series, comprising literature and language, history, philosophy, history of science and economics, political science and social science. Most of the volumes will be reproduced without critical introductions or notes and will be equipped only with a double title page—one for the society and the original— and a page or two of bibliographical data. The volumes will be reproduced by the offset process, which is based upon a photograph of the actual text. All original typographical errors will appear in the text. In the case of unique volumes of unusual literary or historical interest, no attempt will be made to clear up damaged pages or remove blots and similar imperfections.

Translations Also Planned.

The society also plans to furnish contemporary or modern translations with a number of old foreign language texts, and transcriptions with manuscripts which are not entirely legible. The society plans to create a permanent endowment fund to reduce the cost of reproduction. American literature of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries is the largest single division in the tentative list of 1930 publications, with thirty-six items.

The complete list of prospective reprints for 1930 follows:

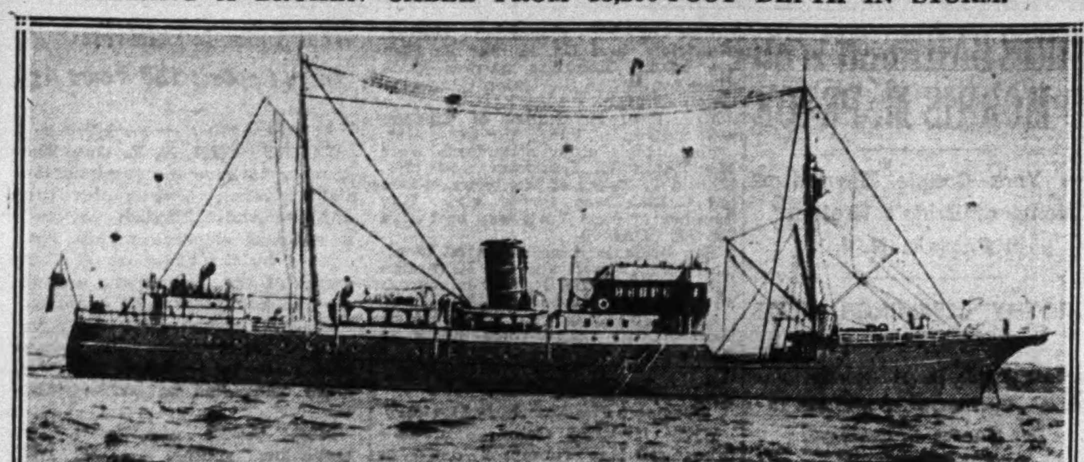
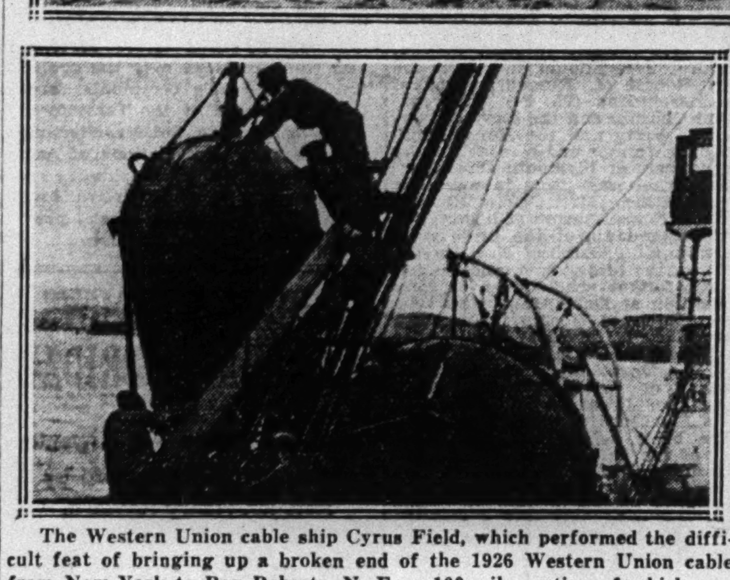
Chinese Naval Men Visit Portsmouth

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Jan. 25 (AP).—A Chinese naval delegation, headed by Admiral Tu, which has been studying the training, organization and equipment of the United States Navy, today inspected the Portsmouth Yard, where members of the delegation were received by Rear Admiral Phelps. They were to return to Boston late in the day, and tomorrow will go to Newport, where they will see the Naval War College and later to the submarine base at New London.

RAISING A BROKEN CABLE FROM 13,200-FOOT DEPTH IN STORM.





The Western Union cable ship Cyrus Field, which performed the difficult feat of bringing up a broken end of the 1926 Western Union cable from New York to Bay Roberts, N. F., a 100-mile section of which was torn away by an earthquake.

GALES DELAY REPAIR OF ATLANTIC CABLES

Dominia, which has been on the scene 1,060 miles east of New York since Dec. 15, will return to its task after aiding the Lord Kelvin and taking on fuel and supplies at Halifax.

After restoring the two Azores-Canso cables of the Commercial Cable Company, the John W. Mackay, property of the company, and the Faraday, chartered for the earthquake emergency, are looking for the two ends of a New York-to-Newfoundland line. One end was successfully raised, but parted again in the heavy seas. When this cable is in operation the vessels will have still another New York-to-Newfoundland line to repair.

First Line Repaired Jan. 1.

All four of the Commercial Company's breaks occurred in the same section of the ocean, 200 miles south of Newfoundland, where the coastal and transatlantic lines cross. This company was first to report a completed repair, its first line having gone back into commission at 11 P. M. on New Year's Eve.

The last of the three companies to restore communication was the French company, whose Cape Cod-St. Pierre line was put in operation on Jan. 16. The company's repair ship, the Edouard Jeramec, is now 200 miles east of Cape Race repairing a "fault" in the St. Pierre-Brest line, the only one of the company's three transatlantic cables to escape breaking in the earthquake.

Repair of this "fault," said to be caused by damage to the insulation which may have resulted from the quake, will materially speed up the rate of sending messages, it was said. The Edouard Jeramec will next return to work on the broken New York-Azores cable, and then on the Cape Cod-Brest line, both put out of commission by the quake.

To put the cables in working order again, all the intricate and sensitive devices developed by scientific research have been utilized, but their technical perfection has been of little avail in the gales that have ruled the Atlantic this Winter.

When the ships put to sea to carry out their unprecedented task of repairing ten cables in midwinter, their officers already knew the position of the breaks, which had been determined by means of electrical resistance tests made with a delicate galvanometer at the land terminus of the cables.

The loose ends of the parted cables had to be located by dragging the ocean floor with a deep-sea cutting grapnel, or grappling hook, drawn across the bottom at right angles to the line of the cable. This could be done only in fairly calm sea. When, after tedious searching, one broken end had been raised to the surface, attached to a buoy and left floating, the other end had to be found, many miles away. In the meantime the buoy to which the first end was fastened might have been carried off. The Dominia of the Western Union reported that one of the buoys it put down traveled thirty-six knots in forty-eight hours.

Sounding Machines Aid Search.

The ships were aided in locating their positions by electrically driven deep-sea sounding machines, which indicate depth, the nature of the earth and the temperature at the ocean's bottom. The kind of grapnel used is determined by the character of the bottom, and allowance has to be made for the temperature of the ocean floor in making repairs.

Another instrument which has been used is the Sonic depth finder, which sends sound impulses into the water so that they strike the bottom and are reflected upward again. The depth is measured by the length of time taken for the echo to return to the surface.

After the two ends of a broken cable are secured, new cable has to be attached to bridge the gap, a task also requiring calm water. The central copper wire or conductor has first to be spliced, and then successive layers of copper tape, permalloy or mumetal, gutta percha, jute, steel armor, and tarred hemp cords applied.

The ships which are buffeting the waves to restore the interrupted communications have in their crews many kinds of experts. The delicacy of the work is indicated by the extraordinary attention that must be given to the health of the men.

Even an air bubble imprisoned in the insulation would cause trouble, as the pressure at a depth of 18,000 feet is 8,000 pounds per square inch.

In raising and laying the cables great care must be taken not to stretch them too tightly or to allow too much slack. The rise and fall of the ship in a moderately rough sea may snap the cable, and if it is stretched so tight that it cannot follow the contour of the ocean floor, the result may also be a break.

The cost of the repair work occasioned by the earthquake cannot be accurately estimated, because it cannot be separated entirely from the general repair costs. Besides the $300,000 worth of new cables already laid, there is the maintenance of the repair ships to be included. The chartered vessel of the Western Union, the Dominia, costs $2,500 a day to maintain, an extra expense to the company totaling already more than $120,000. Other ships of the three companies cost from $800 to $2,000 a day to maintain, but this is regarded as part of the annual expenses rather than as the cost of a particular repair job.

OPTIMISTIC ON YEAR IN CLOTHING TRADES

Leaders See Strong Trend for the Better, Especially in the Women's Apparel Industry.

NEW STYLES HELD AN AID

Grossman Asserts Cloak and Suit Group Will Not Be Subject to Prolonged Decline in 1930.

A note of optimism with regard to prospects in the women's apparel trades in 1930 has been expressed by the leading factors in the trades which were brought together at a joint meeting of the National Council of Traveling Salesmen's Associations, it was announced yesterday.

Among the speakers were I. Grossman, president of the Industrial Council of Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers, Inc., David N. Mosessohn, executive chairman, Associated Dress Industries; Maxwell Copelof, managing director, Merchants' Ladies' Garment Association; John Hahn, managing director, Garment Retailers Association; Seymour N. Sears, national president of the salesmen's organization, and G. H. Loewenstein, president of the Garment Salesmen's Association.

According to Mr. Grossman, the cloak and suit industry, which did not rise to the peak of prosperity in the years of the bull market, will not be subject to sharp and prolonged decline in 1930.

The cloak trade, which is confronted with no huge inventories, said Mr. Grossman, has gained remarkably in knowledge of efficient operation. The new style developments, in his opinion, comprise a most favorable element in the situation.

"The year 1930 will find the salesman an increasingly important factor in business," said Mr. Mosessohn. "That is because the intense competition which now exists in practically all lines and the need of constantly making new contacts and maintaining old ones can best be accomplished through the medium of that amiable, able and progressive individual, the salesman.

"Possibly the most important function which lies within the purview of the selling fraternity is that of spreading a note of optimism throughout the country; leaving a word of good report with every one; instilling into the mind of the retailer a progressive note in business; and suffusing a spirit of 'business as usual' wherever possible."

Mr. Copelof said there was a market for the real salesman in 1930 "because the garment industry needs real salesmanship and because of the new outlook of the merchants and manufacturers of the ready-to-wear field.

"They are realizing the value of greater trade cooperation," he continued. "They are making a more thoroughgoing study of their distribution problems. They are organizing as never before to put over the joint efforts for stabilization of the industry."

Mr. Hahn was of the opinion that there has been a decisive trend for the better during the past few weeks.

"Stores that I have been in touch with," he said, "state that their ready-to-wear sales this month are ahead of January last year. Some of them are running 20 to 30 per cent ahead. The recent abnormal attendance of 2,000 retailers and buyers who came from all parts of the country to attend our annual fashion show indicates the optimism and enthusiasm of the trade for Spring business."

SLIDE OF COAST TOWN INTO SEA IS HALTED

Engineers Pronounce Point Firmin, Cal., Temporarily Safe for Habitation.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 25 (AP).—Point Firmin, which a year ago appeared ready to drop the homes of a score of families into the Pacific Ocean under the ceaseless battering of waves against its natural limestone buttresses, is going to put up a stiff front before falling apart, according to city engineers, who today proclaimed the locality temporarily safe for habitation.

Cavernous earth cracks, which have split portions of the point asunder in the last few months, have been filled by the city, streets made passable, sewer mains patched, shattered house walls jointed together or rebuilt and new home-hunting expeditions by the residents postponed or abandoned.

Engineers, who have not been able to tell exactly what internal ground structure collapsed and precipitated the slide seaward, hope the Point has reached the end of its movement.

The score of residents were thrown into a miniature panic last Spring when the seriousness of the slip became apparent by the earth cracks, which widened at the rate of nearly an inch a day. In places the crevices were nearly a hundred feet deep and six feet wide at the surface.

WILL TAP NEW COAL REGION

Norfolk & Western Wins Permission to Build Spur in West Virginia.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—An eight-mile extension of the Norfolk & Western Railroad was authorized today by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will open for development more than 20,000 acres of new coal lands in West Virginia, the production from which is estimated to be 113,800,000 tons of bituminous coal. The new branch will be located in McDowell and Tazewell Counties.

The commission, in its order, stated that the new mines were to be developed by the Pocahontas Fuel Company, some of whose present mines have passed their highest stage of development and whose output is now gradually increasing. The branch will cost $1,180,000.

POSTMAN OF ENVOYS KNEW 9 PRESIDENTS

I. P. Roosa, Despatch Agent Here, Has Autographed Photos of All Since Cleveland.

ENDS 44 YEARS SERVICE

Will Retire Tomorrow on Eve of His 76th Birthday—Reviews Long Career.

I. P. Roosa, United States dispatch agent in New York for forty-four years, will retire tomorrow. Probably no man in the government employ is so widely known in the diplomatic and consular service of the United States throughout the world as Mr. Roosa, whose retirement falls on the eve of his seventy-sixth birthday.

Mr. Roosa was appointed dispatch agent on Feb. 22, 1886, by Secretary of State Thomas F. Bayard, during the first administration of President Cleveland. For a time he worked unassisted in his office in the Federal Building, Broadway and Park Row, looking after the imports and exports for the government and issuing passports.

Surrounded by Souvenirs.

As the government's foreign business increased he moved to larger quarters, at 2 Rector Street. About a year ago the office was transferred to 45 Broadway. Here, surrounded by autographed photographs of the Presidents and their Cabinets from the time of President Cleveland, and various souvenirs from far-flung outposts of the government—a Buddah from Bangkok, Siam; exquisitely carved figures in wood from Foochow, China—Mr. Roosa gave some of his recollections yesterday.

A government dispatch agent has charge of the dispatching and receiving of all diplomatic mail and attends to the shipping of all the requisitions made on the State Department by the diplomats and consuls throughout the world. All such official supplies must be manufactured in America. Everything official in the State Department is a dispatch; every cable has a dispatch number. Pouches containing diplomatic mail are made up in Washington every week, and through the dispatch office here are sent all over the world.

"We act as a dispatch agent between Washington and the world," said Mr. Roosa, "and we are the largest exporters in New York City with one exception. When I was appointed to office we had diplomatic pouch service to three points abroad. Now we dispatch and receive diplomatic mail to and from fifty-five capitals of the world, which shows how our government has grown in forty-four years.

Notes Transportation Changes.

"During my first incumbency it took longer to get diplomatic dispatches to Teheran, Persia, than any other place. The mail had to travel ninety days on camel back. Now the mail is sent to Bagdad and goes to Teheran by automobile. Formerly we had to send mail and ship supplies to certain points in South America on the backs of llamas and mules. At one time it took eight days to get dispatches and supplies by mule-back from Guayaquil, the chief port in Ecuador, to Quito, the capital. Now we use the railroad and automobiles."

Mr. Roosa knows personally nearly every member of the government's diplomatic and consular service throughout the world, and he has received many messages in connection with his retirement. Just before leaving for the naval conference in London Secretary of State Stimson wrote a letter to him expressing regret at his leaving the government service.

Among Mr. Roosa's prized pictures, in addition to the autographed series of Presidents and their Cabinets, is one of the battleship Maine, autographed by Captain Charles D. Sigsbee on board the battleship at Havana and sent on the day preceding the blowing up of the Maine. He has also a photograph of the signing of the peace treaty between the United States and Spain at Washington, fully autographed, with the then French Ambassador Jules Cambon, President McKinley and others present. Another is a steel engraving of the White House, autographed by every President since and including President Cleveland.

Mr. Roosa recalled that his first stenographer was the late Miss Kate Jordan, the novelist, and expressed the belief that through his suggestion she turned to fiction writing.

Original drawings by Charles Dana Gibson and the cartoonists, Kirby, Davenport and Thomas Nast, are included in his collection.

Mr. Roosa was born in New York on Jan. 28, 1854. While the age limit of his office is 70 years, his service was extended three times beyond the age limit.

His successor in office is Howard Fyfe, who entered the service as a boy twenty years ago. Mr. Fyfe will begin his duties as dispatch agent on Tuesday.

Dies in Synagogue He Visited Daily.

Menasseh Goldstein, 68 years old, who has attended the synagogue of Congregation B'nai Israel, 494 East 140th Street, every day for the past five years, died in the synagogue yesterday morning. During the Sabbath services Goldstein collapsed and slid to the floor. An ambulance surgeon from Lincoln Hospital pronounced him dead. Goldstein leaves a wife and four sons.

Then they disappeared. On the door of the physician's automobile was found a fingerprint. It enabled the authorities a year latter to capture the bandits. It was the only clue to their identity.

"The most widely known man hunt now in progress is the search for the leader of the gang that perpetrated the St. Valentine's Day massacre in Chicago, when seven men were lined up along the wall of a garage and mowed down in machine gun fire. The suspected leader of the gang was dragged out of the darkness into light when in Michigan he shot down a policeman who attempted to arrest him for a minor traffic violation. Search of the man's richly furnished home revealed among other things a machine gun.

Science Points to Culprit.

"At this point science entered the picture. A ballistic expert, comparing the markings on the bullets found in the bodies of the victims of the Chicago killings with the markings on bullets fired from a machine gun in the Michigan hide-out, decided that both sets of bullets had been fired from the same weapon. From the moment of that discovery, descriptions of the gang leader were broadcast and the hunt was on.

"What if there had been no available description of the hunted man? What if nothing were known of his haunts, his characteristics and his associates? What if there had been no attempt to develop the science of ballistics?

"When a safe is blown the first task of the police is to make a minute search of the surface of the safe and near-by objects for fingerprints. Once they are found, the next step is to locate the owner of the fingers that made the prints. That determined, the problem before the police no longer is baffling.

"Each of the forty-eight States has its own maze of jurisdictions and sets of authorities. Many of the States are making no scientific attempt to obtain and assemble crime statistics, and scores of police agencies are struggling to maintain an adequate collection of such records. No police body knows at what moment it may be called upon by police of a distant city to be on the alert for a criminal concerning whom virtually no information for identification purposes is available.

Recognized by Police Chiefs.

"This situation for years has been recognized by the International Association of Chiefs of Police. At a meeting of the association in 1927, William R. Rutledge, Police Commissioner of Detroit, pointed out that the lack of crime data had made scientific police management extremely difficult.

"'We are in the absurd position,' Mr. Rutledge said, 'of endeavoring to diagnose and cure a social disease with little knowledge of its cause, its nature and its prevalence.'

"The committee on uniform crime records has submitted a complete working program and manual for guidance of Police Departments and State and national agencies. The committee made first-hand examination of the systems of compiling criminal statistics in Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany and other foreign countries. It also consulted leading criminologists, prison superintendents and others interested in the detection and prosecution of crime.

"Establishment of a central bureau in the Department of Justice will lead to the adoption of uniform methods in collecting and compiling crime data. I do not think there is any doubt that State and local law enforcement agencies will cooperate with the Federal Government in the accumulation of large collections of crime statistics."

the remaining lands if acquisition is delayed.

"A request of $200,000 was made by the Department of Conservation to the budget this year, to complete the acquisition of lands of the Saratoga Battlefield Park; but the request was not granted.

"The Legislature this year should appropriate the funds necessary to acquire the remaining lands of the Saratoga Battlefield Park, and should revive the battlefields board, or create some other board to manage and look after the interests of the battlefields of Oriskany, Saratoga and Bennington, the high points of resistance against the greatest campaign ever inaugurated by a foreign power against a people on the American Continent, and the turning point in the efforts of the American people to establish and maintain their own system of government, free and independent of foreign power.

Says 3,500 Acres Are Needed.

"The cost of this park, which would comprise some 3,500 acres, when completed, and which is the most important historic place in the United States, because here was decided the fate of the American colonies, as to whether they would remain in the possession of Great Britain or become an independent nation, is very small; indeed, ridiculously so, compared with what has been spent and is being spent by the State for parks in other parts of the State.

"In addition to its historic significance, it is one of the finest sites for a scenic and recreational park in the State, and there are no other parks of that character in this part of the State. This part of the State is entitled to its fair share of the moneys expended for State parks, not only as affecting the people residing in this section of the State, who so much desire it, but for the benefit of all the people of the State.

"There is a large population in close proximity to this historic shrine, in the cities of Johnstown, Gloversville, Amsterdam, Glens Falls, Saratoga Springs, Mechanicville, Schenectady, Cohoes, Troy and Albany, as well as the people in the villages and on the country-side, who are directly interested and unanimously desirous of having this proper and reasonable thing done.

Special Board Is Suggested.

The battlefields board was discontinued two years ago, and the matter left in the hands of the Conservation Department. There should be a special joint board for the battlefields of Oriskany, Saratoga and Bennington, the Burgoyne campaign battlefields. The interests of the State in these historic places is unsurpassed by interest in any historic matters anywhere.

"With crime rampant, bolshevism threatening, a foreign element to be assimilated, and a new generation coming up whose interest is being attracted in so many other directions, it is vital to the future welfare of the Empire State and the American nation, that patriotism be not forgotten, and that the most important patriotic shrines be not longer overlooked or neglected by the State.

"Patriotism, State pride and civic sentiment can be developed to a greater degree through memorials of this kind, which are visited by hundreds of thousands or millions of our people, than in any other way. Two million people visit the Gettysburg battlefield and 1,000,000 Valley Forge every year. Over 200,000 visited the Saratoga battlefield during the past year, notwithtanding its incomplete rehabilitation.

"From a purely economic viewpoint, it is a good investment for the State of New York to make; to develop there a patriotic shrine, and a scenic-recreational park, which will be visited in the future by millions, as it is located in the direct line of tourist travel from the centres of population to the mineral water cure at Saratoga, the Adirondacks, many beautiful lakes and rivers and the mountains of Vermont, New Hampshire and Canada.

"It is almost at the crossways of the main highways of the State, and lies in the line of travel from both the east and west coming in to pick up the north and south arteries to the great vacation land of the State of New York, which is unequaled by that of any other State in the Union."

MISS TIRRELL WED, HER FAMILY ADMITS

Marriage to Lloyd B. Thomas on Thursday a Surprise to Her Relatives.

The surprise wedding on Thursday of Miss Valerie Tirrell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Tirrell of 20 Rutland Road, Brooklyn, and Lloyd Banks Thomas of 444 Madison Avenue, whose home is in Corsicana, Texas, was confirmed yesterday by the bride's family. The ceremony was performed at St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, by the Rev. William S. Blackshear, the rector.

Mrs. Thomas, a member of her family said, had been engaged for three years to another man, but in November had broken the engagement and on the same day announced her intention to marry Mr. Thomas. But on Jan. 14 a disagreement occurred, resulting in the breaking of the second engagement. Mr. and Mrs. Tirrell, it was said, believed at the time their daughter might marry her first fiancé.

On Thursday, however, Mr. Thomas called his former fiancée on the telephone and invited her to luncheon. The conversation resulted in a reconciliation and that afternoon they were married. Later Mrs. Thomas telephoned to her father that she was married. His first question was "To whom?" a member of the family said.

The couple are living at the Roosevelt Hotel. They will defer the wedding trip until the Spring.

The bride is a graduate of Berkeley Institute and also attended the American Academy of Dramatic Art. Her father, formerly a political writer, is a member of the listing committee of the New York Stock Exchange. Mr. Thomas is a graduate of Vanderbilt University and is employed by the National Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

Miss Emma Josephine Connelly, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Connelly of Sunset, Merion, became the bride of Samuel Parham Huhn Jr. of Overbrook at a ceremony in the rectory of St. Matthias's Church, Bala, at noon today. The Rev. Thomas J. Haney officiated.

Wholley—Hegeler.

Special to The New York Times.

DANVILLE, Ill., Jan. 25.—John Henry Wholley of San Francisco, son of the late Colonel John H. Wholley and the present Mrs. Alfred Reynolds of San Francisco, and Miss Clara Josephine Hegeler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Weisbach Hegeler of this city, were married in the First Presbyterian Church this afternoon by the Rev. Ralph B. Hindman, the pastor, in the presence of several hundred guests. A reception at the Hegeler home followed the ceremony. The couple left for a California resort. They will reside in San Francisco.

Among the guests were Dr. and Mrs. Rufus Cole and daughter, Camilla; Mrs. Ewalt Fleitmann and daughter, Mrs. Louis Watjen, Mrs. J. Siedenbert and Mrs. Bai Lihme, all of New York, and Mrs. Lihme's daughter, Mrs. Clement A. Griscom of Philadelphia.

Want Nation to Celebrate Andre Capture 150 Years Ago

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 25.—A move to have the sesquicentennial anniversary of the capture here of Major André, English spy, made a national celebration has been started by the Chamber of Commerce of the Tarrytowns and Irvington, according to an announcement by Frank R. Pierson, president of the chamber. Mr. Pierson said plans to celebrate the event were being laid by his organization.

Major André was arrested by three local youths, Sept. 25, 1780, and the centennial of his capture was observed by all the inhabitants here. More than 70,000 persons also came from all over the country. This year's ceremonies are being sponsored by the Tarrytown Historical Society, but Mr. Pierson believes that organizations of national scope will participate.

Postmaster General Brown has been asked to issue a special postage stamp for the occasion.

Married to Robert Flourney Howard in St. Bartholomew's Chapel—Other Nuptials.

The marriage of Miss Carolyn Bingham Andrews, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bradley Andrews of High Bridge N. J., to Moorhead Wright Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Moorhead Wright of Little Rock, Ark., took place yesterday afternoon in the chapel of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. Henry Howard performed the ceremony. Miss Sara Bache Andrews was maid of honor for her sister. The bridesmaids were the Misses Helen Kirkpatrick of Wheeling, West Va., and Eugenie Paterson of Wellesley, Mass. Janet Andrews, a sister of the bride, and June Andrews, a cousin, were flower girls.

Charles P. Wright of Little Rock was best man for his brother. The ushers were Fulton Wright, also a brother; Jervis Langdon Jr. of Elmira, N. Y.; John Van Sickle Jr. of Auburn, N. Y.; John Francis of Troy, N. Y., and Henry Dunning of this city.

A small reception followed at the Dorset.

After their wedding trip Mr. Wright and his bride will live in Schenectady, N. Y., where he is with the General Electric Company. The bride was graduated last June from Smith College. Mr. Wright was graduated from Cornell University with the class of '27. He is a member of the Kappa Alpha Society.

Howard—Moore.

Mrs. Gladys de Cordova Moore, widow of Harrison B. Moore, was married to Robert Flourney Howard of this city, son of John R. Howard of Macon, Ga., and the late Mrs. Howard, yesterday afternoon in the chapel of St. Bartholomew's Church. The Rev. Dr. Robert Norwood, the rector, performed the ceremony in the presence of members of the two families. The bride who is the daughter of Arthur de Cordova, was given in marriage by her father. She dispensed with attendants. She wore a gown of beige chiffon and satin with hat to correspond. A corsage of mauve orchids was fastened on her shoulder.

Emery Bryan was best man for Mr. Howard. There were no ushers.

The ceremony was followed by a small reception in the Florentine Room of the Park Lane.

Mr. Howard and his bride, after a Southern wedding trip, will live at 17 East Ninety-sixth Street. Mr. Howard, who was formerly in the Diplomatic Service, is now with Lehman Brothers.

GRACE MILBURN WEDS H. H. PELL JR.

Ceremony Held in St. Thomas's Church and Reception at the Ambassador.

A FULL CHORAL SERVICE

Bride, Daughter of Mrs. Stephen Peabody Jr., First of This Season's Debutantes to Be Married.

Miss Grace Milburn, elder daughter of Mrs. Stephen Peabody Jr. and of Ralph Milburn, was married to Howland Haggerty Pell Jr., son of Mrs. Emott Davis Buel and of Howard Haggerty Pell, yesterday afternoon in St. Thomas's Church. Their wedding is of more than usual interest, for the bride has the distinction of being the first of this season's débutantes to be married. She was introduced to society at a reception on Thanksgiving Day. The Rev. Dr. Roelif H. Brooks, the rector, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends. The church was decorated with palms and ferns and there were vases of Easter lilies on the altar.

While the guests were assembling there was a musical program by Dr. T. Tertius Noble, organist of the church. There was a full choral service. The vested choir, which came down the aisle to meet the bride, sang the wedding march from "Lohengrin" as the bridal procession entered the church. The bride was escorted by her grandfather, John G. Milburn, who gave her in marriage. She wore a Zama gown of ivory-colored satin made on medieval lines, the full skirt ending in a triple train. She wore a Juliet cap of pearls from which fell her veil of tulle in billowy folds to the end of her train. Her bouquet was of gardenias and lilies of the valley.

The Bridal Attendants.

The bride was preceded up the aisle by her sister, Miss Charlotte Milburn, as maid of honor; Mrs. John H. G. Pell as matron of honor and the Misses Mary Willets Pell and Orlie A. H. Pell, sisters of the bridegroom; Patty Milburn, a cousin of the bride; Ruth Buckner, Dorothy Jane Imbrie, Dorothy Q. Lawrence and Phoebe Warren Andrews, all of New York, and Evelyn H. Cooke of Detroit as bridesmaids.

All the attendants wore gowns of georgette made on princess lines, with flowing capes and short trains. Those of the maid of honor and four of the bridesmaids were of powder-blue georgette, while those of the matron of honor and the four other bridesmaids were of silver gray. All wore caps of silver tissue and carried arm bouquets of silvered smilax and asparagus fern. The bouquet of the maid of honor was combined with pink roses.

John H. G. Pell, a cousin of the bridegroom, was best man. The ushers were Leslie Hyde Pell, S. Morris Pell and F. Livingston Pell Jr., also cousins; W. Gillette Bird, Ramon de Castro, Norborne P. Gatling Jr., Jacob R. Harvin and John Larkin Lincoln, all of New York; Edwin Earle Lucas of Mount Vernon, N. J., and Ames Stevens of Lowell, Mass.

During the service the choir sang "O Perfect Love" and Stainer's "Sevenfold Amen." At the conclusion of the ceremony Mendelssohn's wedding march was played on the organ as the couple left the chancel. The chimes were rung as they left the church for the Ambassador, where there was a large reception in the Italian Garden given by the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Milburn.

Among the Guests.

Among the guests were Mrs. William Hollingsworth, Mr. and Mrs. John G. Milburn Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Charles Steele, Mr. and Mrs. Devereux Milburn, Mr. and Mrs. F. Livingston Pell, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Pell, Ralph Milburn, Miss Cornelia Brady Kip, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan H. Holmes, Mrs. Anderton Montant, Charles and Atherton Foster, Howland H. Pell, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson M. Powell, Miss Jane Magor, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Mumford, Mrs. Effingham Lawrence, Mrs. Huntington Tappin, Mrs. S. Stanwood Menken, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Rhoades, Miss Jane Houghtaling, Mr. and Mrs. Emory R. Buckner, Mrs. H. Spencer Auguste, Miss Josephine Auguste, Mr. and Mrs. Barrett Andrews, Mrs. Horace Andrews, Miss Lydia Ahles, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison K. Bird, Mrs. Francis C. Bishop, Miss Faith Fahnestock.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Harvey D. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. John Hudson Hall Jr., Mrs. Jacon R. Harvin, Mrs. Duncan Bulkley, Mr. and Mrs. James Duane Pell, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Dannat Pell, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen H. P. Pell, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Rooveselt Pell, Miss Jocelyn Pierson, Miss Carmen Mumford, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miles, Miss Katherine Milburn, Mrs. John L. Lincoln, Mrs. E. Earle Lucas, and Mr. and Mrs. Kenelm Winslow.

Mr. Pell and his bride, after their wedding trip, will live at 45 East Eighty-fifth Street.

J. N. PARSONS DIES; EX-POSTMASTER

Roosevelt Called Him to Head Yonkers Service After Scandal in That Office in 1905.

HEADED KNIGHTS OF LABOR

He Directed the Brooklyn Trolley Strike of 1899—Former President of Letter Carriers.

John Nicholas Parsons, who was twice Postmaster of Yonkers, and, as General Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, directed the Brooklyn trolley strike of 1899, died on Friday night at his home, 105 West Eighty-eighth Street, of bronchial asthma, from which he had long suffered. He was 73 years old. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Mary Hann Parsons; two daughters, Sister M. Loyola of the St. Vincent Orphanage at Dauvans, Md., and Mrs. Van L. Fairchild; two sons, John N. Jr., a customs inspector, and Thomas C., of the postal service, and thirteen grandchildren.

Funeral services will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning in St. Gregory's Church, 144 West Ninetieth Street. Burial will be in St. Mary's Cemetery, Yonkers.

The father of Mr. Parsons, Thomas C. Parsons, served throughout the Civil War and afterward was for years private secretary to David Dudley Field. The son was a mechanic for several years before he became a letter carrier. He was elected president of the local Letter Carriers' Association in 1890 and at once helped to organize the National Association, of which he was made president three times. While holding the latter office he visited all the larger cities of the United States, making speeches and organizing. Later he said that he knew personally 15,000 letter carriers, scattered all over the country.

After much previous activity in the Knights of Labor he was elected General Master Workman in 1898. He always made his headquarters in this city. He did not approve of the trolley strike in Brooklyn in 1899. Not only was he in general opposed to strikes, but he believed the men lacked the necessary organization and financial support. Nevertheless, when asked to take charge, he told the strikers he would stay with them to the end, and he did.

In 1905 there was a scandal in the Yonkers postoffice. After an investigation the postmaster was removed and his assistant arrested. It was suggested to President Roosevelt that the man to reform things was Mr. Parsons, a former letter carrier who was then in the Customs Service. Mr. Roosevelt gave him a recess appointment in September, 1905, and later confirmed it to a regular appointment of four years over the strenuous objections of the local Republican leaders. In 1910, under President Taft, former Mayor Warren of Yonkers received the office, but in 1914 President Wilson restored Mr. Parsons, who served until 1918. Since then he has been with the General Postoffice in this city and at his death was Supervisor of the Motor Vehicle Service.

Among many stories told of Mr. Parsons's thorough knowledge of his work is one illustrating his memory for details. An inspector questioned him on his knowledge of the delivery service. Mr. Parsons said:

"Here is a directory of Yoonkers. Take a card, write out the name and address of any persons in it, and I will tell you on what route the person is located, who is the carrier, and at what times the deliveries are made."

DR. HARRY B. HUTCHINS, EDUCATOR, DIES AT 82

President Emeritus of the University of Michigan Victim of Stroke.

Special to The New York Times.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Jan. 25.—Dr. Harry B. Hutchins, president emeritus of the University of Michigan, died at 7 o'clock tonight at his home here, after a stroke of apoplexy. He had been in poor health for months, but had been seriously ill only two days. His age was 82.

One of Dr. Hutchins's greatest achievements in fostering the expansion of the university was organization of the alumni.

During his administration members of the alumni donated to the university buildings valued at more than $2,000,000.

Dr. Hutchins, the fourth president of the university, served in that capacity twice. He was acting head during 1897-98 while President James Burrill Angell was Ambassador to Turkey, and then succeeded Dr. Angell upon the latter's retirement in 1910. Dr. Hutchins relinquished the presidency on June 30, 1919, and was made president emeritus.

Born at Lisbon, N. H., April 8, 1847, he received his preliminary education at New Hampshire Conference Academy, Tilton, N. H., and Vermont Seminary, Newbury, Vt. He entered Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn., but was unable to continue through the university year because of ill health.

He pursued special medical courses at Dartmouth and the University of Vermont. Removing with his parents to Ann Arbor in 1867, he was graduated from the University of Michigan four years later. After a year of teaching at Owosso, Mich., he returned to Ann Arbor as instructor, then Professor of History and Rhetoric.

Admitted to the bar in 1876, Dr. Hutchins practiced at Mount Clemens until 1884, when he became Jay Professor of Law at the university. Three years later he went to Cornell to aid in organizing the law department, remained eight years and then returned to Michigan as dean of the law department.

Development of the law school was attributed to his energy and ability. Similar success with the university as a whole marked his administration as president, the enrolment increasing from 5,000 to 7,500.

On Dec. 26, 1872, Dr. Hutchins married Mary Louise Crocker of Mount Clemens, with whose father he formed a partnership while practicing law.

SENATE PAYS TRIBUTE TO LATE MRS. FELTON

Recesses Until Monday in Memory of Former Colleague—Home Town Mourns.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Senate recessed today until Monday out of respect to Mrs. Rebecca Latimer Felton of Georgia, the only woman to serve as a United States Senator, who died last night at Atlanta.

Recess was voted on motion of Senator Harris, Democrat, of Georgia.

CARTERSVILLE, Ga., Jan. 25 (AP).—The body of Mrs. Felton was brought here today to lie in state at her old homestead, now the home of her grandson, William Ferguson, until tomorrow afternoon, when funeral services will be held at the Sam Jones Memorial Methodist Church, of which she was a member.

From early afternoon the road leading to the homestead had a line of pedestrians and persons in autos who called to pay their respects. Hundreds of persons viewed the body of the woman who had been their friend.

In her lifetime "Grandma" Felton, as she was affectionately known through this part of the State, never had been too busy to listen to the troubles of her neighbors. To those who asked for spiritual counsel she gave it; to those who needed material aid she gave it.

Mrs. Felton's mission to Atlanta on which she contracted the pneumonia that caused her death, was in behalf of the Georgia Industrial School for Girls, in which she had been interested from its founding.

Flags on public buildings will be at half-staff until after the funeral. Municipal officials will attend the services in a body. The services will be conducted by the Rev. W. S. Robinson, Mrs. Felton's pastor, who will be assisted by all Protestant ministers in Cartersville.

Burial will be in a mausoleum in Oak Hill Cemetery which Mrs. Felton recently caused to be built. It was understood the body of Dr. Felton, her husband, would be removed to the mausoleum later.

E. Arthur Janke.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 25.—E. Arthur Janke, 70 years old, of 203 West Ninth Street, Plainfield, known in musical circles here and in New York City, died today in Muhlenberg Hospital of pneumonia following an operation. He was born in Leipzig, Germany, and came to New York in 1892. Mr. Janke was a member of the Musicians' Club of New York and of the Schlaraffia, world-wide society of literary, professional men and artists. Surviving are his widow, a son, Felix O. Janke; a brother, Alfred Janke of this city, and a brother and sister in Germany.

Funeral of Abe Strauss Today.

Funeral services will be held at 10:30 o'clock this morning for Abe Strauss, retired textile merchant, in the Universal Funeral Parlors, Fifty-second Street and Lexington Avenue. He died Wednesday, leaving three sisters, Mrs. Fannie Birkenfeld, Mrs. Belle Werner, Mrs. Ray V. Zenn, and two brothers, Dr. Simon Strauss and Henry M. Strauss of 881 Washington Avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Strauss was one of the founders of Birkenfeld, Strauss & Co. He retired in 1925.

Mrs. Hannah H. Townsend.

Mrs. Hannah H. Townsend, widow of William Justus Townsend, lawyer, died Saturday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ralph Folsom, wife of the assistant superintendent of Manhattan State Hospital on Ward's Island. Mrs. Townsend was 75 years old. She was a daughter of the late Rev. William Rockwell.

Dr. John B. Farrell.

Dr. John B. Farrell, supervisor of dental clinics in the Jersey City public schools, died at his home, 266 Pallsade Avenue, last night at the age of 53. Dr. Farrell began to establish the clinics thirteen years ago.

Other Obituary Notices are printed on Page 26, Section One.

PATRIOTIC GROUPS TO MEET IN CAPITAL

800 Women Will Attend Conference on National Defense, Beginning Wednesday.

ARMS PARLEY CHIEF TOPIC

Secretary Hurley and General Summerall Will Address Delegates on Thursday.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—Eight hundred delegates, representing forty organizations with a membership in every State, will attend the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, which will hold a four-day session here beginning with a mass meeting Wednesday night in Constitution Hall.

This year the London naval conference will occupy much of the program, which will be devoted as usual to questions of national defense and allied topics.

Mrs. Lowell Fletcher Hobart, president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution, will give a reception to the delegates following the meeting, at which, as chairman of the conference, she will deliver the opening address.

There will be an address of welcome and one of response by Mrs. Donald MacRae of Indianapolis, national president of the American Legion Auxiliary, and Mrs. Virgil McClure of Lexington, Ky., national president of the American War Mothers, who are, respectively, first and second vice president of the conference. Major O. L. Bodenhamer, national commander of the American Legion, then will address the conference on "The Universal Draft," and Mrs. Mary Sherman Walker, vice president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution and chairman of the society's defense committee, will speak on "National Defense."

Hurley to Speak on Thursday.

Secretary of War Hurley, Major Gen. Summerall, Chief of Staff; Ernest Lee Jahncke, Acting Secretary of the Navy, Senator Tydings of Maryland, Representative Douglas of Arizona, Colonel Charles Burton Robbins, former Assistant Secretary of War and now chairman of the American Legion national defense committee, and Commander H. N. Duff of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, will address the conference on Thursday. The women members of Congress will be honor guests at the dinner Thursday night at the Willard Hotel.

Representatives Maas of Minnesota and Box of Texas will speak at the Friday morning session, the former on "Peace and Propaganda" and the latter on "Immigration Laws." Following their addresses, resolutions will be adopted and the conference will adjourn for its annual pilgrimage to the grave of the Unknown Soldier.

LIVING STANDARDS UP WITH FEWER BIRTHS

Social Changes Mark Economic Progress, Says Official of President's Committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP).—The declining birth rate is an important factor in raising the standard of living in this country, according to Edward Eyre Hunt, secretary of the President's Conference on Employment.

In a summary of a report on post-war economic conditions, issued by the committee on recent economic changes, Mr. Hunt said today that "the retardation in the growth of population in this country has affected the whole social situation."

Referring to the relations of science to economic changes, he held that by no means all of the increase in efficiency had taken the form of a net gain in livelihood.

"Men had the possibility of raising their standard of consumption," he said, "of reducing their hours of work, of giving their children more education and of increasing their numbers. They did all four in part.

"The pace at which the sciences have grown and at which discoveries are applied keeps changing. In any given decade, the ups and downs mean that some parts of the economic mechanism are being made over, while others are growing steadily and still others are languishing. The growth of industry as a whole has been more steady than the growth of its parts.

"Side by side with the changes in trade unions and in business policy we note the influence of certain general ideas which have gained wide currency in recent years.

"First of these is the spirit of caution inspired by the losses of 1920-21; second, a more systematic effort to learn from experience; third, more publicity concerning business activities and closer cooperation among business enterprises, and fourth, the belief in the economy of high wages."

ROB GUESTS AT PARTY IN SAN FRANCISCO HOME

Two Bandits Bind and Gag Twelve Victims and Escape With $25,000 Loot.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25 (AP).—Two masked robbers forced their way into the Parker Avenue home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Campbell-Smith shortly before midnight, wrested several thousands dollars' worth of jewelry and cash from the hostess and eleven guests, and escaped after binding and gagging their victims.

Police estimated the amount of loot at $25,000 and said the robbers had used linen tape to bind the guests.

One of the robbers turned to a guest, Mrs. Alice Campbell of Piedmont, who had just given up a diamond and pearl platinum brooch which she valued at $15,000, and remarked with a sneer:

"What a cheap outfit! Just a dime-a-dozen crowd!"

The robbers rang the Campbell-Smith doorbell, and when a servant answered she was roughly brushed aside by one of the men, while the other walked into a drawing room where Mrs. Campbell-Smith was dancing.

"Stick 'em up, everybody!" he ordered. "And don't hesitate."

He was joined a moment later by his confederate, who lined the guests against a wall.

While the first man menaced the crowd, the other searched each victim. Cash and jewelry were dropped into a tablecloth and one by one the guests were bound with tape the bandits carried with them.

Women were carried to bedrooms and dropped on the floors. Men guests were ordered to lie down and make no noise. The pair then gathered up their loot, conversing in disparaging terms about the "cheap" haul. One robber appeared nervous, dropping his gun several times.

After cutting the telephone wires the robbers pulled down the window shades and left by the front door. The robbery, police were told, took more than an hour.

Men guests were first to work loose from their bonds, and after releasing the women they ran to a neighbor's and gave the alarm.

LAWES SEES CRIME CUT BY SOCIAL EDUCATION

Sing Sing Warden at Democratic Club Points Out Problem of Alien Parentage.

"Crime is a matter of effective temptation," Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing told 150 members of the National Democratic Club and their guests yesterday at the second Saturday afternoon forum of the club at 233 Madison Avenue.

"I think that crime in the individual is like tying a horse with a rope," Mr. Lawes continued. "The longer the rope, caused by education, background and family, the less likelihood of crime. But at the same time education itself has no social value unless socialized."

He quoted statistics to show that 3 per cent of the convicts at Sing Sing are "college men." Only 32 per cent of the prisoners are aliens, he said, though most are convicted from a district having a 42 per cent alien population. He declared that the "crux of the problem" is the "first generation children," the descendants of the foreign born who "lose all the good that their own people have to give them and do not receive anything in its place." Of the "so-called Americans in Sing Sing," 75 per cent belong to this category, he asserted.

He emphasized the fallacy of considering "the crime and not the individual," and praised the establishment of New York's Crime Prevention Bureau and the work of the parole board. Over a period of years three out of four of the men paroled have avoided trouble, he said.

The warden was introduced by Edwin J. Cooley, chief probation officer of the Court of General Sessions and Professor of Criminology at Fordham University. Mr. Cooley asserted that "only 1½ per cent of the population of the globe" are "caught" in crime. He urged training and guidance in childhood as crime prevention.

Judge Cornelius F. Collins of the Court of General Sessions presided. The speech was broadcast by Stations WNYC and WOR. The meeting was preceded by a luncheon and was followed by dancing.

TAXI FRANCHISE PLAN NOW CALLED REMOTE

Independents' Head Quotes Whalen—Report That General Motors Is Operating Cabs Denied.

Independent taxicab owners and operators need not worry about franchises for that industry, in the opinion of Police Commissioner Whalen as related by Ullman to the meeting of the Associated Taxicab Industries, Inc., yesterday afternoon at the Park Central Hotel. Mr. Ullman, temporary secretary of the organization, declared he had spoken to the commissioner at a conference on Friday with taxicab manufacturers and hackmen's organizations. Mr. Whalen informed him, he said, that the franchise plea was purely tentative in the mind of the Mayor, and that nothing would be done about it for many weeks.

Mr. Ullman also declared he had been informed that because of the protest caused by the proposal it was doubtful "if City Hall will do anything about it at this time."

Philip J. O'Brien, of the United Auto League of Owners and Drivers, announced that he had been informed by an employe of the General Motors Corporation that the company had started to operate taxicabs in New York. This statement, however, was later denied by drivers of taxicabs at the Pennsylvania Station, where the General Motors organization was supposed to be operating a fleet of 500 cabs. These taxi drivers said they were employed by the City Transportation Company.

Steps to organize permanently the Associated Taxicab Industries, Inc., will be taken at a meeting on Saturday at 2 P. M. in the Park Central Hotel.

AIR LEADERS PLAN FOR BROADER GROUP

Aeronautical Chamber's Governing Board to Be Increased to 27 Members.

WIDE REPRESENTATION AIM

By-Law Changes to Be Voted On by Members at Postponed Meeting on March 1.

Coincident with the announcement of the adjournment of the annual meeting of its members, the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce, Inc., 10 East Fortieth Street, announced yesterday the increase of its board of governors to twenty-seven. The move was made necessary by the growing needs of the aviation industry, it was said, and will provide wider representation in the chamber for those connected with aircraft and accessories.

Tentative plans for changes in the by-laws of the organization were also announced and will be acted upon at the annual meeting, which was adjourned yesterday until March 1 to allow the proper time for notice to members on such changes.

The new and larger board of governors is to be elected during the next session and will choose the officers of the organization. An increase in the number of the executive committee was also ratfied yesterday, providing for seven instead of five on that committee.

The following Class A governors were nominated yesterday for election on March 1:

LOUIS H. MEULLER, Varney Air Lines, San Francisco.
HARRIS M. HANSUE, Western Air Express, Los Angeles.
COLONEL PAUL HENDERSON, National Air Transport, Chicago.
E. L. CORD, Auburn, Ind.
F. B. RENTSCHLER, Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, Hartford, Conn.
CHARLES L. LAWRENCE, Wright Aeronautical Corporation, Paterson, N. J.
GRAHAM B. GROSVENOR, Aviation Corporation, New York.
J. T. TRIPPE, Pan American Airways, Inc., New York.
CARL S. REED, Fairchild Aviation Corporation, New York.
FRED WORTHEY, Alexson Aircraft Engine Company, Los Angeles.
CARL CESSNA, Cessna Aircraft Company, Wichita, Kan.
EDWARD S. EVANS, Detroit Aircraft Corporation, Detroit.
FRANK H. RUSSELL, Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Company, New York.
L. V. KERBER, Sparton Aircraft Company, Tulsa, Okla.
J. C. HUNSAKER, Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation, Akron, Ohio.
H. L. WILLIAMS, Air Investors, Nnc., New York.

Class B governors were also nominated from various companies represented in the accessories field of the aeronautical industry.

DRIGGS TELLS HIS ROLE IN FORMING AIRLINE

Says in $500,000 Suit He Sold Colonial Stock and Met Officials and Financiers.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 25.—The story of the part which Colonel Laurence La Tourette Driggs, attorney and aviation specialist, says he played in the financing and organization of the Colonial Western Airways, Inc., is told in a bill of particulars filed with the county clerk here today in Colonel Driggs's suit for $500,000, naming General John F. O'Ryan and the Colonial Western Airways, Inc., as defendants. General O'Ryan, wartime Commander of the Twenty-seventh Division, is president of the Colonial Air Transport.

The bill was filed in answer to a demand of General O'Ryan for details as to what Colonel Driggs actually did for the Colonial system and as to the alleged agreement under which the plaintiff said he agreed to share the profits from the venture. Colonel Driggs contends in his action that General O'Ryan has realized about $1,000,000 from the Airways Companies and that half of that amount is his rightful share.

The bill declares that the agreement had been an oral one between plaintiff and defendant to the effect that "if plaintiff would engage himself in assisting the defendant to finance and put into successful operation the various companies of the Colonial Airways System, the plaintiff and defendant would share the ultimate benefits which the defendant might receive as a result of said organization and promotion."

The business activities of the plaintiff from June 20, 1927, until Sept. 17, 1928, are outlined in the bill. The last item is as follows:

"Sept. 17, 1928.—Plaintiff returned to the New York office from two weeks' vacation and was offered $7,500 in full settlement of all claims against defendant and Colonial companies, which plaintiff refused. Plaintiff was handed resolutions of all three companies removing him from all offices, including directorships."

Activities outlined in the bill include several conferences in Washington with Postoffice Department officials; the underwriting of $50,000 of the company's stock; speaking to chambers of commerce; inspecting planes and equipment; making business trips, many of them to obtain stock subscriptions; preparing a bible' of the system's routes; directing search for the plane of Pilot Cline, killed in the first flight of the Boston Air Express; conferences with Dwight Morrow and other financiers; negotiations relating to the proposed merger of the Colonial and Continental Systems; investigating the death of Operations Manager Thompson, killed at Hadley Field in 1927; flight of the first air mail plane from Buffalo to Cleveland on Dec. 17, 1927; and conferences in Washington with regard to Canadian mail contracts.

LINDBERGH FLIES EAST.

Glider Record Holder Accompanied Him From San Diego.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Jan. 25 (AP).—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh took off here yesterday with Hawley Bowlus, holder of the American glider flight record, and headed eastward.

It was said the plane had enough gasoline to reach El Paso, but no announcement was made of the destination.

It also was reported that the purpose of the flight was to find a place where Bowlus might attempt to establish a new glider record.

Sergeant Kills Private, 16, Fleeing Arrest On Charge of Missing National Guard Drills

DETROIT, Jan. 25 (AP).—A 16-year-old member of the Michigan National Guard was shot and killed here late today by a sergeant who had been sent to his home to arrest him for missing drills.

The young guardsman, Stanley Prusinowski, had missed drills for several weeks, and Sergeant Joseph Poggione had been sent to place him under arrest.

According to the story given to police by Poggione, the youth ran out of the rear door of his home as the sergeant came to the front of the house. Poggione started in pursuit, and his quarry was outdistancing him as they ran through an alley.

The sergeant said he called to Prusinowski to halt and fired one shot in the air. His order was disregarded, he said, and he fired his revolver at the youth, who fell mortally wounded and died in a police ambulance.

Sergeant Poggione was questioned by police and released until Monday on orders of the prosecutor's office.

Poggione's story was denied by Zigmund Kaczynski, a brother-in-law of the dead youth. He said he saw the affair, that no warning shot was fired and that the sergeant fired at Prusinowski while only five or six feet away from him.

LANSING, Mich., Jan. 25 (AP).—Unless complete investigation reveals circumstances not yet known, the killing of a young National Guardsman by a sergeant in Detroit was "unwarranted," State Adjt. Gen. John S. Bersey said tonight, after hearing newspaper accounts of the affair.

General Bersey said that the usual procedure in cases where a man fails to report for drill was to serve him with a notice to appear at his armory for a summary trial. This notice, he said, was not a warrant.

Governor Fred W. Green told The Detroit Free Press from Washington that he would start a personal investigation of the shooting.

"My sympathies are centainly with the dead boy's family," the Governor said.

PROJECTS RELIGION ON SCIENTIFIC LINES

Dr. Holmes, Psychologist at Swarthmore, Offers a "Modernizing" Program.

STRESSES 'GOD WITHIN MAN'

Noted Educators Join With Promotor, a Quaker, in "Creedless" Movement.

Special to The New York Times.

SWARTHMORE, Pa., Jan. 25.—A movement seeking to "modernize" religion to make it fit the needs of a scientifically minded world has been started by Dr. Jesse H. Holmes, Professor of Psychology at Swarthmore College, in association with Dean Roscoe Pound of the Harvard Law School, Dr. J. Russell Smith, Professor of Economic Geography at Columbia University; Thomas A. Jenkings of the University of Chicago, and Albert T. Mills of James Millikin University at Decatur, Ill.

Severance of religion from creed and the substitution of the vision of an ideal humanity and the "God within man" for a "medieval, imperial deity who makes irrational demands" are outstanding points in the program. Thousands of letters were mailed recently to the "scientifically-minded" in all parts of the country and many replies, already received, have voiced approval of the effort, Dr. Holmes said tonight.

Although Dr. Holmes is a Quaker, he said the movement was not a "Quaker revival," but an endeavor to supply the "needed religious element" in modern life which "the great organized Christian churches are failing to supply."

"The trend of our times is scientific," he said. "It is impossible for a religion which ignores or opposes this tendency to serve the purposes of all who receive modern education."

Dr. Holmes indicated that the program would be carried out mainly along the lines of individual thought until collective action resulted spontaneously.

URGES PLAN TO CURB ITINERANT SALESMEN

Schenectady's Chamber Secretary Would Form Clearing House to Warn of Fake Canvassers.

The New York State Secretaries Conference, an organization of the secretaries of civic bodies and chambers of commerce, voted yesterday to form a special committee to curb the practices in the State of what were termed "fly-by-night salesmen." Action was taken at the closing session of the conference's two-day midyear meeting at the New York State Chamber of Commerce, 65 Liberty Street.

It followed a plea by A. P. Bantham of Schenectady for the establishment of a central clearing house to transmit information from one civic body to another concerning these salesmen, who, he said, tended to destroy legitimate trade by offering all types of cheap products from "advertising in fake journals to suits of inferior material with overcoats given as a bonus to encourage buying."

Mr. Bantham explained that as soon as an individual civic body was able to obtain sufficient information regarding one of these salesmen to warn individuals against him he would transfer his activities to another community. With a central clearing house to give information about such salesmen it would be possible to forewarn all the communities in the State, he said.

James W. Danahy of the Eighth Avenue Association in New York, secretary of the conference, who presided at the session, explained that the new committee would take under advisement the establishment of the clearing house and also consider the advisability of strengthening the legislation covering itinerant salesmen. One legislative matter to be considered, he added, would be the advisability of a uniform license law for such salesmen through State action instead of by city ordinance.

No attempt will be made to interfere with canvassing salesmen who represent established business organizations of known good repute, it was explained.

J. Barstow Smull, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Chamber of Commerce, spoke at a luncheon.

PATROLMAN IS MISSING.

Thomas E. Whalen, 26, Vanished on Way to Doctor Last Tuesday.

A general alarm has been sent out by the Missing Persons Bureau at Police Headquarters for Patrolman Thomas E. Whalen, 26 years old, of 102 Convent Avenue, who left his home last Tuesday evening to visit Dr. John J. McGowan at 472 West 143d Street.

He was reported missing by his wife, Catherine, when she was unable to learn anything about him at the West 100th Street police station. He had not been there since last Monday.

Whalen had been unwell and feared he had tuberculosis, his wife said. He went to Police Headquarters a week ago for an X-ray and was told to return Monday, but failed to do so.

Mrs. Whalen noticed that he was depressed. She tried to cheer him and he seemed to be in a better mood. He has a son, Thomas Jr., eight months old.

COMMITTEE NAMED ON BUILDING PEACE

Employer-Union Group Is Appointed at Tampa Conference to Find Remedy for Disputes.

ASKS ADVICE FROM PUBLIC

Creation of Regional Boards or a High Tribunal, or Both, Is Discussed.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 25 (AP).—Instructed to formulate a plan for the elimination of jurisdictional disputes in the construction industry and submit it at a general labor conference to be held soon, members of a subcommittee representing building trades unions and employers tonight were en route home.

Several programs for the setting up of such a plan received serious consideration at the executive meeting, but nothing as to their nature was made public. The sub-committee also has invited employers, labor and the interested public to submit other plans with the hope that from all of them some medium speedily can be established to adjudicate or prevent jurisdictional disputes.

The subcommittee expects to give careful study to the plans during the next month or two and select the best one, which will be presented for the consideration of all international union heads at a meeting in Washington.

It was learned from labor leaders that one plan which frequently has been discussed calls for the creation of either regional boards or a high tribunal, or both, to which labor questions involving the building trades unions might be referred.

Those appointed to the subcommittee to work out the plan are Michael J. McDonough, Oakland, Cal.; John J. Hynes, Boston, Mass., and Paul J. Morrin, St. Louis, representing the building trades department of the American Federation of Labor, and C. G. Norman, New York; J. J. Scully, Boston, Mass., and Oscar W. Rosenthal, Chicago, representing the National Association of Building Trades Employers.

GRAFT EVIDENCE TAKEN FROM SCRANTON HOTEL

Group of Men Said to Have Stolen Stock Deal Records of Some of 78 Indicted.

Special to The New York Times.

SCRANTON, Pa., Jan. 25.—State police, county and city detectives joined in an extensive hunt today for a group of men who are alleged to have entered a hotel room last night and stolen evidence that was to have been used against some of the seventy-eight persons indicted by the grand jury yesterday in the Lackawanna County slot machine gambling scandal.

The room from which the evidence was stolen was occupied by out-of-town auditors who had been checking the bank and stock market accounts of persons under suspicion, and it was these records which were stolen.

Julius Levy, special prosecutor, declared the inquiry would continue regardless of the loss, and District Attorney John J. Owens intimated that the number of indictments might reach 100. Many of those indicted yesterday, including former Mayor Edmund B. Jermyn, wealthy coal operator, were ordered to appear in court to post bail.

Rewards of $1,000 each were offered today for the arrest of Harry J. Friend, a civil service commissioner during Mayor Jermyn's administration; Samuel Graubert, alleged head of the slot machine "racket," and Fred Pride, one of the alleged leaders. All have been fugitives since the investigation started several weeks ago.

SLOANE SEEKS NEW WRIT.

Sing Sing Prisoner Reopens Court Fight for Freedom.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Undismayed by the dismissal of seven writs of habeas corpus he sought for his release from Sing Sing prison, Roy H. Sloane, former Columbia student, who is serving seven years for having brass knuckles and trying to escape, made another move today to obtain his freedom.

Sloane demanded that County Judge Frederick P. Close set aside his conviction for having brass knuckles in prison. The motion is returnable before Judge Close on Feb. 14.

Sloane contends his commitment was illegal and as Judge Close committed him, he has the right to set aside his own order if it proves illegal. A similar move by Sloane in the Supreme Court several months ago was dismissed by Justice Morschauser.

AMERICAN WINS RESPITE.

MEXICO City, Jan. 25 (AP).—The First District Court today suspended a deportation order signed by President Portes Gil for a period of seventy-two hours to give it time to decide a petition by William P. Massie, manager in Mexico of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada. Mr. Massie had applied for an injunction against execution of the order.

ITALIANS RAISE FLAG IN FEZZAN'S CAPITAL

Occupation of Murzuk Taken to Presage Reconquest of All Tripoli in Short Order.

TROOPS PRESSING ARABS

Advance May Affect the Disputed Region Further South Now Occupied by French.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Jan. 25.—The Italian tricolor has been hoisted over the castle of the old city of Murzuk, capital of Fezzan, in the presence of Marshal Badoglio, Governor of Libya. The occupation of the capital of Fezzan, the only part of Tripoli which is still held by Arabs opposed to Italian rule, is an event of strategical and political importance, for the objective of the military operations which have been in progress for nearly two months under the command of the Duke of Apulia, the son of the Duke of Aosta, is the reconquest of the region.

This part of Tripoli, which borders on the Sahara Desert, was occupied by the Italians sixteen years ago, but after Italy entered the World War the Italian troops were withdrawn to the coast and Fezzan thus fell into the hands of Arab chieftains. No details are yet available as to the present advance into Southern Tripoli, which greatly consolidates the Italian position, but after the fall of the capital the reconquest of all Fezzan should be a matter of a few weeks.

Another important centre which still remains to be occupied to enable the Italians to be complete masters of the whole zone is Ghat and if the Italian advance continues with its present speed that town should be in Italian hands in a short time and Italy would then have reconquered all of Tripoli.

However, Italy claims territory further south which is actually occupied by French troops but which, previous to Italian annexation of the Turkish vilayets of Tripoli and Cyrenaica, was under the sovereignty of the Sultan. Italy has never renounced her sovereign rights over the territory, which was ceded by the Treaty of Ouchy in 1912, and one of the main problems which at present divide Italy and France is the rectification of the southern frontier of Libya in accordance with the Italian demands.

Negotiations for a friendly settlement of this problem have hitherto been unsuccessful, but now that Italian colonial troops are nearing the disputed area important developments are expected to follow.

Fascist newspapers have recently laid stress on the political importance of the advance in Fezzan and the Giornale d'Italia declared a few days ago that the events developing there were about to give a new orientation to the troublesome diplomatic question of the Libyan frontier.

WOMAN SHOT DEAD IN ATTEMPTED PRANK

Husband Believed Fatally Wounded at Atlanta—Man They Tried to "Scare" Opens Fire.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 25 (AP).—Mrs. Cora Belle Warren, 25, was shot to death and her husband, William Warren, 35, probably fatally wounded tonight in what police believe was an attempt by the couple to play a prank on the wife of Ottis C. Waller. Mr. Waller was held in connection with the shooting.

Mrs. Waller told officers he and his wife were at the apartment of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Ella Reed, and that he heard a noise at the back door. He said he did not investigate because of threats made against his wife's life within the last week.

He said someone then knocked on the front door and that when he opened it, pistol in hand, a woman's voice said: "Stick 'em up!"

Waller said he fired five times at a man and woman before he discovered they were his neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Warren.

Mr. Waller called an ambulance and the couple was taken to hospital, where the woman was found to be dead. Physicians said the husband probably would die.

Police questioned Mr. Warren at the hospital and he admitted his wife had ordered Mr. Waller to put his hands up, when the door was opened, in an attempt to scare the couple.

Waller is held without bond pending an inquest.

STATION WGY OBTAINS FULL-TIME LICENSE

Radio Board Extends for One Year Coastal and Point-to-Point Licenses in Alaska.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25.—The General Electric Company's broadcasting station at Schenectady, WGY, obtained a license renewal from the Radio Commission today for the regular period of ninety days without any limitation of time. The board had ordered the station to divide time with a California station on the same frequency, but the order was nullified by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia when the General Electric Company appealed and the Supreme Court upheld the district court in a decision handed down this week.

The commission extended until Jan. 25, 1931, the licenses covering operation of coastal and point-to-point radio transmitting stations in Alaska.

The commission did not construe this as meaning that the operation of these stations will be considered as in the public service after March 31 of this year.

ROBBERS GET $5,000 GEMS.

Smash Window of New Rochelle Store—Policeman Sees Them.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Jan. 25.—Two thieves scooped up $5,000 worth of jewelry from the display window of Isaac Krivitzin's store, at 579 Main Street, this morning, after smashing the plate glass with an iron bar. They escaped in an automobile while a patrolman stood on a corner near by.

The policeman did not fire at the fleeing robbers because, he said, he did not know what had happened. The iron bar was found in the window after the robbery.

NEW TRIAL IS ORDERED IN SLAYING OF ARABS

Death Sentence of Urphali Is Set Aside on Appeal in Palestine Riot Case.

By JOSEPH M. LEVY.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JERUSALEM, Jan. 25.—Today the death sentence was set aside and a new trial ordered in the appeal of the case of Joseph Mizrachi Urphali, a Jew charged with murdering two Arabs in the riots at Jaffa on Aug. 25.

The appeal court granted a new trial so members of the air force on duty at the scene of the alleged killings and Urphali's four Arab neighbors might testify that the shooting was done by policemen.

Urphali is accused of killing two Arabs by firing from the balcony of his house near the boundary of Jaffa and Telaviv when Jaffa Arabs were concentrating in that neighborhood to attack Telaviv, a Jewish city. The defense pointed out that the police were already firing at the Arabs.

All witnesses testified the slain Arabs were running from Urphali's house, their backs toward him, but the government doctor testified the bullets entered the bodies from the front.

The prosecutor admitted at the appeal hearing that the evidence was weak, but maintained it was sufficient to convict.

The Jewish population, not yet recovered from the shock of this week's verdict in the Macleff trial, where twelve Arabs were acquitted of murdering seven Jews in the Macleff house, waited anxiously today for the decision on Urphali's appeal. Five thousand persons, gathered outside the court house, hailed the granting of a new trial.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JAFFA, Jan. 25.—Ittamar Benavi, Palestinian journalist, formerly editor of the Palestine Weekly and the Doar Hayom, a Hebrew daily, was arrested yesterday for publishing at the time of the riots a Hebrew supplement to the English Palestine Weekly, consisting of an open letter to the High Commission, in which he criticized officials for raiding the Doar Hayom printing works.

MADRID FEELS CRISIS IN STUDENT RIOTS PAST

Belief Is Premier Will Let Developments Prove Fear of Further Trouble Unfounded.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Jan. 25.—Madrid and the provinces are breathing somewhat easier today with heaviest police guards in the streets since Wednesday, when the civil guard was brought into Madrid to quell student riots. It was felt the week-end would be quiet, as the government has not yet taken action, thus leaving the student situation in the air until Monday.

Your correspondent talked for some time today with Count Bailen Said of Premier Primo de Rivera's cabinet and suggested that a statement from the government with reference to the student strike and rumors of impending military troubles might give a true perspective on the situation, and lay those rumors which are untrue. Count Bailen Said replied that any danger which might have existed was past. He said Premier Primo de Rivera refused to make any comments on the situation.

It is felt that the government must have its fingers on conditions and that this is likely to act as a deterrent to any movement. There are rumors that police and other bodies have been "fixed," and that some of Primo de Rivera's friends are deserting, but there seems to be no reason to believe them true. The general impression is that Primo de Rivera is waiting to see what develops, and in the event that nothing does will issue a statement saying that he permitted the rumors to run in order to show their foolishness. It is not generally felt that the crisis will last.

SIR ARTHUR NICHOLSON WINS ANNULMENT SUIT

Union With Former Dolores Elaine Cubbon Dissolved in Edinburgh Court.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—Sir Arthur Nicholson today won an annulment of his marriage to the former Dolores Elaine Cubbon, daughter of the late Milton Cubbon of Summit, N. J.

The decree of nullity was granted in the Court of Session at Edinburgh by Lord Murray. The wedding took place in New York in 1927.

Arthur Frederick William Nicholson, elderly eleventh baronet of his line, filed suit last Aug. 15 in the Edinburgh Court of Session. The couple had been married two years previously, when the bride was 18 years old. The nature of Sir Arthur's action was not disclosed when he filed the suit.

Neither Lady Nicholson nor her aunts, Mrs. J. Hoffman Rawles and Miss Annie B. Dexter, could be reached last night at their home at 100 New England Avenue, Summit, N. J. Following the young American girl's wedding to the baronet in New York City, the bride did not accompany Sir Arthur to his seat at Borough Lodge, Fetlar, in the Shetland Islands. Sir Arthur has been residing there alone.

The former Miss Cubbon's mother died when the daughter was a child. After the mother's death, Lady Nicholson was reared by her two aunts in Summit, N. J.

COLUMBIA SMOKING BAN.

Butler Asks Rigid Enforcement in University Buildings.

Deans of the various schools and colleges of Columbia University, have been asked by President Nicholas Murray Butler to enforce more rigidly the rules against smoking in university buildings, it was learned yesterday. A confidential letter was sent to the deans last week.

The anti-smoking rules have been posted in all buildings for nineteen years, but have not been strictly enforced. During classes most instructors enforce the letter of the law, but wink at what goes on at other times.

Instructors in the School of Journalism have been more than ordinarily liberal, some of thmem permitting smoking during lectures, but Dr. John W. Cunliffe, director of the school, frowns on the practice.

TONG MAN ARRESTED IN HATCHET ATTACK

Fellow-Members Come Out of Hiding to Ask Court to Fix High Bail for Suspect.

THEY FEAR NEW ASSAULT

$25,000 Bond Is Set for Alleged Professional "Bad Man" Accused of Injuring Friend in Card Game.

For more than a month Chinatown detectives had wondered at the absence from their usual haunts of members of the Young tong, which has headquarters across the Bowery border-line in Allen Street. They learned the reason for this yesterday in the Tombs Court on the arraignment of Eing Hoe, 24 years old, as an alleged "hatchetman."

Assistant District Attorney Cohen told Magistrate Weil that the forty members of the Young tong, and particularly four of them, had been in fear of Hoe since the night of Dec. 15, when, it was alleged, Hoe almost severed the left hand of Ching Young, the head of the tong, and inflicted a deep wound with a hatchet in Young's chest in a quarrel in the tong headquarters over a card game.

Young will be a cripple for life the prosecutor said. He added that four other members of the tong who were in the game feared an even worse fate if Hoe was released in the usual bail.

"He should be held in no less than $25,000 bail," declared Mr. Cohen, after Detective O'Donnell of the Elizabeth Street Station had told of his arrest of Hoe the night before in Chinatown and Assemblyman Irwin Isaacs, Hoe's lawyer, had entered a not guilty plea for his client, and declared that the usual $5,000 bail in a felonious assault case should be sufficient.

"I'll hold a hearing in this case next Monday," announced the Magistrate, "and I'll fix the $25,000 bail the Asistant District Attorney asks. I believe a great many crimes are committed while the prisoners are out on bail, pending the outcome of the charges against them."

As Hoe was being led from the court room, the prosecutor said the police had learned that the man had come here two years ago from Pu Chin, China, where, the members of the Young tong alleged, he was a member of a band, some of whom were assassins. He added that the members of the Young tong, who come from Shanghai, had been in hiding since the night of the alleged attack. When Hoe was placed in a line-up the night before by Detective O'Donnell, the entire membership of the tong identified him as the man they had feared.

HELD ON GIRL'S CHARGE.

Man and Woman Arrested on High School Student's Complaint.

A man and a women were held in $5,000 bail each yesterday by Magistrate Walsh in West Side Court for a hearing on Jan. 28 on charges made by a 16-year-old high school student, Lilly Bass, of 3,572 De Kalb Avenue, the Bronx. The woman, Mrs. Margaret Bell, 48, of 222 Riverside Drive, is charged with maintaining a disorderly house, and George Burgess, 43, of the Hotel Shelton, with criminal assault.

The girl's accusations, partly revealed in the complaint and partly by Vincent Pisarra of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, came to the attention of the society through an anonymous letter written to the mother of a fellow student of Lilly's at Evander Childs High School.

The girl told him, Mr. Pisarra said, that she met Burgess, who then lived at the De Kalb Avenue address, one day when she'd forgotten her key and was locked out. He invited her into his apartment, she said, where he lived with his wife. Five weeks later, according to the charges, after several automobile rides together, Burgess took the girl to the Riverside Drive address.

On Friday night detectives, accompanied by Mr. Pisarra and Joseph McCarthy, a society agent, raided the apartment. Burgess was said to be superintendent of the Kelvinator Department of the Queens County Gas and Electric Company in Jamaica, Queens.

SAVES MAN IN ICY WATERS.

Patrolman Keeps Unidentified Negro Afloat in Harlem River.

Patrolman James E. Hughes of the Alexander Avenue station plunged into the Harlem River at the Bronx end of the Willis Avenue Bridge early yesterday morning and rescued an unidentified negro from drowning. Hughes, who had removed his outer clothing after hearing the calls for help, held the man afloat for several minutes until bridge employes threw ropes to Hughes and hauled both men to shore.

The negro, unconscious, was taken to Lincoln Hospital in a serious condition. He is believed to have been seeking friends on a barge moored near the bridge end, was thought to have lost his footing in the dark and fallen from it. The two men were pulled from the icy water by John Buchan of 1,975 Bathgate Avenue, the Bronx, and James J. Halley of 1,060 Ocean Avenue, Brooklyn, gatemen. After getting dry clothing at the hospital, Hughes reported sick and went home.

NEW POLICE ALARMS IN.

All Westchester Departments Linked by Automatic System.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Jan. 25.—A telephone-typewriter system of police communication, linking thirty Westchester County communities, was put into operation this morning. Alarms which local police departments previously had to telephone to each of the other departments in the county may now be telephoned to White Plains police headquarters, where they are sent by the telephone-typewriter system to every department.

The New York Police Department will no longer have to relay alarms through the county when it desires to block a criminal escape through Westchester County. A call to White Plains police headquarters will cause the alarm to be broadcast immediately to departments throughout the county.

BRIGHT SPOTS NOTED IN WEEK'S BUSINESS

Conditions Classed as Fair to Quiet, With Marked Gains Over December.

STEEL PRODUCTION RISES

Increase in Car Loadings and Easier Credit Are Other Favorable Signs.

WEATHER ADVERSE FACTOR

Reports From Federal Reserve Districts Show There Is No Oversupply of Goods.

A sharp increase in the ratio of iron and steel operations, an increase of 86,932 cars in the loadings as compared with the previous week, a continuation of the ease in money and a moderately brisk stock market in which quotations generally were higher, although interrupted now and then by spasms of liquidation, were the outstanding developments last week. In most of the comparisons the figures for 1930 are well below those for January, 1929, during which time business experienced a sharp up-turn. The favorable factors come clearly into view, however, when current statistics are examined in reference to December and the earlier part of January.

The rebound from the unsatisfactory conditions which prevailed in the final quarter last year has been fairly rapid. It is expected to accelerate with the development of warmer weather and the reopening of outdoor work. Weather conditions were adverse to trade and business generally last week. Floods in the Middle West and extremely low temperatures in the Southwest, coupled with heavy rains and snows in many sections of the country, have naturally retarded trade. Seasonal goods, however, are said to be selling well, although this trade, too, is spotty.

Varied Conditions Reported.

Reports by telegraph to THE NEW YORK TIMES from the Federal Reserve districts of the country indicate irregular conditions. It is to be doubted that business as a whole is up to the first quarter of last year and there is every evidence of caution in all lines. In some sections building has taken a spurt. Predictions in the Atlanta district, for instance, are for the total of building this year to about double last. The demand for shoes and leather goods is excellent in St. Louis. Trade is spotty in the Northwest, but there have been gains in the Chicago district, in which large iron and steel and motor plants are located.

Trade generally at the moment may be classed as fair to quiet, with indications that there is no oversupply of goods and that production is closely synchronized to consumption. President Hoover's report that employment is on the increase was a bright note last week, although there is still a large army of the unemployed to drift to the cities, particularly New York, giving the labor figures here indications which probably do not prevail in many other sections of the country.

Conditions in the iron and steel trade and in the motor industry, together with a few other "heavy lines," show the best recovery since mid-December. Steel production is up about 20 per cent from the December lows, with structural steel, materials for motor manufacturing and railroad requirements in best demand. The upswing in the automotive industry is a moderate one, with the best demand for low-priced models.

Eyes Turned to the Future.

The disposition in trade generally is to look ahead, rather than at the commercial history which has already been made. Because of the suddenness of the decline and the shock to the country of last Autumn's slump, its effects are still quite apparent, and recovery is likely to be gradual and uneven. But that it is going on at the present time is obvious, as practically all of the dependable barometers of trade indicate. Broad revival of trade is hardly anticipated before the Spring of the year.

Commodity prices continue their irregularities and the trend was gently downward last week, mainly because of the absence of sustained demand. Foodstuffs moved lower, although declines were not large. Caution is evident in textiles, and operation of cotton mills last week was the lowest since July, 1926.

Security markets have been brighter, with the volume of trading on the New York Stock Exchange on Friday aggregating 3,480,830 shares, the largest for any single day this year. However, the aggregate for the year thus far is just about one-half of that for the same period in 1929, when a robust bull market was in progress. Stocks appear to have been well liquidated. A further decline last week of $24,000,000 in brokers' loans and a 4 per cent call rate reflected the comfortable situation in the money market.

TRADE HERE IRREGULAR.

Most Lines Quiet, While a Few Show Substantial Recovery.

Trade in the metropolitan district is quiet and uneven. In a few lines substantial recovery has been made from the low points established at the end of last year; in others operations are still at a slow pace. Bank clearings at New York reflected a decline of 32.8 per cent in the week ended Jan. 23 as compared with the week ended Jan. 16.

Retail trade has been featured by a variety of special sales and is not particularly active. Wholesale and jobbing lines exhibit a little more life. New building and engineering work contracted for in the metropolitan area during the week from Jan. 11 to Jan. 17 amounted to $10,009,500, according to the F. W. Dodge Corporation. This brought the contracted total from the first of the year up to $50,310,000, a daily average rate of 3 per cent above the average for the same period of 1929. Of the total 31 per cent was for commercial buildings, 27 per cent for residences, 24 per cent for public works and

Telephone Talks Average 600 a Second in America

People of the United States send more than twenty billion messages over the wires of the Bell System in one year, according to the Telephone Almanac, which means that on the average 700 telephone conversations take place somewhere in America between every two ticks of a grandfather's clock.

Bell subscribers may now reach more than 20,000,000 telephones in the United States, and the number of stations capable of being interconnected by the nation-wide network of wires is increasing by about 800,000 a year. Considerably more than 30,000,000 telephones in Europe, South and North America and the tip of North Africa are interconnected by radio telephony, which is constantly being expanded. Direct telephone communications between the two Americas are expected to be made this year.

WORLD BANK POSTS INSPIRE FORECASTS

Wall Street, However, Agrees It Is Too Early for Anything Beyond Guesswork.

McGARRAH RUMOR SCOUTED

Although Held Qualified for the Presidency, Many Believe He Would Not Accept.

With the preliminary work of establishing the Bank for International Settlements completed and the approval of the powers secured at the recent Hague conference, interest in banking circles here and abroad has centred on the probable constitution of the board of directors of the bank and the officers which they will select.

Governors of the central banks of England, France, Germany, Italy and Belgium are reported to be gathering at Basle, the Swiss city in which the bank is to be located, for the purpose of electing two directors from each of these countries. The head of the Japanese central bank will not attend the conference, it is understood, but will register his vote through a representative. The directors who are chosen by these central banking heads will in turn appoint two Americans to sit upon the board and the full body of fourteen directors so constituted will elect a chairman, who is also to be president of the bank; a vice chairman and a managing director.

Once these steps have been taken, stock of the bank will be subscribed in the countries involved and the institution will be ready to set up its machinery and begin operations.

There has been widespread conjecture as to the identity of the American directors who will be selected and a number of surmises have been advanced. Bankers who are closely informed upon the subject state that none of these surmises can be regarded as having any more substance than the mere fact that the men mentioned have been among the dozen or so American bankers whose names have been under discussion as possible material for the positions.

Uncertainty Over McGarrah.

The attempt to suggest which one of two as yet unselected American directors will be picked by an as yet unchosen board of directors to head the bank when it is ultimately organized constitutes, bankers suggest, an interesting but not particularly significant essay in prophesy.

In particular the name of Gates W. McGarrah has been put forward in some quarters as the probable president of the world bank. Mr. McGarrah, who is chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, is conceded to be eminently fitted for the post by virtue of his ability and experience in banking. Whether or not he would care to be saddled with the duties o fthe office in view of the many conditions which would surround its acceptance is a subject of considerable doubt in the minds of leading bankers here who have been associated with Mr. McGarrah for many years.

Mr. McGarrah is in his sixty-seventh year, having been born in 1863. Whether he would be willing at this time to transplant his life to Europe with all the inconvenience that this would entail, giving up the association of his friends here, to embark upon the strenuous task of governing an institution which is to pio-

U. G. I. BUYS SHARE IN MIDLAND UNITED

Turns Over Stocks of Midland Utilities and American Public Utilities Companies.

CHANGES AFFECT INDIANA

Association of Morgan and Insull Interests in Other Territories Also Forecast.

The United Gas Improvement Company, one of the principal public utility companies in the so-called Morgan group, has acquired a 16 2-3 per cent interest in the Midland United Company, controlled by the Insull interest, as a result of a deal between the two groups announced yesterday. This is the only important instance in which the Morgan and Insull utility interests share to such an extent in the development and ownership of an important public utility group. The company serves most of the State of Indiana and adjacent territory.

In consideration of 448,170 common shares of Midland United Stock United Gas Improvement is selling to Midland United 64,009 shares of common stock of the Midland Utilities Company and 28,336 common shares of the American Public Utilities Company. This will give Midland United control of all the common stock of Midland Utilities and of more than 90 per cent of the common stock of American Public Utilities.

Midland United and United Gas Improvement formerly owned together all the common shares of Midland Utilities, which fully controls public utility operating companies serving 259 communities in Illinois, Michigan, Northern Indiana and Western Ohio, the Insull company owning 73.6 per cent and the Morgan company 26.4 per cent of Midland Utilities.

American Public Utilities.

United Gas Improvement owned nearly 36 per cent and Midland United about 54 per cent of the common stock of the American Public Utilities Company, which controls public utility operating companies serving 198 communities throughout the State of Indiana.

Midland United also controls a majority of the common stock of the Indiana Hydro-Electric Power Company, all the common stocks of the Interstate Public Service Company, the General Utilities Company and numerous other properties. In the aggregate, companies owned and managed by Midland United serve 662 communities in Indiana and near-by States.

The formation of the Midland United System has been carried on actively for the past two years by the Insull interests, and as a result of the latest deals the organization serves practically the entire State of Indiana and immediately adjacent sections of neighboring States. A share is owned in the State Line Generating Company, which is building one of the world's greatest steam power plants on the shore of Lake Michigan at the Illinois-Indiana line.

In addition to assembling the utility properties serving the territory, the group has also pursued construction of a network of electric transmission and gas pipe lines, among which are gas and electric hook-ups with the city of Chicago in the northwest and with Louisville, Ky., on the south. Coordination of the street railway properties has also been conducted.

The transactions announced yesterday are regarded as evidence that the Indiana territory is conceded to be an Insull territory by the Eastern utility groups.

Wider Alliances Forecast.

In public utility circles yesterday comment on the deal indicated the probability that friendly discussion between the Morgan and Insull groups with relation to the Indiana territory might be repeated in other sections of the country where both organizations have important properties. There are numerous properties which might be subject to trades between the two general groups, it was pointed out.

Consummation of the transaction announced will take place early this week, and an application has been filed with the Chicago Stock Exchange for listing of the 448,170 shares of Midland United to be turned over to United Gas Improvement. The latter company is retaining 63,000 shares of Class A preferred stock of Midland Utilities Company.

The holdings of the Insull interests in Midland United consist of 1,892,295 common and all the preferred shares, which are held by Commonwealth Edison, People's Gas, Light and Coke, Public Service of Northern Illinois and Middle West Utilities, all Insull companies. In addition to the 448,170 shares to be owned by United Gas Improvement, there are 350,000 shares of common stock owned by the public.

INVESTMENT TRUSTS MAY AID INDUSTRIES

Capital Could Be Advanced to Small Concerns, Says Head of Lehman Corporation.

UNDERWRITING COST SAVED

Permanent Financing Through the Flotation of Securities to Be Done Later.

American investment trusts may perform a valuable banking service for the nation during part of 1930 through the financing of many moderate-sized industrial companies, Arthur Lehman, president of the Lehman Corporation, said yesterday. Owing to the temporary lack of demand for securities of small concerns, many sound and profitable industrial companies that would arrange financing ordinarily through public issues of securities, will have to seek other sources of funds, Mr. Lehman said. Numerous companies, he added, would therefore turn for their capital needs to investment trusts that are well supplied with cash.

In lending money to small industrial units which need funds for expansion, the investment trusts would be serving as intermediate financing agencies, Mr. Lehman explained. As soon as the public demand for the issues of moderate-sized companies improved, he said, the companies could resume public financing operations and pay off their obligations to the trusts. The trusts' loans would be primarily short-term transactions, which would return a good yield, and would furnish the trusts with an opportunity to make permanent investments in the equity securities of rapidly growing industrial units. In some cases, Mr. Lehman said, the trusts might purchase bond issues, receiving, as added inducements, options to purchase the common stocks of the companies.

By borrowing money from the investments trusts the industrial companies would avoid not only the expensive underwriting costs of carrying on public financing at this time but also the unfavorable terms they would have to concede under present market conditions, Mr. Lehman said. While there is a good demand for the bond issues of large companies, there is relatively little call for small issues, he said, owing to the insistence of the investor that a ready market prevail for the securities he purchases. The companies affected by this unfavorable situation have net incomes ranging from $100,000 to $1,000,000 a year or more, Mr. Lehman said.

"Investment trusts in this country have been regarded until now as investment mediums almost entirely," Mr. Lehman declared. "They have, in fact, confined their investments in the last few months practically exclusively to securities with active markets. I believe, however, that during the current year many of them will cooperate directly with business enterprises in a way which will give them an economic usefulness apart from their original purpose.

"In the present investment securities market, it is extremely difficult for a company of moderate size to supply its capital needs through the usual medium of a publicily offered bond or stock issue. Heavy bond issues of large nationally known corporations recently have met with a substantial demand from investors. But the lack of appetite for securities of small companies is, perhaps temporarily, absent. The investing public's apathy, is apparently based on the size of the borrowing business, and it applies even to the soundest medium-sized enterprises, with fine records of past profits and every indication of a bright future.

"Under these circumstances, corporations with an established and substantial earning power, of moderate size, and even, in certain cases, large companies, cannot advantageously finance their capital needs in the public securities market. Into this breach it is logical for the investment trust with large cash funds to step. Direct cooperation of this sort between the trusts and the industrial corporations not only should prove mutually advantageous, but also offer the investment trusts the

BANKERS DISCUSS WORLD GOLD SUPPLY

Growth of Demand for Metal Is Seen as Reason for Economy in Use.

DROP IN OUTPUT FORECAST

Our Large Share of the Total Supply an Important Factor in the Situation.

There has been much discussion of late among bankers and economists whether the supply of gold present and prospective will be sufficient to meet all the demands for the precious metal.

Were it not for economies in the use of gold a distinct lack of the metal would already be making itself felt, according to the view recently expressed in some banking quarters. On top of this comes the prediction by a recognized authority that the production of gold is likely to show a decline possibly in the next five years.

Gold Concentration Here.

The position of the United States with relation to the world gold supply has been extraordinary, due to the large amounts of gold which flowed to the American market during and after the World War, when most other countries had been forced off the gold basis. From 1921 to 1927, inclusive, the United States held more than 40 per cent of all the gold in the world. In 1924 the percentage rose to 45.9. In 1928 it dropped to 37.5.

During the past year this country gained gold on balance so that the percentage of its holdings to the world supply of gold was believed to be probably as high as it was in 1928. Concentration of so much gold to this country is said to have intensified the struggle on the part of the European banks of issue to retain and augment their holdings of the metal.

An important drain on the world's gold stocks has been presented by India, which annually absorbs large quantities of gold which disappear from productive use, being devoted to the arts and to hoarding. Since 1926, it is estimated, approximately 11,000,000 ounces have been absorbed in this way. Over the past seven years an average of 31.46 per cent of the world's annual gold production has been taken by India and removed from productive uses. In the past few years India's absorption of gold has been at a smaller rate than in earlier years, but a new factor is now appearing in the Indian Government's plan for gradually substituting gold for silver as a basis for its currency.

Economies Recently Developed.

To offset the increasing demands for gold, there have been developed in recent years more economical uses of the metal. These have taken the form, chiefly, of the use of smaller gold reserves by banks, lessened use of gold coinage and more efficient central banking operations.

Still another economy is the use of the gold exchange standard in some countries instead of the straight gold standard. By the gold exchange standard a country bases its currency not on gold but on the currency of another country or countries where the gold standard is maintained.

In the United States the development of the Federal Reserve System has worked notable economies in the use of gold. Instead of individual banks being required to maintain their own gold reserves in their own vaults, reserves are deposited in the Federal Reserve Banks, where they can be readily mobilized in times of strain.

The need for such economies has been stressed by distinguished bankers. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland Bank, Ltd., in England, addressing stockholders recently at the annual meeting of the bank said: "We should be suffering from a veritable gold famine were it not for the economy practiced in this and some other gold standard countries."

The operation of the gold standard today, Mr. McKenna said, differed greatly from that of former years. Mobilization of gold reserves in the central banks rendered the available

Average Prices on Stock Exchange in 1929 Hit Both High and Low of Last Five Years

Average market prices of shares listed on the New York Stock Exchange in 1929 reached both the high and low figures for the last five years, according to statistics compiled by the Exchange. During 1928 the average price as of Dec. 1 touched the same high figure which was reached on Sept. 1, 1929, but at no month-end since the beginning of 1925 has the average market price of all stocks listed reached the low figure of $56.92 which was shown by the report as of Dec. 1, 1929.

The high figure for the entire five years was an average price of $89.13, which was reached twice. On Jan. 2, 1929, a month after this high average for the period was attained, the average price had only decreased 4 cents, standing at $89.09 on the first trading day of 1929. By April 1, 1929, it had fallen to $80.87, but a month later, on May 1, it had shown a recovery to $82.13. During May, however, the average price of all the listed shares showed the next to the greatest decreases of 1929, standing at $76.06 on June 1.

The greatest drop during 1929 in the average prices came during October at the time of the big break. The average price on Oct. 1 was $83.06, and one month later, on Nov. 1, it showed a decrease of $18.44, standing at $64.62.

Despite the decrease in the average price recorded during October, a greater number of new shares were listed during that month than during any other thirty-day period during 1929. More than 62,000,000 new shares were listed during October, the total number of shares listed on Oct. 1 being 1,048,359,263, and on Nov. 1 the total was 1,110,419,105.

The following table gives the number of shares listed and the total market value price of them, the last three figures omitted in each case, and the average market price a share, at the beginning of each month of 1929:

On Jan. 2 this year the total number of shares listed was 1,127,682,468, the total market value was $64,707,878,131 and the average market price was $57.38.

PEACE TIME RECORD INDICATED FOR STEEL

Favorable Report Expected by Corporation on Earnings in Last Quarter of 1929.

EARLY FORECASTS REVISED

Observers in Wall Street Now Put Net for the Full Year at Above $147,000,000.

Directors of the United States Steel Corporation at their meeting on Tuesday will receive and make public a statement of earnings in the fourth quarter of 1929, which will complete the record of financial results for the full year. Wall Street anticipates that the showing for the final quarter will prove to be favorable, although making full allowance for the slackening in operations during that period.

Necessarily there has been some revision of earlier estimates of the corporation's earnings for 1929, but it is already certain that the year's total will exceed that of any previous twelve month in peace time. In the nine months ended Sept. 30, the net available for common stock was $128,672,000, equivalent to $15.82 a share on 8,131,071 snares, so that earnings in excess of $18 a share for the full year are regarded as assured.

Assuming that the total available for common stock out of fourth quarter earnings amounts to as much as $2.25 a share, which is believed to be reasonally assured, the net for the full year will exceed $147,000,000, which would be a new peace-time record. In financial circles it is believed that the final quarter's net will exceed recent estimates. The total available for common stock, according to some guesses, may run above $150,000,000.

Uncertainties in Last Quarter.

The usual forecasters have been cautious in predicting the results for the last quarter of 1929 because of the uncertainties in the steel situation during that period. Recent strength in United States Steel common on the New York Stock Exchange, however, apparently has reflected the belief that the showing for the quarter will be found to have been satisfactory, in spite of the recession that is known to have taken place.

The extent to which steel production fell off in the last quarter has been fairly well indicated by the trade reports. The decline in operations was gradual during the period, December making the poorest showing. Deliveries by the Steel Corporation in that month are said to have shrunk about 300,000 tons from the deliveries in October. It is pointed out also that returns from non-steel properties declined substantially, especially those from the corporation's railroad lines and water transportation.

It is expected that the Steel Corporation management will have something to say on Tuesday about present conditions in the steel industry. The outlook is regarded as brighter than it has been in some weeks, steady improvement having taken place recently in the corporation's operations. Ingot production of the Steel Corporation is currently running at slightly better than 75 per cent of capacity, as compared with 72 per cent a few days ago.

Within about four weeks ingot production has increased about 30 per cent, and there is reason, according to steel authorities, to expect that the improvement will continue. These authorities do not believe, however, that the corporation will have stepped its operations up to 100 per cent within six weeks, as some forecasters have indicated.

Outlook for Shareholders.

From the viewpoint of common shareholders, the outlook for 1930 is held to be promising. For one thing, this stock will have the benefit of the large bond redemptions which were carried out in 1929. The effect of these debt cancellations will be to enlarge substantially the proportion of earnings available for common stock.

Persons usually informed as to the Steel Corporation's plans do not anticipate any announcement on Tuesdav with respect to any possible capital readjustment. If anything of the kind is contemplated, it probably is far in the future, according to Wall Street opinion. The best information is that the directors have reached no decision regarding any stock split-up or stock dividend. There is a possibility, according to many in the financial district, that the directors on Tuesday, however, will announce an extra cash dividend of $1, similar to that announced three months ago.

Cigarettes at 89c a Carton, 24c Under Cost, in Price War

The cigarette price war between Bloomingdale Brothers and R. H. Macy & Co. carried carton prices yesterday nearly 24 cents below cost on the so-called "15-cents-for-twenty" brands.

Macy's cut carton price on these brands to 89 cents. This cut, it was explained, was because Bloomingdale's had reduced the carton price to 95 cents when Macy's was selling at 94 cents, just 6 per cent under the former Bloomingdale price of $1 a carton.

Manufacturers' list price is $6.40 for 1,000 cigarettes of this brand, which make five cartons. A 10 per cent discount on direct sales to dealers, with an additional 2 per cent discount for cash, brings the wholesale price to $1.128 a carton.

RAIL BOND OFFERS POINT TO BIG RISE

Increased Demand and Hoover's Plan Spur Carriers to Bring Out New Issues.

MANY PLEAS BEFORE I. C. C.

Big Four, Lackawanna and Cleveland Terminals Said to Consider Flotations.

With an impressive investment demand for high-grade bonds since the first of the year, indications are that new railroad bond financing for the first quarter of 1930 may run higher than in any similar period in recent years. In line with the agreement reached by the heads of the major railroads of the United States to support President Hoover in his plans for speeding up improvements throughout the country, many railroads have petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission for authority to market new bonds and notes, including many railway equipment trust issues.

The offering last week of $63,031,000 convertible 4½s to preferred and common stockholders by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company constitutes the largest railroad issue so far this year and the largest since that of the $72,335,000 Chicago & North Western 4¾s of 1939 early in December, which was the largest piece of rail financing in the bond field in 1929.

Among the principal issues being considered are $32,000,000 Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis 4½s, about $26,000,000 Delaware, Lackawanna & Western 4½s and 5s, and $18,000,000 Cleveland Union Terminals Company 4½s, due in 1977. The Erie has already received permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission to pledge or repledge $12,000,000 first consolidated mortgage general lien 4s as collateral for any short-term notes it might issue.

Railroad financing in the last six months of 1929 was at a low ebb. Only $160,585,000 of new issues were marketed, including equipment trust certificates, according to figures compiled by THE NEW YORK TIMES. In addition to the Chicago & North Western 4¾s offered in December, the only other large railroad financing was the marketing of $13,500,000 Baltimore & Ohio 4½ per cent equipment trust certificates in October.

In the first half of 1929 new rail issues aggregating $259,179,000 were placed on the market, headed by the $65,166,000 Southern Pacific 4½s of 1969 in March, thus making the total railroad financing for the year $419,764,000, or less than 12 per cent of the total bond financing of 1929, which reached $3,671,589,790, comprising 824 issues. The number of rail issues in 1929 totaled thirty-four.

The shrinkage of new rail financing in recent years has been marked. In 1928 the total was $424,483,000, and in 1927 $609,156,500. Thus far this year railroad bonds totaling $100,234,000 have been placed on the market, whereas in the corresponding period last year only a single rail issue, amounting to $562,000, was marketed.

The bond market has arrived at a stage at which the success of one large issue in a given group, whether public utility, railroad or industrial, usually encourages the quick offering of other issues falling in the same category. For example, the offering of the $150,000,000 American Telephone and Telegraph Company debenture 5s two weeks ago was followed by the quick offering of $69,300,000 additional public utility bonds the same week, constituting the largest weekly total of public utility bonds offerings in recent years.

Thus, the time is viewed as ripe for railroads to borrow more advantageously on a major scale than was possible in some time.

Purchase of Chesapeake & Hocking Advances Van Sweringens' Railroad Merger Plans

One of the final steps in a $650,000,000 railroad merger was approved unobtrusively by the Interstate Commerce Commission last week. The commission then gave permission for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway to acquire the Chesapeake & Hocking Railway, which was built in 1927 from Gregg to Valley Crossing to connect the C. & O. and the Hocking Valley Railroad. The C. & H. has issued to the C. & O. 148,070 shares of $100 par capital stock, which will be surrendered in payment for the C. & H. acquisition. No other financing will be required.

The next step will be to merge the Hocking Valley with the C. & O. Directors and shareholders of each of the railroads have approved terms for their merger and these terms have been submitted to the commission. When the commission approves this step the merger of the C. & O., the Hocking Valley and the Pere Marquette will be complete. The roads will be operated as one system in the same way that the Big Four and Michigan Michigan Central will be operated under the recent authorization of the commission as part of the New York Central.

When the Hocking Valley is merged with the C. & O., O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen will have seen consummated an important part of their $2,000,000,000 merger plan. The Nickel Plate and the Erie remain still to be merged, but their inclusion was approved by the commission in its general consolidation plan. This plan also awarded to the C. & O. the Lackawanna, which, unlike the Nickel Plate and the Erie, is not controlled by the Van Sweringens.

The Chesapeake & Hocking is a double track line 63 miles long, including 5.97 miles of second main track owned by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and operated under trackage rights. Before completion of the C. & H., the C. & O. used the Norfolk & Western Railway between Waverly, Ohio, which is near Gregg, and Valley Crossing under a trackage agreement. Under this arrangement, C. & O. traffic between these points was limited to 600 cars daily in each direction.

In concurring with the decision, Joseph B. Eastman held that, since the commission had prepared a general consolidation plan under Section 5 of the interstate commerce act, the C. & O.-C. & H. merger should have been approved under that section and not through "the legally unsound practice of authorizing such transactions as this under the provisions of Section 1 (18)."

SIMMONS LAYS DROP TO HUGE FLOTATIONS

Head of Stock Exchange Gives His Opinions of Causes and Effects of Market's Break.

SPEAKS IN PHILADELPHIA

Reports Speculation Declined as Volume of New Listed Securities Rose.

DEFENDS SHORT SELLING

Senator Allen and General Atterbury Also Make Addresses Before Transportation Club.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 25.—The "colossal output" of new stock issues placed on the market early last Fall "converted an inevitable but orderly declining securities market during September into the panic which we witnessed in October and November," E. H. H. Simmons, president of the New York Stock Exchange, told more than 1,000 members of the Transportation Club of the Pennsylvania Railroad here tonight. Mr. Simmons, Senator Henry J. Allen of Kansas and General W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, were speakers at the club's thirty-first annual dinner, held in the Benjamin Franklin Hotel. Samuel H. Walker was toastmaster.

In an extended discussion of the stock market crisis, Mr. Simmons named the high price levels, the practice of gauging the value of securities by multiplying their most recently reported net earnings a share by some factor which was deemed to be applicable to the industry in which the company was engaged, economic disturbances abroad, overproduction in industry and lack of equilibrium in buying and selling as contributing factors in the market break.

Huge New Stock Issues.

"The year 1929," Mr. Simmons said, "had already proved to be a very active year in the production of new securities. In addition to a record amount of new stock issues publicly offered, the market was called upon to absorb an enormous amount of new stock issued by our leading companies through rights to subscribe. During the first ten months of 1929 companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange alone acquired the aggregate sum of $2,319,302,000 through right financing, which at the same time burdened the market with new securities to the extent of approximately $3,328,800,000. This right financing was particularly active in June last, when listed companies obtained $816,674,300 by the issuance of new secruities which had a current market value of approximately $1,276,092,000. At the same time the public offerings of share issues, already very great, proceeded unabated; in July they amounted in net capital to about $800,000,000, in August to $750,000,000, in September to the prodigious sum of $1,200,000,000, and even in October to $725,000,000. In each of these months the bulk of the securities offered to the public consisted of share issues and largely represented the securities of new investment trusts and finance companies. In September alone investment trusts and holding companies put on the market about $650,000,000 of new securities.

"In ordinary circumstances such a huge issuance of new securities would at once have seemed excessive. But the idea seemed to prevail that investment trust and finance company issues did not actually absorb any new public capital because the proceeds of tehse issues would be used to purchase other outstanding issues. Many of these trusts, however, loaned money on call and invested in foreign securities instead of immediately buying American securities. The situation would have been vastly healthier if the public could have gained a more accurate idea of the actual assets behind American investment trust and finance company issues."

Overspeculation Disputed.

"Every serious break in the stock market," Mr. Simmons continued, "is always attributed to overspeculation, but if we are to ascertain its exact responsibility for the 1929 stock panic we must consider the actual facts. Many people seem to have the notion that the volume of trading on the Exchange is in itself a sign of unsound and harmful speculative conditions and a necessary precursor to stock panics. This view is, however, not at all supported by the facts. When one studies the volume of share trading on the Stock Exchange during recent years, it becomes at once apparent that the peak of activity occurred not before the crisis of October, 1929, but in November, 1928. This is all the more striking because of the fact that during 1929 there were added to the list over 350,000,000 additional shares of stock. Naturally, the only accurate way to measure Stock Exchange activity is to consider the proportion of listed shares turned over. Figures in this regard show that through the first half of 1929 share dealings on the New York Stock Exchange were declining both actually and in proportion to share listings. If mere volume of dealings or proportionate velocity of dealings on the Exchange were a cause of the panic, we should have had a panic not last Fall but a year ago."

With reference to the effect of margin speculation Mr. Simmons said:

"The problem of regulating the extent to which the public shall employ credit to purchase or hold securities is one which cannot be solved by any single agency. The Stock Exchange by requiring large margins can and did exert a restraining influence, but it could not control the situation because its rules and regulations apply only to its members. Many securities are listed on other stock exchanges besides the New York Stock Exchange, and many customers have banks carry their securities for them, even though the purchase of these securities was made for them by a stock broker."

Foreign Influences Felt.

Mr. Simmons discussed the influence of foreign liquidation on the market here by enumerating various

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Higher, Most Changes Small—Sterling Closes Week at Lowest.

The week ended with little or no change from the inertia which had been prevailing on all markets. Stock Exchange prices rose again, with the largest business of any Saturday thus far in the new year; but the advances were mostly small and the 1,500,000 shares of transactions, though larger than the five-hour trading of Jan. 13, were well below the December Saturday average. Sterling ended at the month's low price; it had fallen ¼ cent during the week and 1½ cents since the year began. Silver bullion at London recovered ⅛ penny.

Perhaps the most striking statistical week-end showing was the preliminary statement of bank checks drawn and cleared during the week. For the first time in many years their total was far below the corresponding week in a series of twelve-months. Estimated decrease from 1929 in the whole United States was 28 per cent, in New York City alone it was 36 per cent, and in each case the total value of the week's exchanges was below that of any year since 1924. It will be remembered that, in December as a whole, although clearings fell 12½ per cent below 1928, they largely exceeded 1927 and 1926.

The past week's principal ground of encouragement was recovery in the steel trade's output; which, although hardly restoring production to a normal level, was considerably more emphatic than had been expected. It is that trade whose returns will be most closely watched hereafter. If the more or less widely predicted "replenishment demand" is presently to follow December's drastically curtailed production, the steel industry should traditionally indicate its arrival first.

It is very apt to happen that the turn of the year, without changing the general aspects of an industrial situation, will bring some new phase of it suddenly into view. This seems to have been the case with prices. While no one appears to be gravely disturbed about the evident downward trend, the continuance of it is beginning to be referred to in surveys of nearly every market. The matter comes up in unexpected ways. The grain trade had come to believe rather implicitly, a few months ago, that the Farm Board and the cooperatives, when they had got their machinery into working order, would stop the decline of wheat—especially with a world crop 11 per cent smaller than a year ago. The cooperatives have visibly been manoeuvring to sustain wheat prices, yet wheat is selling 40 cents lower than in July, 9 or 10 cents below the year-end figure and at virtually the same price as last January, when the market was being submerged with deliveries from the greatest world crop ever harvested.

The steel trade was confident, even last November, that prices would not decline, because neither sellers nor buyers wished for a reduction. Yet The Iron Age now figures its "composite" of prices for steel products at 2 per cent less than in November, 4⅛ per cent below last April and, except for two or three months of 1927, at the lowest average since August, 1922. This week even the mercantile agencies took up the story, reporting that merchants who would ordinarily be re-stocking now were postponing purchases because of a declining market.

The phenomenon is more interesting economically from the fact that it does not, like the fall of prices in 1921 and 1908, follow a period in which prices had been put up rapidly in an era of industrial speculation. In part, the present trend doubtless reflects the altered attitude of the community at large since the Autumn stock market collapse. Probably, however, it also indicates return to the general movement which has really been in progress ever since the confusion which immediately followed return of peace. Gradual downward readjustment, extending over a very considerable period of time, has at any rate always been one sequel to the violent advance which accompanied every great war in history.

BANKERS DISCUSS WORLD GOLD SUPPLY

supplies of far greater effectiveness for international purposes than was formerly the case.

Decline in Production Predicted.

A somewhat less cheering note was sounded in England recently. The annual bullion letter of Samuel Montague & Co., published this month in London, stated:

"The present world rate of production of gold is likely to be maintained for the next few years, but after about five years a decline, gathering force with time, is in prospect."

The letter gives Joseph Kitchin's estimate of the world's gold production in 1929 as £83,500,000, about $417,500,000, the same as the figure for 1928 and not far from the figures of recent years.

An attitude exemplifying the opinion of the majority of American bankers on the subject was voiced by Albert H. Wiggin, chairman of the Chase National Bank, in his recent annual report to stockholders of the bank.

"There is enough gold in the world to do the legitimate business of the world at comfortable rates of interest," Mr. Wiggin said. "There is not enough gold to finance such a speculation as we have recently experienced, and there is not enough surplus gold to justify extremely cheap money at the present time."

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

News, Comment and Incident, On the Stock Exchange and In the Financial Markets.

Further advances occurred in various groups of the Stock Exchange list yesterday under the leadership of United States Steel. Some of the gains were reduced before the close, but final quotations in the "trading favorites" were not far from the best prices of the day. Transactions ran slightly above 1,500,000 shares. The most important price changes on the up side were in Steel, American Telephone and Telegraph, Auburn Auto, Atchison, Colorado Fuel and Iron, General Electric, New York Central, Westinghouse Electric and Youngstown Sheet and Tube. A few groups, notably the steels and oils, showed uniform strength for the first time in some days.

The Blue Chips.

It was remarked last week that the market's "blue chips," in good times and bad, continue to give the best account of themselves. An example esterday was in Auburn Auto, which shot up 26¼ points, on only a moderate volume of sales and once more got in the "two hundred class," with a rise from 193 to 215. The stock had probably the widest range of any on the Exchange last year. After reaching 514 it dropped to 120. As is usually the case with such issues, the floating supply is extremely small, and any unusual pressure on either side of the market brings a violent move.

The Tipsters Are Back.

Sometimes one can get a good idea of the amount of public interest in the stock market by the number of tipsters in Wall Street and the volume and character of the "points" they distribute. Just now, the legion of tipsters who found happy hunting grounds in the financial district before the crash and then were silent for three months are commencing to straggle back, each lugging along a favorite tip or two by the ears. Low-priced stocks, selling below $10 per share, appear to be the favorites of the tip-sheets at the moment.

Forthcoming Reports.

Stockholders of many leading corporations will get news this week of the earnings of their companies in 1929 and, in general, these reports will show good gains over 1928, both in gross and net, despite the development of an unsatisfactory third quarter. In addition to the Steel Corporation's report on Tuesday, that of Montgomery Ward is expected during the week, with the Radio Corporation to make public its figures at the end of the week. Half a dozen others are expected to be made public this week. While it is always possible to get a good idea of the financial standing of most of the leading corporations through the quarterly reports submitted to the Exchanges and made public at the time, there is always much interest in the annual reports, too.

The State of Trade.

There was apparently considerable difference of opinion in the financial community last week concerning the actual state of trade. In interpreting "business indices" one group of bankers was reported to find considerable uncertainty in the outlook for part of this year, whereas another group contended that almost every report received in the last week or two has shown that the contraction in business activity was drawing to a close with great rapidity. Each group finds the other's stand illogical. The situation is confusing to the man on the sidelines, who cannot understand how the same sets of statistics can provoke such a clash of opinion. It is also somewhat complicated by the fact that some very good people have urged their friends to emphasize the good points and minimize those which are not so good, in order to encourage confidence.

Concerning Foreign Loans.

In reference to the numerous reports from European financial centres, that American banking groups are negotiating government and corporation loans, bond houses here remarked last week that this does not imply that any "flood" of foreign bond offerings is likely. While it is true that conversations are taking place constantly between foreign government officials or the heads of foreign corporations and American bankers, these are in most instances of a very informal nature. During the past two years, foreign financing has been at a low ebb as far as the actual offering of foreign bond issues here is concerned, so that such loans as were made have been in the nature of bank credits running for various short periods. These may ultimately be converted into long-term loans. But foreign governments and corporations seem to have been unwilling to pay the high rates prevailing and therefore must wait until the bond market shows sufficient improvement to permit borrowing at more favorable terms.

The St. Louis-O'Fallon Dispute.

The argument between counsel for the St. Louis & O'Fallon and counsel for opposing organizations, in the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission last week, proceeded along the lines expected in financial circles. The hearing was for the purpose of determining what was the correct interpretation of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the famous O'Fallon valuation case. That decision held that the commission had not given sufficient weight to reproduction costs in its valuation of the O'Fallon. Last week the O'Fallon counsel asserted this to mean that reproduction cost should be the dominant consideration in determining what a railroad was worth. Opposing counsel maintained that such a view was unsupported by decisions ranging over fifty years. As yet, the exact weight to be given to reproduction costs in respect to railroad valuation remains to be determined.

Next Tuesday's U. S. Steel Report.

Earnings of United States Steel for the December quarter, which will be published next Tuesday, are naturally awaited with great interest. Judged by precedent, they may give a surprise to the market, either favorable or unfavorable. Actual monthly earnings of the corporation have often been kept up, even after several months of trade reaction, through the influence of orders placed earlier in the year and at higher prices. In the fourth quarter of 1920, for instance, the Steel Corporation's net earnings were the largest it had reported since the war. Even the December earnings were the largest for that month since 1917. The decline really began in March, 1921, when earnings were barely half those of January and less than half of March, 1920, and they fell in July to the lowest since February, 1915. The trade reaction of 1927, however, affected earnings more quickly. Decrease from the preceding year began in April, and the December quarter showed shrinkage of $22,300,000 from the same quarter of 1926.

STOCK TREND IS SEEN AS A GRADUAL RISE

Trading Has Fallen Off, With Public Operations Reduced and Investing Increased.

VOLUME HALF OF YEAR AGO

Odd-Lot Buying Enlarges Lists of Stockholders of Leading Concerns by 25%.

The stock markets of the country appear to have fully recovered their equilibrium after the dramatic Autumn decline, and while the movements since the first of the year in the main have been rather narrow, at least in comparison with those that occurred last year a steady and consistent upward trend appears to have been established in the leading issues.

Possibly the most significant fact about the advances is that they have been accomplished on what Wall Street, geared to big markets, considers a small volume of trading. This may be traced directly to the absence of public participation in stocks and to the large and dominating part professional speculators and strictly investment buyers are taking. It probably is not far wrong to say that fewer than half of the people who were "in the market" last Autumn have no more interest in it than of pure curiosity at present.

The effects, of course, are to be observed in the small attendance in brokerage offices, the lighter staffs now able to handle comfortably the 2,500,000 to 3,500,000-share days and finally in the restricted volume of turnover on the Exchange.

Dealings for the year to date have aggregated 45,306,460 shares on the New York Stock Exchange. One year ago at this time they had totaled 92,569,240. The same is true of the Curb, the over-the-counter markets and the exterior exchanges. Business in securities, compared with a year ago, has just about been cut into halves.

Rise of 6.82 in Averages.

The upward trend of the market, established toward the end of 1929, and interrupted by moderate reaction since that time, is reflected in a gain of 6.82 in the combined average of fifty representative stocks from Dec. 31 to yesterday's closing prices, but the rises have been established in rather ragged and irregular fashion, and it has not been trading, by any means, calculated to catch the public's fancy, or to bring in a legion of buyers. Of the twenty-five typical industrial shares used in the averages, the movement has extended from a maximum gain of 25¼ points, established by the J. I. Case Company, to a loss of 3¾ in International Telegraph and Telephone.

In the railroad list the range has been an upturn of 12 points, established by Chesapeake & Ohio, to a loss of 2 points by Lehigh Valley and Delaware, Lackawanna & Western. Individual issues quoted on the Exchange and not included in these averages have established wider fluctuations, but the aggregate of the fifty issues present a good idea of the trend.

New Leaders Brought to Front.

Two significant developments in the market since the first of the year have attracted much attention in Wall Street. The first is the large gain in odd-lot buying, which has brought an expansion in stockholders' names on corporation books; the second development is that in the readjustments after the October-November break, manw of the then popular stocks have entirely lost this attribute, while new leaders have been brought to the fore.

The odd-lot buying since Jan. 1, and which was especially evident during the break, represents a redistribution of many corporate securities which had been concentrated in a few holdings. It has been estimated that the stockholders of leading corporations on the Exchange have increased by almost 25 per cent in the last four months.

What is happening in Wall Street, and among speculators-investors generally, is that a sober period of query has developed. People are no longer buying quotations, listening to tipsters or dashing into the market just because somebody declares that a particular stock is "going to 1,000." The financial manuals are being delved into as never before and Wall Street, having learned a costly lesson, is disposed to take it easy until a clearer view of the business situation provides the groundwork for expanding markets and higher prices.

Changes in Fifty Issues.

The action of the fifty stocks, twenty-five industrials and twenty-five rails, used in compiling the market averages of THE NEW YORK TIMES, which have been maintained since 1911, furnishes an interesting picture. The changes since the final trading of 1929, to yesterday's close, were as follows:

The market at the moment appears to be fluctuating largely by groups, much more than it did during any time last year. The steels, for instance, were strong last week, in direct response to improvement in that industry, while shares in other groups, in which conditions do not yet show marked improvement, were idle or irregularly lower.

YOUR PROTECTION

YOUR PROSPERITY and happiness are protected under the Investors Syndicate plan by assets of more than $32,000,000, which include first mortgages totaling over $27,000,000, on city residential property conservatively appraised at more than $57,000,000. E. M. Richardson, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he is Secretary and Treasurer of the Investors Syndicate, and that the foregoing financial statement is true to the best of his knowledge, information and belief.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of January, 1930.

E. M. Richardson
Secretary and Treasurer.

(Notarial Seal) A. F. Wetter, Notary Public, Hennepin Co., Minn. My commission expires Sept. 26, 1934.

CERTIFICATE

We have audited the accounts pertaining to the above statement of Assets and Liabilities of the Investors Syndicate as of December 31, 1929, as shown by its books and records. Our audit included the actual verification of evidence of the possession of all its assets, together with appraisals of properties wherever such appraisals appeared necessary. We have also investigated the renewal experience of the Certificates and are of the opinion that the table of reserves adopted by the Syndicate, together with the future payments called for by the Certificates and interest accretions at the present rate will cover the discharge of all Certificates as they become due.

WE HEREBY CERTIFY that, in our opinion, the above balance sheet correctly reflects the financial condition of the Investors Syndicate as of December 31, 1929. The Syndicate has complied with all of our requirements as auditors.

ERIE ROAD CLEARS $6.04 FOR COMMON

Earnings for 1929 Show Rise From $4.93 a Share After Dividends on Preferred.

DECEMBER NET INCREASED

Maine Central Line More Than Doubles Income—Reading Also Gained Last Year.

The Erie Railroad reported yesterday net income of $11,677,709 for 1929, equal, after full 4 per cent dividends declared on first and second preferred stocks to $6.04 a share on 1,511,167 shares of common stock. This compares with $10,002,884, or $4.93 a share, after preferred requirements, earned in 1928, when no dividends of any kind were paid. The Erie resumed payment of preferred dividends last year for the first time since 1907.

Gross of the Erie in 1929 was $129,230,000, against $124,976,000 in 1928, but a large amount of this increase was absorbed, with the result that net operating income was $21,462,000, against $20,047,159.

The report was notable in that, contrary to the general trend among railroads, it showed a substantial increase in net income for December. This increase resulted despite a decrease of more than $1,000,000 in gross for the month.

Earnings of the Erie compare as follows:

BIG EQUIPMENT ORDERS PLACED BY RAILROADS

Chesapeake & Ohio to Spend $11,400,000—Contracts Come Here From Central America.

The Chesapeake & Ohio lines have placed orders for $11,400,000 worth of equipment. The C. & O. proper and the Hocking Valley have each ordered 20 locomotives from the Lima Locomotive Works. The Pere Marquette has ordered 15 large tenders from the same company. With boosters, the engines will have a tractive force of 105,000 pounds. The Lima orders totaled $5,900,000.

The C. & O. ordered 50 switch engines and 40 large tenders, the Hocking Valley 15 switch engines and the Pere Marquette 15 switch engines from the American Locomotive Company at a cost of $5,500,000. The large tenders were ordered to enable locomotives to make longer runs.

The International Railways of Central America has ordered three locomotives from the H. K. Porter Company, according to The Railway Age. The Alton & Southern is inquiring for one switching locomotive and the Central of New Jersey for five switching and five passenger locomotives. The Texas & Pacific is inquiring for twenty-five underframes and the Milwaukee Railroad is inquiring for two dining cars.

opportunity of real economic service to American business."

Mr. Lehman's suggestion that investment trusts should finance small industrial companies is said to be looked upon with favor by several large trusts. The Continental Chicago Corporation, in its recent financial report covering from Sept. 11 to Dec. 31, indicated that it was in a position to take care of the requirements of many growing corporations needing temporary financing pending the eventual underwriting and public offering of their securities. The company had $26,600,000 in cash, call loans and short-term notes in its treasury on Dec. 31.

Other investment trusts with large resources have been financing various kinds of enterprises for several months.

LISTED BONDS RISE IN QUIET MARKET

Price Ranges, However, Are Narrow in Both Domestic and Foreign Issues.

RAILS MOVE IRREGULARLY

Shubert and Pathe Gain in Theatre Group—Government Securities Steady to Firm.

The listed bond market showed moderate improvement yesterday during the two hours of quiet trading. Both domestic and foreign bonds averaged slightly higher, although most of the advances were relatively small. Only a handful of issues gained a point or more. Several public utility issues were among the principal gainers. Public Service Corporation of New Jersey jumped 2⅝ points to 190, Federal Light and Traction 5s, 2 points to 96, and American Telephone and Telegraph convertible 4½s of 1939, 2 points to 141½.

In the industrial group, Shubert Theatres 6s scored a recovery of 3 points to 45, and Pathé Exchange 7s, 2 points to 50. National Radiator 6½s moved up 2⅛ points on a single transaction. Sugar and oil bonds were quiet.

Railroad bonds showed some irregularity, but most of the net changes were fractional. Southern Railway 6½s proved a strong spot, moving up 1½ points to 124, and Southern Pacific 4½s, with warrants, held firm at 96⅛.

French Government bonds continued to feature the foreign loan group from the standpoint of activity. The 7½s and the 7s continued to hold close to the highs. French municipal loans were steady. South American issues were irregular, but closed higher on the average.

United States Government bonds, while quiet, were steady to firm. At present the demand favors the long-term issues. Final prices yesterday were up 2-32 to off the same amount.

REICHSBANK'S GOLD RESERVE INCREASES

2,681,000 Marks Added in Week—Further Reduction in Note Circulation.

BERLIN, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Reichsbank statement as of Jan. 23 shows the following changes in reichsmarks:

Gold coin and bullion	inc.	$2,681,000
Reserve in foreign currencies	inc.	2,177,000
Bills of exchange and checks	dec.	86,633,000
Silver and other coins	inc.	20,4[illegible]2,000
Notes on other banks	inc.	5,985,000
Advances	dec.	16,425,000
Investments	inc.	20,000
Other assets	inc.	1,918,000
Notes in circulation	dec.	284,492,000
Other maturing obligations	inc.	165,345,000
Other liabilities	dec.	678,000

Total gold holdings are now 2,286,458,000 gold marks.

The following table shows the Reichsbank's gold reserve for a series of recent weeks, compared with the two preceding years, in thousands of marks:

	1930.	1929.	1928.
Jan 23	2,286,458	2,729,176	1,863,428
Jan. 15	2,283,777	2,729,282	1,854,043
Jan. 9	2,283,382	2,729,345	1,834,505
	1929.	1928.	1927.
Dec. 31	2,283,116	2,729,331	1,864,643
Dec. 23	2,264,664	2,729,283	1,860,557

The gold holdings of Jan. 7, 1929, 2,729,345,000 marks, were the highest in the Reichsbank's history. The gold holdings of June 22, 1,754,327,000 marks, were the smallest of 1929.

The following is the Reichsbank's outstanding note circulation in thousands of reichsmarks:

	1930.	1929.
Jan. 23	3,952,553	3,809,254
Jan. 15	4,187,045	4,080,428
Jan. 9	4,604,679	4,484,184
	1929.	1928.
Dec. 31	5,043,677	4,930,069
Dec. 23	4,579,047	4,481,522

The note circulation of Dec. 31 was the largest since the reform of the currency in 1924. Prior to that date the high record reached was 4,930,020,000 marks, on Dec. 31, 1928. In gold values this was the largest since the war, although, in terms of the old depreciated paper the circulation reached 496½ quintillions of marks, or 496½ billion billions, on Dec. 31, 1923.

The Reichsbank's rediscount rate remains at 6½ per cent, to which it was reduced from 7 per cent on Jan. 13, at which rate it had remained since it was reduced from 7½ per cent on Nov. 2, 1929.

Profits From Underwriting

THE preliminary statements of insurance companies, just being issued, indicate a substantial increase in earnings from underwriting operations in 1929.

Insuranshares Corporation of Delaware, an investment company specializing in holdings in the outstanding insurance companies, recently made an investigation of underwriting results over a ten-year period. A group of the 100 leading companies was studied. As a group, those in which Insuranshares Corporation of Delaware has investments, showed an excellent profit from this source, while the remaining companies, as a group, showed a substantial loss from the same source.

The indicated results for 1929 bear out the sound policy of the management of Insuranshares Corporation of Delaware in selecting only those companies which are most likely to show the largest underwriting earnings.

Full information will be gladly furnished upon request.

The Essential Investment

No utility investment portfolio should lack securities of water works companies.

NATIONAL WATER WORKS CORPORATION

offers a prime, long-term investment. One that can be put away for years without worry because its subsidiaries sell a commodity for which demand can only increase and which is virtually unaffected by economic changes.

6.14% a year with strong probability of great enhancement of principal over a period of years.

NEWS OF MARKETS IN PARIS AND BERLIN

French Stocks Fluctuate in Narrow Limits, With the Trading Restricted.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 25.—The closing session of the week on the Bourse was dull, like those of the last few days, with an inclination to profit-taking still evident. The market barely remained quiet, however, and there was no serious downward movement of prices.

Most fluctuations were held within narrow limits. All groups were fairly calm except oils, which showed irregularity. Banks and French rentes were steady, the latter closing as follows: The 3 per cents, 89.90; 1918 4s, 99.70; 1920 amortizable 5s, 136.50; 1928 5s, 104.25; 1920 6s, 103.85; 1927 amortizable 6s, 108.50.

Berlin Market Depressed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—Due to renewed bear attacks on Siemens Shares, the Boerse which had opened with a firm tendency today closed the week greatly depressed. At the official beginning trading was brisk and most issues, including Siemens and other electricals, the mining group, artificial silks and the potash group, advanced several points.

During the course of the session, the bears attacked Siemens stock which rapidly dropped eight points and caused a general decline. The fact that Contango was reduced to 7¾ per cent failed to stimulate the market and the Boerse closed at the lowest quotations of the day.

Bonds for Profit

Since the immediate trend of the stock market is at best uncertain, the well-advised investor will, we believe, confine his selections during the next few months to carefully selected bonds and preferred stocks. In this way he can secure a good return on his surplus funds, with every possibility of price appreciation without the worry incident to speculative securities.

What Security can give you these advantages?

Few things are surer, in the next ten years, we believe, than the growth and prosperity of business on the American continent.

Why not put yourself in a position to take advantage of this seemingly certain prosperity?

You can do this through the purchase of Federated Capital Corporation securities. When you invest in Federated, you have an interest in what experts have selected as the 270 strongest companies on the North American continent.

Thus, you gain with safety through diversity and management . . . and profit from the growth of America.

If such advantages interest you, write for booklet T-59.

RETAIL TRADE HOLDS UP.

Department Stores in New England Report Sales Normal.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 24.—Although business continues moderately depressed in New England, signs point to early improvement in some lines.

Retail trade holds up surprisingly well. Sales by local department stores, stimulated by mark-down sales, have held up to, and in some cases slightly exceeded, the same levels of a year ago. Manufacturers of men's clothing and of women's cloaks and suits report business as satisfactory.

Specialty shops have been doing fairly well. Sales of jewelry at wholesale are 10 per cent over January of last year.

Following a spurt early in January, the shoe manufacturing industry has slowed down somewhat. Retailers are placing orders slowly. The fact tht Easter comes so late this year is believed to be an important factor in this situation. Litlle improvement is noted in textiles.

Building operations continue quiet. New contracts awarded during the week ended Jan. 21 were about the average of recent weeks, although considerably below the level of the corresponding week of the previous year.

SHOE INDUSTRY IMPROVES.

Foodstuffs Manufacturers Also Gain in Philadelphia Area.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 24.—The industries which seem to be making the most headway at present in this district are those engaged in manufacturing foodstuffs, shoes and leather products.

Mercerized yarn mills are running at full capacity on orders booked, but deliveries on specifications are said to be somewhat slow. Manufacturers of women's dresses and blouses report increased activity, but competition is keen. Jobbers of sweaters find business more active than a year ago.

Since the beginning of the year there has been an improved demand for rubber goods. Bus competition has affected adversely the demand for electric cars and one equipment plant here has reduced its force. Severe Winter weather has interfered with construction and has increased the number of unemployed. There is considerable construction in sight, but work will not begin until Spring.

Manufacturers of hosiery and tapestries have a fair supply of orders for February, with a prospect that next month's business will be ahead of that of a year ago.

Merchants have made special efforts to present a fine display of attractive furniture for the yearly sales in this line next month. The appeal will be made to the buyers of the better grades, as there are fewer new small houses to be supplied, owing to slackness in the realty market.

The steel situation is improving slowly, and both hard and soft coal are in better demand.

MIDWEST SITUATION MIXED.

Upturn in Steel Offset by Retail Trade Drop in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—Increasing optimism in basic industries, accompanied by an upturn in local steel operations, has been ofset by unfavorable developments in other lines and sentiment regarding the near future is decidedly mixed.

Steel ingot output is now about 75 per cent, with sales and specifications against old contracts showing increases.

Retail trade is spotty, the failure of the city and county to meet payrolls being an adverse factor.

Sales of the two large mail order houses by mail are understood to be close to the levels of a year ago but the turnover in the retail stores which they also operate has dropped per unit.

Building permits for the week ending Jan. 23 number only fifteen with a total value of $399,700, due in part to zero weather.

Advance indications on the automobile show, opening tomorrow warrant a very large attendance and for sales somewhat better than those of the recent New York exhibition.

SLACKER TRADE NOTED.

Fifth District Reports Year-End Slump Continuing.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 24.—Wholesale trade in every line in the Fifth Federal Reserve District was lower in 1929 than in 1928, the Richmond Bank reports. The largest decrease was 5.9 per cent for dry goods.

At the end of 1929 stocks of groceries, dry goods and hardware were smaller than those on Dec. 31, 1928, but shoe stocks were materially larger.

Reports of sixty-nine wholesale concerns on December business showed lower sales than in November for five lines.

Sixty-nine wholesale firms, representing five leading lines, reporting on December business, showed lower sales than during November, but the decrease was most seasonal. Hardware, drugs, dry goods and groceries also showed a decrease below December, 1928, while shoes gained 1.1 per cent.

Retail business for January apparently will fall below that of a year ago, but more seasonable weather this week has stimulated trade somewhat.

Approvals of projects to cost $10,000,000 in Virginia and West Virginia this week by the directors of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad is expected to help employment conditions in the Spring and Summer. This sum is in addition to large orders expected by car equipment plants in the district for the Chesapeake & Ohio and the Seaboard Air Line.

BUILDING BOOM IN ATLANTA.

Doubling of 1929 Outlay of $13,200,000 Is Predicted for This Year.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 25.—Announcement was made here today by the State Bureau of Markets that an all-time weekly record had been made when fifty-eight carloads of Georgia hogs had been disposed of through the Bureau, bringing $72,153.

Building experts in Atlanta today predicted that the value of Atlanta construction this year would more than double that of last year, when the outlay was $13,200,000. A $10,000,000 hotel is to be erected. Work on all the big projects is due to start in February.

Rome, Ga., had a record year in construction work in 1929, projects completed totaling about $4,000,000.

Dr. A. M. Soule, president of the State College of Agriculture, notes a continued growth in intensive farming in this State. The acreage is less than ever, production more, he says.

ST. LOUIS AREA QUICKENING.

Shoe, Steel and Iron Plants Are Active on Good Demand.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 24.—Within the last week evidences of betterment in a few lines have been noted in the Eighth Federal Reserve District.

Shoe manufacturers report a good demand, plants operating at a good schedule and January orders better than expected.

Steel and iron plants are active and executives are optimistic. Good rail orders have been received and better are expected.

Heavy snows, which have done much to slow down trade, have benefited Winter crops.

Money is in fair demand at from 4¾ to 5¼ and collections are from fair to good. It is expected that the building situation will materially improve in the Spring.

WEATHER RETARDS BUSINESS.

Snow and Cold in Middle West Affect January Trade.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 25.—Normally a good month, January business has been retarded by the wide covering of snow and ice and subzero temperatures all over the West. Transportation has been particularly handicapped.

Retail sales have fallen below a year ago, and wholesale business has been depressed by a slow demand and inability to make prompt deliveries.

The general trend has been reflected in a decrease in bank clearings compared with a year ago. Money, however, is plentiful and Federal Reserve Bank officials believe that the January thaw, although later than usual, will be followed by a decided improvement in conditions.

Requisitions for freight cars for the first quarter of 1930 are expected to show only a small decrease from a year ago.

The weekly statement of the Kansas City Federal Reserve Bank showed a further decrease of about $2,000,000 in bills discounted, making a reduction of $9,250,000 in two weeks. Total clearings through the bank for the week were $198,000,000, an increase of $14,000,000 over the preceding week, but $30,000,000 less than a year ago.

SPOTTY IN THE NORTHWEST.

Industry Gains and Retail Trade Falls, Both Slightly.

Special to The New York Times.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 24.—Business in the Ninth District this month continues to exhibit a spotty condition, with industrial production showing slight increase over a year ago while retail department store volume is somewhat lower.

Freight traffic during the past two weeks was slightly under the same period a year ago, although flour shipments, postal receipts, building contracts and wholesale trade are showing an upward trend.

An increase of debits to individual accounts was evidenced, chiefly in the twin cities, rural Minnesota and Southeastern South Dakota. Decreases in individual debits predominated in Montana, North Dakota and in the lumbering and mining regions.

Bankers look for a substantial upturn in business volume after the first quarter. Construction is expected to show a resumption of activity early in the Spring, with 1930 building ahead of the 1929 figures.

INDUSTRY QUIET ON COAST.

Business Activity Has Receded but in an Orderly Way.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 24.—There is enough evidence at hand now to show that business activity has receded considerably during the past two months. An encouraging factor is that the Pacific Coast sections have stood up as well or better than other parts of the country.

The production of major concerns has declined more than usual for the season, and December figures generally show declines when compared with November.

Annual reports covering the mercantile business have not made their appearance with but one exception, which was favorable, showing a strong increase in sales for the year. Despite the present tone, leaders do not anticipate extensive depression.

Agricultural districts have apparently had a good year due to the high prices paid by packers and consumers.

Industrially, last month was the poorest since the peak was reached last Summer. Building volume was the lowest in nine years.

Retail business was higher in December than last year, but wholesale trade showed a decline. Commodity price levels were believed to be far below last year, and slightly below November.

Banks have a record volume of money out, largely through carrying security loans.

GAIN IN CLEVELAND AREA.

Auto Orders Raise Steel Output—Coal Production Above Year Ago.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 24.—Increases in automobile orders are responsible for accelerated production in iron and steel centres of this district. Operations at Youngstown approximate 70 per cent of capacity, with Pittsburgh at 65 to 70 per cent, both localities having increased 5 per cent during the past week. Output is still 15 to 20 per cent below last year at this time. Steel orders, although increasing, are not in quantities to warrant the continued operations at present levels for an extended period.

Pig iron sales have shown marked improvement recently, sales at Cleveland reaching 33,000 tons during the past week. Bids for equipment for Van Sweringen roads were closed Jan. 22 for 150,000 tons of steel to be used in construction of 130 locomotives and 55 tenders and 11,400 freight cars for the Chesapeake & Ohio.

Coal production in the district continues ahead of early 1929. Cold weather has increased household demand and stimulated production. Prices continue low but are better than a year ago.

January sales in department stores are good. Final reports show that December volume was 1.6 per cent below 1928. Employment continues at a lower level than a year ago.

neer in an extremely complex field, is regarded by many who know him as doubtful.

The presidency of the Bank for International Settlement, it is pointed out, is a full-time post which will require the undivided energies of the man who fills it. Mr. McGarrah, it is understood, has expressed no desire to change his mode of life to the extent which such a position would necessitate.

A circumstance which renders guesswork on the subject of the identity of the American directors particularly hazardous is the fact that none of the individuals mentioned cares to adopt the ungracious course of refusing an honor which has not even been offered to him.

Jackson E. Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of New York, and Melvin A. Taylor, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, who have been engaged in assisting the European experts in the formulation of plans for the international bank, are now on their way home on the steamship Bremen. It is regarded as likely that they may be able to throw some light upon the probable personnel of the board of directors of the bank when they arrive this week.

Formal announcement of the selections must come from abroad, however. Those who have been instrumental in developing the plan of the reparations agreement and the world bank of which it is a part, namely Owen D. Young, J. P. Morgan, Thomas W. Lamont and Thomas Nelson Perkins, who constituted the American delegation to the Paris conference on reparations, have steadfastly refused to divulge the names of those American who have been under consideration for election to the board of the bank.

Differ on Scope of Bank.

While the position of president of the Bank for Internationad Settlements will undoubtedly be an important one, just how important it will be remains to be seen. Bankers here are not all agreed on the merits of the institution. While many look upon it as offering, apart from its function as a distributing agency for reparations payments, an important instrument for the development of international banking cooperation, others believe that this phase of the institution has been exaggerated.

One banker, discussing the qualifications of the man selected to be president of the institution, remarked recently that the man selected should be "big enough to make the job a small one." This point of view is a somewhat isolated one, however. Many leading bankers consider that the international bank will take an important place in world affairs by offering a meeting ground for the heads of the central banks of the world.

It is not until after the bank has been functioning for some time, bankers agree, that a just estimate of its importance can be arrived at. How far-reaching its powers may be and how complete will be the cooperation which it meets from the central banks can only be guessed at in advance. Much will depend, it is remarked, upon the character and ability of the man selected to be head of the bank, and his task, it is suggested, may prove to be a difficult one.

PRICES MOVE HIGHER IN COUNTER TRADING

Most of the Insurance and Bank Stocks Stronger—Chain Stores Quiet.

Stocks tended to move higher yesterday in the over-the-counter market as interest remained active. In the bank group Guaranty, Chase and National City responded to this interest to score gains, while Fidelity and Lawyers Title were also higher. Corn Exchange and Manufacturers Trust Co. fell back slightly.

Prices in the insurance group held firm and a strong undertone prevailed. Baltimore American and Peoples National Fire were among those to close higher. The industrial group was led by Technicolor, while A. O. Smith, Standard Textile A and Clinchfield Coal common were also higher.

There was little interest in the chain store group, but prices tended to hold firm and closed near their openings. In the communications group Peninsular Telephone A was up and Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph fell off slightly.

INVESTMENT RESEARCH BUREAU

FURTHER BEAR MARKET AHEAD?

The 1929 bear market—using accepted averages—ran from mid-September to mid-November, a period of only two months. The stock market is now, on the average, approximately above its low levels.

The bear market of 1923-1924 ran fourteen months; that of 1919-1921, twenty-one months; that of 1916-1917, fourteen months; and 1912-1914, about two years.

MORE LIQUIDATION?

Can a decline of two months—even though extremely severe—lay the foundation for a broad bull movement? Obviously, a two-month bear market is one thing and a longer one is another...

Or are there conditions today quite different from those that applied to previous bear movements? Is the loss of 45% in average stock prices... the extent of the other bear markets?

These questions are discussed, specific recommendations are given... in a NEW Analysis, just released. Copies are available for distribution, FREE.

Simply ask for NT/R-26.

SALES RISE IN ISSUES OF CANADIAN BANKS

Progress and Expansion of Chartered Institutions Help Demand for Shares.

LOW PRICE-EARNINGS RATIO

Average Is 13.8 Times Net of 1929, Compared With 22.8 for Large Concerns Here.

The remarkable progress and expansion of Canadian chartered banks in 1929 has greatly stimulated the market for Canadian bank stocks in view of the steadily growing assets and earning power of these institutions, according to a survey completed by Bongard & Co. At current quotations, it is calculated, the stock of the eight largest Canadian banks are selling on an average of 13.8 times their 1929 net earnings, compared with a ratio of 22.8 for thirteen leading New York bank shares. The same Canadian bank stocks are selling for 1.2 times their book values, against a ratio of 2.7 for the New York bank shares.

In view of the Canadian system of branch banking, the institutions are not dependent on a limited number of industries, nor are their activities confined to any one local area. They have shown remarkable consistency of earning power over a period of years, according to the survey.

"Since 1920 the combined paid-up capital of the Canadian chartered banks—the Bank of Montreal, Bank of Nova Scotia, Bank of Toronto, Banque Provinciale du Canada, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Royal Bank of Canada, Dominion Bank, Banque Canadienne Nationale, Imperial Bank of Canada and the Weyburn Security Bank—has increased from $127,269,000 to $142,525,000, a rise of $15,256,000, or 12 per cent," the survey says.

"Demand deposits increased 14.3 per cent, savings deposits 13.3 per cent, and deposits elsewhere than in Canada 24.5 per cent during the period. Total assets rose from $3,155,601,000 to $3,710,695,000, an increase of $555,094,000, or 17.6 per cent. Call loans showed the remarkable increase of 72.7 per cent and current loans 7.3 per cent. The large increase in call loans is due to the high level of activity in the security markets.

"Aggregate net profits of the eight chartered banks in which the public investment showed in 1929 an increase of 18.9 per cent in net profits from 1928 and of 29.2 per cent from 1927. In the last five years net profits have increased 51.5 per cent."

CROCKER-WHEELER OFFER.

58,100 Shares of Common to Go to Holders at $15 on 1-4 Basis.

An offering of 58,100 shares of no-par common stock of the Crocker-Wheeler Electric Manufacturing Company will be made to stockholders of record Feb. 3 at $15 a share in the ratio of one new share for each four shares held. The rights will expire on Feb. 24. Hayden, Stone & Co. have underwritten the offering.

The proceeds will be used to reimburse the company to a substantial extent for funds expended in retiring $863,200 par value of 7 per cent preferred stock. It is planned to apply to the New York Stock Exchange for listing the company's stock, it was reported yesterday, and to elect O. L. Gubelman and John R. Dillon as directors.

TRUST BUYS STOCK IN WILLYS-OVERLAND

The Chicago Corporation Reports Owning 250,000 Shares—Other Purchases.

The Chicago Corporation, the investment trust sponsored by Field, Glore & Co., owns 250,000 shares of the common stock of Willys-Overland Company it was disclosed by the annual report of the trust. Charles F. Glore, president of the Chicago Corporation, said the company had kept its funds largely in the call-money market until the end of October, and in addition had made a number of substantial long-term commitments in special situations.

"Among these transactions," Mr. Glore said, "was its participation, in July, as a minority member of a group which bought an interest in the common stock of Willys-Overland Company. Coincident with the purchase there was a change in the management of the Willys-Overland Company, and, considering present conditions in the automobile industry, the progress made by the company has been satisfactory. The corporation's maximum investment in Willys-Overland common stock amounted to 250,000 shares, which amount it still owns.

Following is a list of stocks which comprise 95 per cent of the corporations common stock investments as of Dec. 31:

American Can, American Equities, American Shipbuilding, Borg-Warner, Central Alloy Steel, Columbia Gas and Electric, Commonwealth Edison, Continental Casualty, Consolidated Oil of New York, Continental Illinois Bank and Trust, Electric Auto-Lite, Electric Bond and Share, General Motors, Hudson Motor, Insull Utility Investments, International Harvester, International Nickel, Kennecott Copper, Libby-Owens Securities, Middle West Utilities, Montgomery Ward & Co., North American, North American Light and Power, Public Service of Northern Illinois, Sears, Roebuck & Co., Standard Brands, Standard Oil of Indiana, Standard Oil of New Jersey, United States Gypsum, United States Steel, Willys-Overland.

What of the Motors?

The motor industry, more than any other major industry, has been feeling the effects of business recession, and the question naturally arises as to its future in regard to motor securities.

Is a continuation of adversity in the industry likely, or do present conditions suggest that this is a time when investments should be made in motors?

McNeel's Financial Service has just completed a survey of conditions in the motor industry which should be of interest to those who own or are contemplating the purchase of motor securities.

The bulletin containing the results of this survey has just been released and will be sent free upon request to those interested.

EXPRESS COMPANIES REPORT FOR 1929

Adams and Southern Show Net Assets Equal to $29.94 for New Adams Share.

HOLDINGS ARE ANNOUNCED

Investments Carried at Cost of $52,609,808 Valued at $53,323,423 at Market Prices

The Adams Express Company and the Southern Express Company, investment trusts sponsored by Hayden, Stone & Co., report that consolidated net assets at the end of 1929, with securities taken at market prices as of Dec. 31, were equivalent to $29.94 a share on the new Adams Express common stock.

Net income for 1929 was $1,296,724 after interest, Federal taxes and other charges. This is equivalent, after allowing for annual dividend requirements on 80,548 shares of 5 per cent preferred stock outstanding at the end of the year, to 49 cents a share on the 1,815,147 shares of common stock outstanding after the recent ten-for-one split-up. This compares with an income of $1,297,704 in 1928, equivalent, after dividends on the preferred, to $15.62 a share on 66,265 common shares outstanding at the end of 1928. The sharp increase in the number of shares of common stock was caused by the acquisition of the Railway and Express Company and the Haygart Corporation, the sale of capital stock to shareholders, a stock dividend and a ten-for-one split-up.

FIRM TONE PREVAILS ON CURB EXCHANGE

Gains Are Made by Utilities, With Some Industrials Joining the Upswing.

Strength was maintained in a fairly active market on the New York Curb Exchange yesterday, with the utilities leading the advance, in which a group of industrials participated, among which were Cuneo Press, Deere & Co., Franklin Manufacturing, Lerner Stores, United States Foil B, Reynolds Metals, New Jersey Zinc, Newmont Mining, and Nachmann-Springfilled.

In the utility section the stocks which gained included American Gas and Electric, Associated Gas and Electric A, Cleveland Traction, Electric Bond and Share, United Gas and Middle West Utilities.

Hodson Group to Pay $1,250,000.

Companies of the Hodson group will pay to security holders a total of $1,250,000 during the month prior to the thirty-seventh anniversary of the house, which was formed in 1893 by Clarence Hodson, on Feb. 22. The payments will include dividends, interest and profit sharing.

SIMMONS LAYS DROP TO HUGE FLOTATIONS

occurrences abroad which produced nervousness and alarm, resulting in the heavy selling from other countries of American securities. He mentioned particularly the "very embarrassing Hatry scandal," conditions on the Berlin Stock Exchange, banking conditions in Austria, the "sterilization" of French gold imports and the French Cabinet crisis. "We must," he said, "consider European conditions more closely and more critically in the future as a regular factor in the New York securities market."

Mr. Simmons said it was due to wise precautions of the banks and the New York Stock Exchange that "the tremendous and hysterical wave of liquidation in the stock market during October and November did not lead to the failure of a single important house." He also expressed the opinion that any "attempt to make the Federal Reserve System a scapegoat for the securities panic last Fall would be both unjust and undesirable."

Short Selling Defended.

"After every stock panic," Mr. Simmons continued, "people who have suffered losses very humanly hunt about for something or somebody upon whom to lay the blame. At such times the short seller always comes in for sharp criticism because he is assumed to have made profits at a time when the vast majority of investors have suffered losses. Short selling is then constantly harped upon and greatly exaggerated and every price decline is promptly and positively attributed to bear raiding. The last panic was no exception to this rule. Entirely sincere and public-spirited citizens have taken the New York Stock Exchange to task for not prohibiting short selling either temporarily or permanently.

"It is, of course, difficult to determine the exact extent of the short interest at any given time, but fortunately, at one of the worst periods of the last crisis, the Stock Exchange by means of a special questionnaire sent to its members obtained statistics as to the current size of the short interest. The amount of the total short interest at the close of one of the worst days of the panic was found to be extraordinarily small, constituting only about one-seventh of 1 per cent of the total listed shares. This fact seems to me to be a conclusive answer to the oft-repeated statement that in the later days of the panic short sellers and bear raiding were responsible for the declining value of securities.

Bottom for the Market.

"Many persons who criticize short selling consider only the depressing effect which the short seller is supposed to have upon the market; they ignore entirely the fact that a 'short,' as soon as he has sold, becomes a compulsory buyer of stock at some time in the future. Since 'shorts' must buy at some time, they are in times of financial distress the backbone of the market. When prices decline sharply and most investors wait for the bottom of the market and most margin purchasers delay buying either because they are themselves embarrassed by the decline or because they are afraid that it may run further, it is the short sellers who become the buyers. Some economists believe that one of the reasons why the break last Autumn proved so severe was the absence of a short interest adequate to absorb the great torrent of liquidation, and they point out that during the last few years our great prosperity has made most people speculate for the advance and not for the decline.

"The New York Stock Exchange, however, is not so much concerned in defending short selling per se as in promoting more orderly and stable markets. The experience of every leading Stock Exchange in the world proves that the short seller is indispensable to an orderly market and the Stock Exchange is therefore unwilling to forbid or artificially embarrass short selling. In taking this position the Exchange is relying not only on its own experience, which is of long duration, but also upon the fact that nearly every leading country in the world has at some time in the past actually experimented with laws forbidding short selling and in every single case, after the legislative experiment proved disastrous, the laws were hastily abolished."

Effects on Future Business.

As to the effect of the break on future business, Mr. Simmons said the stock market "is very much more affected by business than business is by the stock market." "The stock market," he said, "affects business mainly in three different ways: first, by pure psychology; second, by facilitating the flow of capital into corporate enterprise, and third, by the increased consumption which realized profits in the stock market make possible. The psychological effect of stock market activities on business is, I think, usually overemphasized and at most a temporary thing; if business itself is sound, the stock market cannot persuade the public otherwise. In fact, the stock market will at once tend to reflect improved business conditions by rising security prices.

"In regard to the second point, we must all realize that never before in our history has there occurred such a wholesale wave of corporate financing as during the past two years. My previous remarks respecting new public offerings of share issues, and also respecting financing through rights, have adequately illustrated this fact. Also the billions of dollars invested by the public in American corporate securities recently have not to any great extent been invested in large high-priced inventories. In consequence, American companies today need less capital financing than probably at any time in our history and if the effect of the stock market crisis is to delay temporarily the issuance of new securities, I do not think this will be any real hindrance to business.

"The third point as to the affect of stock market profits on consumption is more problematical. Undoubtedly, the luxury trades have in recent years benefited from this source. Nevertheless, I think that most stock market profits remain in the market itself because of the reluctance of most stock speculators to set, in practice, any limit to the amount of money which they wish to make. In the main, therefore, I do not think that the fall in security prices will itself cause any great curtailment in consumption, and the trade figures thus far available seem to bear out this view of the matter."

DEFENDS RAILWAYS IN WATER RIVALRY

Fitzgerald of Eastern Lines Says They Cooperate With Steamboat Routes.

MAKES REPLY TO ASHBURN

Compares Competition With Private Barge Lines With That Given by Government Concern.

Reaffirmation of a policy to cooperate with the waterways was made last week in behalf of the railroads by John M. Fitzgerald, assistant to the chairman of the committee on public relations of the Eastern railroads, in an address before the Kansas City Traffic Club. Railroad officials agreed to a policy of cooperation when the Ohio waterways were opened by President Hoover last Fall.

Mr. Fitzgerald said that the recent statement of General T. Q. Ashburn, chief executive officer of the Mississippi-Warrior Barge Service, that the railroads failed to cooperate was not supported by the record. He asserted that General Ashburn had "in substance, repudiated the agreements" covering most of the essential issues between the railroads and the barge line eight days after he affixed his signature thereto. General Ashburn's line is government owned.

Mr. Fitzgerald added that the railways had encountered no difficulty in reaching amicable working agreements with the American Barge Line, a privately owned carrier on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers.

Meanwhile, John J. Crowley, examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission, found that charges for moving carload shipments between the terminal of the Mississippi-Warrior Barge Service at St. Paul, Minn., and industries at Minnesota Transfer, Minn., "should be found unreasonable and unduly prejudicial to the barge line and unduly preferential of all-rail carriers, and also unduly prejudicial to shippers and consignees located within the switching district of St. Paul." Mr. Crowley's recommendations grew out of a complaint by St. Paul against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad and other carriers.

Mr. Fitzgerald reviewed the conference between the railroads and the Mississippi-Warrior line in December, 1928, and January, 1929. He continued:

"It was believed that agreements covering most of the essential issues were arrived at in the meeting of Jan. 29-30, 1929, and the record clearly establishes this fact. But, in a letter dated Feb. 7, 1929, General Ashburn in substance repudiated the agreements which he and his associates had signed over his own signature only eight days before. Meanwhile, the rail carriers proceeded to set up subcommittees for dealing with the government barge line and for the establishment of through routes and joint rates in accordance with the formula prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"The record is clear and there is no evidence that the railways have failed to cooperate with the barge line in the establishment of through routes and joint rates on the basis of accepted principles. On the contrary, the railway management has endeavored to place the barge line on a workable basis with the other carriers, in accordance with the Denison act and the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The first conferences between the railway representatives repeatedly stated that the rail carriers were seeking, through this move, a general acceptance of the government barge line as an established interstate commerce carrier.

"Nor can the railways be asked to assume responsibility for decisions and rulings by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Rates covering the movement of interstate traffic, whether all rail or joint rates between railways and other carriers, are subject to supervision and regulation by the commission. The railways subscribe to constructive governmental regulation of common carriers. The rail carriers observe the decisions and rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and the barge lines, as well as all other transport agencies engaged in interstate commerce, should be willing to do likewise.

"In view of the facts as disclosed by the record, it is manifestly unjust for General Ashburn to assert that the railways have failed to cooperate with the barge line. It is equally unfair for General Ashburn to convey the impression that rail managers are not dealing frankly and openly with the barge line officials in an earnest desire to arrive at a fair and equitable solution of all joint problems."

INVESTMENT BANKERS ADD TO GOVERNORS

Anton O'Donnell and Ralph Fordon Elected to Board—Circulars Discussed.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Jan. 25.—At the sixty-eighth annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Investment Bankers Association at the Seaview Golf Club at Absecon today, Anton O'Donnell of O'Donnell and Owen of Denver, and Ralph Fordon of the Guardian Detroit Company, Inc., of Detroit, were elected members of the board. The resignation of J. English as a member of the board was accepted. Mr. English was associated with the William R. Compton Company of New York, whose business has been consolidated with that of the Chatham-Phenix Corporation.

Memberships, bond and stock circulars and interim certificates were discussed by members of the board. William J. Warall of Bonbright & Co. of Chicago is chairman of the membership committee. The group which is dealing with the circular question is headed by Ralph Hornblower of Hornblower & Weeks of Boston. Discussions of circulars showed that the Investment Bankers Association is determined that accurate and complete information relating to industries whose securities are offered as investments to the public shall be contained in all printed matter relating to securities offered by members of the organization.

Standardization of interim certificate forms is considered likely as a recommendation of the association."

*House of Issue established 1889, desires to add to its sales force. Mature men who are experienced in the security business will find a profitable and congenial connection. In our Eastern sales force we find a record of service that is impressive—,

2 more than 25 years
3 more than 20 years
3 more than 15 years
4 more than 12 years
8 more than 10 years

We believe a successful security salesman is in effect "in business for himself"; he must think for himself and build up his own clientele. Initiative is most important. Such men will be backed up by advertising and competent correspondence. If our methods appeal and you desire the dignity of a permanent connection we would be glad to hear from you; however, you must have a successful sales record. Compensation—drawing account against commission.

FRESH LOW MARKS MADE IN ALL GRAINS

Wheat Prices Finish 1/8 Up to 1/8 Off in Rally Near End, With Trading Light.

CORN ALSO HAS REVERSAL

Absorption of Surplus Pulls Oats From Bottom—Scale Orders Help Rye.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 25.—Local operators continue to fight shy of the short side of wheat on the breaks. While there was scattered selling early today, with a decline to a new low for the week, the break was taken advantage of to cover shorts, and with buying by commission houses on resting orders May did not get below $1.26. A rally from the inside figure followed, but trade in the aggregate was light. Toward the last week-end evening up caused a reaction from the best figures, with the close 1/8 cent lower to 1/8 cent higher.

Winnipeg closed 1/4 to 3/8 cent lower for the day, and showed a relatively heavy undertone. The continued lack of foreign demand for both hard Winters and Manitobas continues to be a factor in the North American markets, and few commission houses or professionals can see an advance of consequence unless there is sustained buying by Europe. However, the cooperatives continue to take country-run grain at the Farm Board loan basis, and this causes operators generally to keep close to shore on the breaks, although hard Winter is now down to around the cooperative purchasing basis.

Liverpool closed 5/8 to 1 1/8d lower and reported a lack of demand for cash grain, expectations of liberal world's shipments and possibility of an increase in stocks on ocean passage. A fair decrease is looked for in the domestic visible supply statement on Monday.

Primary receipts were 548,000 bushels; a week ago 621,000, and a year ago 849,000. Shipments were 450,000 bushels; a week ago 644,000, and a year ago 532,000.

All deliveries of corn dropped to a new low for the season, due to scattered commission house and local selling. The inside figures were not maintained, with the close 1/4c higher to 1/8c lower, March showing the most strength. The spot basis was 1 cent higher to 1/2 cent lower, with choice white showing the most strength.

Primary receipts were 973,000 bushels; a week ago, 769,000, and a year ago, 1,257,000. Shipments were 508,000 bushels; a week ago, 581,000, and a year ago, 653,000.

May and July oats sold at a new low on the crop, but the surplus was absorbed by cash and commission houses and the close was 1/8 to 1/4 cent higher.

Commission houses bought rye on scale orders and the close was 1/2 to 1 1/2 cents higher after the deferred futures had sold at a new low on the crop early, when houses with foreign connections were sellers.

Prices for the principal grains were as follows:

L. V. Kerber was re-elected yesterday president of the Spartan Aircraft Company, and Rex. B. Beisel was reelected vice president. All other officers and directors were re-elected.

ELECTRICAL SALES HOLD UP

Heavy Equipment in Demand in East—Street Railways Buying.

Sales continue in satisfactory volume in the principal electrical equipment market centres of the country, according to The Electrical World. A definite revival in heavy equipment buying is reported in the Eastern district for the last week and electric railways remain a good source for substation orders. The general trend in the Southeast is reported satisfactory, with a well-sustained volume of electrical equipment orders.

Inquiries for general industrial equipment and power units featured the New England market. Central station supplies are moving in small lots and small motor sales are increasing. Transformer and equipment orders are substantial on the Pacific Coast. Central stations there are reported actively promoting construction and extensions.

Cubans Estimate Sugar Crop Will Reach 4,433,287 Tons

HAVANA, Jan. 25 (AP).—The Cuban National Colono Association today issued an estimate of the present sugar crop, placing it at 4,433,287 tons.

The report is based on the cane available as reported by various local Colono associations. Taking the average yield as a basis and deducting probable losses by cane fires and the usual amount of cane left standing, which together average in normal years about 8 per cent, would bring the estimate down to close to 4,000,000 tons, the report said.

PRODUCTION OF LEAD LOWER IN DECEMBER

American Output Declined to 55,280 Tons and That of World to 160,089.

There was a decrease in lead production in this country in December to 55,280 tons, against 59,760 tons in November and 61,813 tons in October, according to the American Bureau of Metal Statistics. The world output for December was 160,089 tons, a daily average of 5,164 tons, against 163,904 tons in November, a daily average of 5,463 tons.

The total output of this country for the twelve months of 1929 was 692,233 tons, while that of the world last year was 1,931,796 tons, an average rate of 5,293 tons, against an average daily rate of 4,976 tons in 1928.

The following table gives the output of the leading countries for the last two months and the whole of 1929, plus an estimated total of 10 per cent for unreported districts:

SPOT PRESSURE IS LACKING

Statistics of Exchange Put Visible Supply at Largest Amount on Record With One Exception.

Influenced by lower foreign quotations for both American and Indian cotton, prices on the Cotton Exchange here declined early yesterday, March selling at the lowest levels of the last two weeks. As holders in the South continue indifferent sellers, the daily removal of hedges against cotton passing into consuming channels absorbed a sufficient quantity of contracts to maintain the general price level. Professionals covered toward the close, establishing best quotations in final dealings, with the list unchanged to 4 points higher.

News from consuming centres, both domestic and foreign, continued to affect trading sentiment, but without attracting definite selling pressure from spot directions. Southern advices reflected firmness despite the decreased transactions of the last week.

With the exception of increased liquidation in the March delivery operations of cooperative associations in the contract market remain evenly balanced between purchases against sales of spot cotton to the trade and liquidation on sellers' call.

Advices from dry goods circles indicated sales of gray goods below production, while the improvement in general distribution has been slower than expected. Mills, therefore, are not active buyers of raw material, as stocks on Jan. 1 were the largest in several years.

The world's visible supply, as reported by Cotton Exchange statistics, is the largest with one exception on record. The 8,155,000 bales compare with 8,920,000 on Jan. 25, 1927, following the record American crop of 18,000,000 bales in 1926. The supply of American staple that season amounted to 7,341,000 bales, leaving 1,580,000 of foreign growths, while the figures this week show 2,420,000 bales in the visible supply grown outside the United States and 5,735,000 of American cotton.

Yesterday's quotations here follow:

Secretaries of State Chambers of Commerce End Session.

The mid-year meeting of the New York State Secretaries' Conference, held in the State Chamber of Commerce, ended yesterday. The organization comprises secretaries of chambers of commerce. Charles T. Gwynne, executive vice president of the State Chamber, said that chambers in New York State were influential in civic improvement and that their field was constantly widening.

James W. Danahy, secretary-treasurer of the Eighth Avenue Association, presided. A. P. Bantham of Schenectady spoke on "fly-by-night" salesmen. Samuel B. Botsford of Buffalo, W. R. Lunk of Auburn and Charles E. Reid of New York discussed civic and commercial organizations in respect to the community. J. Barstow Smull, chairman of the State Chamber's executive committee, spoke at the secretaries' luncheon. The party visited the Westinghouse Lighting Institute in Grand Central Palace.

HIDE FUTURES RALLY AFTER WEAK OPENING

Liquidation Continues as Result of Senate's Tariff Action—1,280,000 Pounds Sold.

Liquidation continued yesterday in raw hide futures on the Raw Hide Exchange as a result of the Senate's action in refusing to take hides off the free list, but there was a noticeable steadying as the short session came to a close. Opening prices were 40 to 60 points lower than on Fridays in the three active months, May, September and December. Toward noon, however, there was a good rally and these positions regained much of their losses. Closing prices were 25 to 30 points below Friday's close.

The turnover exceeded the full day of Friday with sales of 1,280,000 pounds, against 760,000. Price ranges were:

SUGAR, COFFEE, COCOA.

Sugar.

The sugar futures market was firm yesterday. Prices on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange closed 3 to 6 points higher. Trade houses and Cuban interests were the principal buyers, and there was a scarcity of sellers. Rumors persisted that negotiations were on with Java to bring about some plan which will improve the world sugar situation. There was also a rumor from Cuba to the effect that the sugar defense committee was working out plans for financing and would report to President Machado on Monday.

The raw market was also firm, with sellers generally indifferent. It was reported that on Friday a local refiner purchased 3,500 tons of Philippines ex store at 3.58. There was further buying interest at that quotation.

Refined in the local market was steady, with fairly good withdrawals, but no new business. Refined closed unchanged.

REVIEW OF WEEK IN REALTY MARKET

Builders Watch With Interest Proposed Amendments to the Multiple Dwelling Law.

SECURITY MART DISCUSSED

New President, C. G. Edwards, Would Educate the Public to Its Benefits—Notable Property Sales.

While trading in the metropolitan realty market was very quiet last week, builders and operators, especially, watched with interest the meeting of the special committee which is drawing up amendments to the multiple dwelling act for presentation to the Legislature.

Many helpful discussions and suggestions have been made at the various committee meetings in the City Hall. Among those favored by builders is that permitting slightly higher limitations for apartment houses, particularly those erected on thoroughfares more than 100 feet wide.

A revised subcommittee report covering the suggested changes will be presented tomorrow and the committee's amended bill will be introduced at Albany within a short time.

The election of Charles G. Edwards as president of the New York Real Estate Securities Exchange, succeeding Cyrus C. Miller, who remains as counsel, was another outstanding event of the week. [illegible]

HEAVY CONSTRUCTION GAIN.

Steady Upward Trend Since the Beginning of the Year Is Shown.

Weekly totals announced for heavy construction and engineering awards throughout the country since Jan. 1 show a steady upward trend in the aggregate value of engineering construction, Engineering News-Record reports. For the nation as a whole, contract lettings in the past week amounted to $49,223,000, which compares with $57,165,000 in the preceding week and $65,765,000 in the corresponding week last year. One contract, involving $15,000,000 for a power plant project, accounted for the more than average value of awards in the week of Jan. 16.

Three of the large awards announced during the week involved $4,000,000 each. These were for a power distribution system in White Plains, N. Y., a sixteen-story office building in Philadelphia, and a power plant in Ashtabula, Ohio.

Totals for each classification were as follows: commercial buildings, $19,268,000; industrial buildings, $7,835,000; streets and roads, $5,222,000, and other engineering construction, $16,898,000.

Since Jan. 1, contracts let for heavy construction and engineering were valued at $188,720,000, comparing with $345,320,000 in the corresponding period last year.

QUEENS REALTY SALES.

Jules Breuchaud Buys Long Island City Blockfront.

Jules Breuchaud, large owner of real estate in the Long Island City section of Queens, has added to his holdings there by purchasing a Queens Boulevard blockfront, extending 300 feet on Rawson and Moore Streets. Mr. Breuchaud is the owner of the remainder of the block and now controls an entire square block, 200 by 600 feet, extending from Queens Boulevard to Nelson Avenue.

The blockfront just purchased comprises 60,000 square feet and is improved with a three-story ramp building which was constructed for and occupied by the William F. Kenny Company. There are now six contiguous blocks facing on the south side of Queens Boulevard in the control of one group associated with Arthur Brisbane, and the other group represented by Mr. Breuchaud, who is president of the Underpinning and Foundation Company and also president of the Ford Instrument Company. The Ritter-Swenson Corporation, brokers, negotiated the sale of the blockfront to Mr. Breuchaud.

The Queensboro Corporation announced the purchase by Mr. and Mrs. Lewis James of the Tappan house at 167 Twenty-eighth Street, Jackson Heights. Mr. James, who is a professional singer, has been a resident of Jackson Heights since 1922.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy B. Avers, who have lived at Jackson Heights for a similar period, have purchased the Tappan house at 174 Twenty-ninth Street. Mr. Avers is president of the Avers Fuel Company.

SALES IN NEW JERSEY.

Two Store Parcels in West New York Are Transferred.

The Eagle Development Corporation of New York sold to Max Marx of Manhattan the eight two-story brick store buildings at 408-16 Bergenline Avenue, southeast corner of Sixth Street, and the four one-story brick store buildings at 677-79 Bergenline Avenue, near Seventeenth Street, West New York.

Nene Spallina sold to Joseph Dowling of New York seven two-story brick dwellings at 60-72 Union Street, near Clerk Street, Jersey City.

Isidore Rankin sold to the Loebellis Realty Company the one-story brick garage at 311-15 Thirty-seventh Street, near Palisade Avenue, Union City.

William Kammann bought the two three-story frame store buildings at the northwest corner of Broadway and West Nineteenth Street, Bayonne, from Jacob Tucker.

The City Housing Corporation sold a one-family house at 9 Aberdeen Place, Radburn, to Walker E. Morison of Scarsdale, N. Y.

WESTCHESTER DEALS.

Sales in White Plains and Briarcliff Hills.

Frederick D. and Gladys A. Ives of Pleasantville have sold the six-room frame and stucco house at 41 Longview Avenue, White Plains, to a client of the Rostenberg Realty Company, broker in the deal. The plot is 60 by 172 feet. The same company sold a plot 258 by 140 feet on Gorham Circle, Greenacres, Scarsdale, for Golden & McLimans. The site was bought by the E. D. G. Building Corporation of New York for improvement with an English stucco and timber house of seven rooms and three baths.

In their Briarcliff Hills development the Broadway Estates, Inc., sold two lots on Hillcrest Drive to Miss E. McInern.

The Highwood Park Company leased to V. Jacobson for occupancy in the early Spring the nine-room house on Muir Place, New Rochelle. Mrs. Clifford A. Wolf was the broker.

Three Leaseholds Transferred.

A lease covering 318-22 East Forty-eighth Street has been sold by the Davidson Property Corporation to the Montclair Garage Corporation. Mecca Enterprise, Inc., assigned leases covering 111-13 West 125th Street and 108 West 126th Street to the Orient Theatre Corporation of 111 West 125th Street.

TO FURNISH REPORT ON SELLING WAGES

Dr. Bezanson's Study for Store Group Commented Upon by Percy Straus.

NEW MEASURE DEVISED

Single Standard for Sales, Earnings and Costs Said to Simplify Present Comparisons.

Compensation for sales personnel in relation to selling costs is one of the outstanding problems facing retailers. The first authoritative survey of this question has been made by Dr. Anne Bezanson, associate director of the Industrial Research Department of the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. Miss Bezanson will make her report before the session of the store managers' division on Feb. 6 at the convention of the National Retail Dry Goods Association at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

Presiding at the session will be Percy Straus, vice president of R. H. Macy & Co., Inc., who yesterday discussed the salient features of the study. The survey, he pointed out, was begun in August, 1928, at the invitation of the store managers' division, and primarily deals with the relation of compensation of sales clerks and the fluctuations in sales of individual departments in a typical group of stores which are members of the retailers' organization.

"Coming at a time when all merchants are considering methods of compensation and problems of selling costs in their own organization, the results of this study are significant," Mr. Straus continued. "The study covers the definite findings in four major departments of thirty-one stores.

Pictures Success in Selling.

"The paper gives a picture of the success achieved in selling in the women's hosiery, ready-to-wear, men's clothing and house furnishings departments, but also goes further. It sets up standards of attainment in the handling of these types of merchandise.

"Five questions are answered for each type of merchandise: (1) How much are stores paying to sales clerks? (2) How much are sales clerks selling in return for the payment? (3) What are the typical selling costs in these departments? (4) How many firms are below these costs and how far below, and how many are above and how far above? Finally, (5) Why are net sales low in high cost departments?

"Special problems of selling arise in the four departments. Hosiery, for example, has a more seasonal demand than any of the others, since one-sixth of the total annual business is in December, which is followed by the dullest month of the whole year. In ready-to-wear departments the sales clerks must serve more customers in the Summer months to average the same net sales as they are able to show in Winter months with higher-priced Winter apparel. In other words, the problem of salesmanship changes with the seasons.

"Despite these seasonal factors the paper shows that the number and size of transactions can be used as an important guide in judging the efficiency of the department and the individual sales clerk. The unique feature of the paper is the development of a new method, useful not only in the study of the four departments, but also in the analysis of any selling unit at any time.

"The use of the method simplifies the review of efficiency in a department or selling unit.

Variations in Efficiency.

"When the selling problem of any department at a given time is considered, it will be found that there are bound to be variations in the selling efficiency of individual sales persons. The wage problem in the department is one of rewarding, as adequately as possible, extra sales effort. But to do this three figures for each sales clerk must normally be related. These are figures on net sales, earnings and selling costs. The method used in Dr. Bezanson's paper simplifies the comparison by combining the three figures into a single line or standard.

"This provides an easy method which can be used in salary review, in studying the causes of low net sales or in comparing one department with another. Miss Bezanson makes use of this new method to show the selling efficiency and costs in the thirty-one stores participating in the intensive study of compensation, indicating in this way what has been achieved by the management of these departments.

"The study shows that some of the most successful merchants have put the standard of retail selling very high. They are able to pay high earnings and yet keep their selling costs low. Miss Bezanson then goes on to use the method to show how it can be applied in individual departments within a store.

"It may also be pointed out that the study will present factual data nowhere else available on the weekly earnings of sales clerks, the volume of weekly net sales and the percentages of selling cost. The methods of the study yield a new device of general value to retail management."

PIANO PROSPECTS AIDED.

Increase in Pupils Cited as Helpful by Officials—Manuals Gained.

Piano playing is on the increase, with more than 1,100,000 children studying this instrument as compared with 856,000 in 1928, according to Edward C. Boykin, executive secretary of the National Piano Manufacturers' Association. Radio broadcasting, he finds, has had its effect on player piano sales, but has helped the straight manual type. Sales of the latter formed 80 per cent of the total last year, as against 40 per cent in 1928.

A brighter outlook for the trade is warranted, in Mr. Boykin's opinion, inasmuch as over 650 cities and towns have adopted class piano instruction as part of the public school curriculum. In Chicago alone, he said, 14,000 children are studying the piano in the public schools.

The automobile, Mr. Boykin went on, has been the real competitor of the piano because it has taken the people out of the home. General instalment buying is another thing which the piano has had to fight. The drop in the stock market affected the sales last year, although up to Nov. 1 the maker of one of the most expensive pianos had the biggest year in its history.

Keen Interest in Exporting Jumps Queries 50 Per Cent

American manufacturers today are taking an unprecedented interest in the possibilities of export trade, Stanley E. Hollis, executive vice president of the American Foreign Credit Underwriters, Inc., stated yesterday in reporting that monthly inquiries from producers seeking information on such trade have jumped 50 per cent in the last two months.

"Those who never gave export a thought are now studying its possibilities," he said, "while others who have been shipping to only one or two countries are asking data on other markets. Inquiries about Africa and Australia are the most numerous from the latter class."

REACTION IN INDUSTRY SLOWING UP, IS REPORT

Statisticians Suggest Demand From Public May Prove Underestimated.

Developments during December and the first half of January indicate a slowing up of the decline in business activity which marked the closing months of last year, according to a summary of the business situation in the United States prepared by the Conference of Statisticians in Industry. The conference, which operates under the auspices of the National Industrial Conference Board, adds that despite the pronounced recession during November and December, many new records were established for the year as a whole. Thus far there has been no indication of reduced wage rates as a result of disturbed business conditions.

"The volume of sales to consumers, as indicated by department and chain store turnover," the summary adds, "suggests the possibility that manufacturers may be underestimating consumer demand of the near future." It goes on to say that commercial failures during December showed a tendency to increase both in number and amount of liabilities, and that in the first two weeks of this month the number is greater than a year ago.

"A marked revival in business activity may not be indicated by the early January reports," the conference report continues, "but steel mill operations have expanded. The drastic cut in automobile production during November and December has so reduced stocks of new cars that the way seems clear for at least part of the seasonal increase usually expected in the first few months of the year. Freight car loadings in the first weeks of this month showed a tendency toward the usual expansion. On the other hand, electric power production indicates no change from the December figure."

Among the trades and industries in which declines were shown in December, either from November, December, 1928, or both, are cited crude rubber, iron and steel, copper refining, building and allied lines, textiles, shoes, hides and leather. Mill stocks of newsprint paper at the end of the year were below the average in tonnage. Total newsprint consumption during the first quarter of 1930, the report adds, may run slightly under the same period in 1929.

Production of soft coal was slightly higher in December than in November, in spite of the decline in some of the more important coal consuming industries. Hard coal production during December was higher than a year ago. Shipments of anthracite during December were the largest for that month since 1922.

MOTHPROOF CLOTH PLAN.

Labels Will Be Supplied by Mills First to Offer Protection.

Labels to identify the mothproofed men's wear serges and unfinished worsteds will be supplied the clothing trade for sewing into finished garments, it was announced yesterday by Charles H. Silver, selling agent of the American Woolen Company. The clothing trade, he said, has reacted most favorably to the mothproofing innovation, the reports of salesmen for the company revealing many expressions of approval.

This is the first time that any woolen company has offered mothproofed cloths and in addition guaranteed them, Mr. Silver pointed out. The process, exclusive with the company, was sponsored only after months of tests and experimentation. It is also planned to use it for overcoatings.

In some quarters of the woolen trade the view was expressed that the "big company" had set a precedent likely to be adopted by other mills.

YARD GOODS TO BENEFIT.

Full Effect of New Dress Designs to Come This Spring.

The full benefit of the new silhouette in expanding yard goods sales may be expected this Spring, according to Hubert M. Greist, director of the National Costume Art Association. Many women, who held off during the Fall and Winter, will begin to accept the new mode, he said yesterday. This will be particularly true, he believes, of women who are hard to fit and who turn to home dressmaking to obtain distinctive garments which meet their needs.

On the score of fitting, Mr. Greist told of a new type of foundation pattern which has just made its appearance. This is made to eighteen individual measurements of the customer and upon it she alters the usual commercial type of pattern to meet her individual measurements. Surveys made by leading stores have shown that the problem of correct fit is a major one in helping piece goods sales, a condition emphasized with the arrival of the new silhouette.

New Pattern to Aid Piece Goods.

A new "master" pattern method to insure the correct fit of home-made garments has been invented by Miss Nan Stack, who formerly conducted apparel shops in London and Paris. Elimination of the fear of poor fit, she said yesterday, will do much to stimulate yard goods sales. The new method, Miss Stack explained, consists of shaping a tight muslin pattern to the individual figure. Over half of this "master" pattern, which hooks up the front, is draped a looser pattern into which a sleeve is fitted. Made to individual measurements the pattern may be used for all future garments. The method is being featured at a leading local department store, and will be promoted in others soon.

URGES ONE BUREAU FOR STATEMENTS

Credit Cooperative to Collect All Data Is Proposed by Accountant.

FIXED FORM ALSO NEEDED

To Combine All Information That Is Now Required—Copies Would Be Made.

The establishment of central cooperative bureaus for financial statements, which would collect and disseminate them among the members, was suggested here yesterday by Maurice Goldberg as a means of doing away with the great volume of work attached to the gathering and providing and distributing of data of this type at present. Mr. Goldberg, who is head of the certified public accountant firm bearing his name, also advocated the use of a single standard form for the purpose. Work of this kind is being done successfully by the Leather Trades Investigation Bureau, Inc., he said, and the matter is now before the Downtown Textile Credit Group, Inc., for consideration.

"Within the past few years," Mr. Goldberg said yesterday, "a situation has arisen in which every wholesaler, manufacturer, credit agency and trade association with a credit bureau has adopted some kind of financial statement. Most of them are different in form, with the result that credit-seekers are now obliged to fill out hundreds of statements in various set-ups. The resultant duplication makes necessary a great deal of work that otherwise could be avoided.

More Auditors' Reports Used.

"The use of the certified public accountant's statement has also increased, and this requires the accountant who issues a certified statement to supply his client with at least 50 to 100 copies. Some credit departments desire to accept the certified statement as a basis of credit, while others are satisfied with having it attached to the financial statement. Still others insist upon the use of their own credit form.

"There is no doubt in my mind that a properly filled out financial statement form is a necessary basis of credit granting. I also admit that a certified statement prepared by any certified public accountant now in practice is incomplete with regard to the various kinds of information desired by credit men to serve as a basis of granting credit. The fault with the certified statement is the lack of data other than figures.

"The fault of the financial statement blank is the effort required in filling out the numerous forms now in use. Another criticism of the latter is that it gives no information as to the type of work done on the books of the client by the accountant. There is no doubt that the present situation is chaotic and requires an early clearing up.

"It is my opinion that the various credit department heads themselves should confer in a cooperative frame of mind to work out some solution of the matter for the common good. In such conferences personal opinions should be submerged and the impression done away with that each credit department in a given trade or industry is a separate entity.

Waste Would Be Reduced.

"There is little doubt that most, if not all, of the present waste of time and energy would be done away with through the establishment of a central organization to collect financial statements. This would relieve the credit fraternity of the tremendous task of obtaining statements for credit purposes which now exists.

"An organization of this kind could mail to the credit seeker a financial statement blank so drawn up as to show all the financial data desired. The blank would also show all other information wanted, including the certificate of the accountant. If the certificate is wanted separately, a note on the statement would request that it be attached to the blank. The effect of a central organization requesting this uniform type of financial statement would be to bring an immediate reply.

"The central organization, on receiving the filled-out form, would copy all the information on it upon duplicate forms, which would be sent to the various credit departments in its membership. This could be done easily by a mechanical device for the purpose and would provide each member with an exact copy of the statement submitted by the credit seeker. The latter would have to make only one statement with the addition to a particular group, instead of having to send individual statements to each of any number of concerns from whom he might have occasion to request credit.

"The central organization could be operated under the supervision of one or more of the credit agencies, groups or trade association bureaus now existing. This method of handling the present trying situation would assist greatly in creating the good-will between credit-seekers and grantors necessary to the proper stabilization of commercial credits."

SERVICE HELPS STORES.

Brown Figures Prove How Jobbers Can Aid Independents.

That efforts to build up the business of independent retailers can be carried on successfully by wholesalers was shown at the annual convention of the Wholesale Dry Goods Institute here last week, when J. O. Moore, head of the service work of the Brown Shoe Company, cited comparative figures of failures, turnover rates, &c., of "one hand retailers" and those using the company's service. These showed that where failures among independent retailers of the "lone hand" type annually reached 12 per cent of the total, those of stores operating under the company's plan totaled one-half of one per cent.

The respective rates of turnover at cost are 1.3 and 2.7 per cent, while respective figures on profits on retail sales are 2.8 and 8.3 per cent. Serviced stores show a profit on retail sales of 8.3 per cent, against 2.8 per cent for stores not serviced. The comparative figures on profit on investment are 22.5 per cent and 4.2 per cent.

While these results are due to a particular service based on 100 per cent concentration of purchases, they were particularly interesting to dry goods men in view of the campaign of retailer aid which they are undertaking with the assistance of the institute. Part of this work will consist of setting up in a number of wholesalers' establishments model stores in which lines suitable for retail concerns can be shown. Some of the wholesalers already have had considerable success with layouts of this type.

The Merchant's Point of View

DUE to unsettled conditions in general business, special interest has been taken in trade progress, with the result that sales volume is being checked from week to week in many cases. These reports indicate that leading retail organizations are doing quite well and should show an increase for the month now almost over. Local concerns for the most part have enjoyed small gains, and information from retailers in other sections of the country is of a favorable sort, except where weather conditions have imposed handicaps.

The results attained since the holidays have required special effort, but they have been satisfactory enough to assure merchants that no real setback need be suffered if proper steps are taken to promote consumer demand. Activity on women's apparel has been pronounced, and in the modified new designs the stores see good prospects of additional business. The later Easter this year also offers better merchandising opportunities.

In the wholesale merchandise markets the number of buyers on hand has fallen below a year ago and operations have been less active. The first half of the month, in short, produced brisk and unexpected volume, but mostly on sales goods. Purchasing of Spring lines is now under way and more caution prevails. However, once the new merchandise is tested out in the stores for consumer response, it is likely that orders will gain in number and quantity.

Prices Are Put to Test. That a certain amount of testing out of prices is now in progress and is tending to hold down transactions is evident from the reports now being received from various industrial lines. For instance, the steel business makes known that, while prices still show unsettlement, immediate shipments are required in many cases. This indicates that consuming needs are not lacking and that additional business might be placed, only that bottom prices are sought. The condition described is quite general and marks the attempt of buyers to test the full effect of the present reaction on values. In short, the price question is holding up transactions for the time being which might otherwise go through.

The pressure on prices has had some results, but far less than in any similar business reaction, for the reason that surpluses of goods are to be found in very few lines. In addition, mass output before the depression had reduced values to new low levels. Heavy losses must be taken to pare quotations when reduced production means higher costs and should mean higher prices.

Purchasing agents no doubt are fully aware of these conditions and it is not likely that their effort to obtain reductions will be carried to extreme lengths. After all, they are dependent upon markets for their own products, and markets are not helped any by depressing prices, wages and employment to points where purchasing power is adversely affected.

Employment Statements Conflict. As a straw that may point to some easing in price pressure, it is to be noted that The Annalist weekly index has finally shown a gain, though four of the eight commodity groups are lower. This index last week stood at 140.1, as against 146.2 a year ago. The recent decline since the middle of December has been less sharp. Here and there surpluses of commodities have been uncovered and price slumps experienced, but the last report of merchandise in public warehouses (at the end of November) does not disclose much increase. The space occupied, 77.2 per cent, compares with 76.4 per cent at the end of October.

Considerable interest was taken during the week in two important statements on the condition of employment. The Washington utterance professed to see a gain for the early part of this month, the first since the security collapse, and cause for optimism was, as usual, pointed out. On the heels of this report came matter-of-fact figures from the State Industrial Commissioner that New York employment was showing a loss. A rebuttal was provided by Secretary Davis, but for the time being, at least, in view of the rather distorted views so often emanating from the capital, the New York figures will receive readier acceptance.

However, whether the ebb in employment has been passed or not, it seems clear that a certain measure of improvement has set in. Steel operations have gained and automobile output is higher. Building contract awards so far this month have not held their earlier level, but they are only 5 per cent under a year ago. Carloadings have picked up, though still running under last year.

Wholesalers Might Add to Lines. The study brought before the dry goods wholesalers' convention last week by its director to show that 80 per cent of their business was done on only 20 per cent of what retail stores sell elicited keen interest, and for the very natural reason that it seemed to open the way toward needed expansion of jobbing activity and volume.

No doubt the members of the Wholesale Dry Goods Institute already were aware of this condition, but the actual figures by departments probably furnished many of them with a more definite idea of possibilities. It was noted by observers that when this and other detailed studies were presented there was immediate evidence of interest. This field of distribution appears to have taken leave of generalities, views and opinion and to have welcomed at last the marshaling of hard facts.

With respect to the practical angles of introducing the lines which are not now generally carried by wholesalers, there may be some doubt. For instance, the convention was much concerned about its plan to have the mills fix price differentials so that, despite direct selling by the producers, the wholesaler might continue to serve various retail outlets. Since the jobbers are urging, therefore, what they were gladly given in the past, the question arises concerning the progress they may be able to make in effecting entirely new arrangements for new lines when their old arrangements are slipping.

But whatever the outcome in this direction, facts and figures have disclosed the possibility, and the same data can be collected and analyzed to prove its worth.

"Money's Worth" at Stake. Out of a recent strike in the garment industry came the issue of whether volume buying should exact such low prices as to depress not only profits but wage scales and working standards. Apparently the decision was against the practice, and a number of the volume buyers—chains, mail-order houses and store groups—promised to see that bargains were not forced at the expense of the industry.

However, there has been some "backsliding," and a large chain was cited as again bringing extreme price pressure to bear. Once again a pact has been reached, though one not so satisfying to producers or labor. The distributer agrees to the principle of a fair profit and a fair wage, but it insists upon its right to get its "money's worth."

The head of this organization, by the way, is quoted currently as very much in favor of holding the good-will of its supply sources—first, because it is of mutual benefit; secondly, because constant change of supply sources is uneconomic, and, thirdly, because producers shun buyers who are constantly changing their sources and the quality of merchandise suffers.

It might be imagined that such views offer distinct contrast to the practice of that concern. On the other hand, an examination of the terms which the seller wishes to enforce might disclose in the circumstances full warrant for seeking better value. After all, the public is entitled through the retailer to its money's worth and would certainly fail to get it if the manufacturer in every case were permitted to dictate prices. The enlightened merchant's method is not to make money out of a producer but with him. Similarly, the producer succeeds best by the following of a like rule.

DRESS TIE-UP NEAR.

Strike to Bring 2 Weeks' Suspension, Trade Officials Predict.

Complete suspension of production throughout the dress industry for about two weeks was predicted yesterday by officials of the Association of Dress Manufacturers, Inc., as a result of the strike which the union is expected to call shortly. In line with the union's aim to organize the industry 100 per cent, it is the desire of the dress body to "organize" the contractors and jobbers similarly. This, association officials declare, will take about two weeks, and there will be no resumption of production until every effort has been made to accomplish this "organization."

A mass meeting of employers will be held at the Hotel New Yorker on Wednesday evening under the auspices of the association, and circulars announcing it have been sent to the 2,000 shop proprietors in this market. More than 80 per cent of the workers in the dress industry are employed by these men. In the circular the association declares that it seeks an agreement with the jobbers based on agreements formerly in force; no charges to contractors except for cost of production; a 100 per cent association shop contractors; jobbers to work only with association contractors, and a permanent impartial chairman to enforce these standards.

CREDIT QUERIES INCREASE.

Clearing House Index Stood at 97 Last Week—Under 1929.

For the first time this year, retail purchasing gave indication last week of dropping below the corresponding levels of a year ago, according to inquiries received by the Credit Clearing House. With the average weekly inquiries on merchandise orders in the wholesale market during 1927 taken as 100, the Clearing House index last week stood at 97. This compared with 89 in the preceding week and 103 for the same week last year. The average order for the past week was higher than that of the week before and amounted to $358.

One of the week's features was the unusually large increase in the changes in recommendation. For the week just closed these were approximately 147 per cent greater than for the same week in 1929. Overbuys for the week were normal.

Shoe Manufacturers to Meet.

Between 600 and 700 manufacturers and retailers are expected to attend the annual dinner of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers Association at the Hotel Commmodore on Tuesday evening. The dinner, at which Edward A. Filene will speak, will conclude the annual meeting of the association. The morning session will be devoted to four round-table group meetings, and a general meeting will be held in the afternoon.

MENACE TO PROFITS IN PRICE EMPHASIS

R. C. Nielson Sees Marked Trend Among Buyers to Seek Concessions.

VOLUME DRIVE UNWISE

Gain of 50,000 in Waffle Iron Sales Brought Loss of $2,000,000 in 1929 Volume.

Profits of retailers and manufacturers as well are being menaced this year by an overemphasis on the matter of price in the sale of merchandise, R. C. Nielson, local district sales manager of the Landers, Frary & Clark Company, one of the largest organizations manufacturing household electrical appliances, told THE TIMES yesterday. The early Spring buying done so far has uncovered a tendency on the part of some buyers to ask price concessions which are unwarranted by present conditions, he said.

"The pressure for price concessions already noted will continue to beset the manufacturer as the year progresses," he continued, "and as the majority of producers have already whittled their prices to the lowest profitable figure, those who make further concessions with the hope of increasing volume will have only themselves to blame next December if a fairly healthy business year for others turns out to be a subnormal one for themselves.

"The retailer who trades volume for profits will discover that he too has gone through a lot of motions which haven't meant anything so far as profits are concerned.

The Figures on Waffle Irons.

"A glaring example of the fallacy of such a policy is shown by the sales figures on waffle irons during 1929. The figures compiled by Electrical Merchandising disclose that sales increased from 718,000 units in 1928 to 768,000 in 1929. Yet the retail value of the sales declined in the same period from $8,643,000 in 1928 to $6,528,000 last year!

"Price levels for waffle irons fell steadily last year, enabling merchants to offer them at correspondingly lower prices. But I question whether the sale of 50,000 additional units compensated for a drop of $2,000,000 in sales value. The retailer's cost of selling each iron didn't change enough to make the year's sales of that item a more profitable one. I venture the opinion that the trade would have been better pleased to have the smaller volume at the 1928 figures."

In discussing the difficulties which face manufacturers and sales agents in meeting the arguments of buyers offering large orders provided the price is tapered to fit the order, Mr. Nielson admitted that the problem is a difficult one.

Method Used by One Concern.

"I have heard of one company, however, which meets the situation by giving ground without appearing to do so," he said. "In dealing with a buyer who wants to know what price allowance can be offered on orders for 50,000, 100,000 and 150,000 units, the average manufacturer starts by quoting his lowest volume price on the 50,000 lot, and then attempts to give better prices for the larger orders. Every price concession he gives after his first quotation is going to cost him money.

"The manufacturer I have in mind reverses the process. He starts with the 150,000 unit proposal and gives his lowest volume price, grading upward to the 50,000 unit order.

"The price allowance for greater volume is there, but not at his expense. He usually finds some way to apply the 150,000 price if one of the smaller orders is eventually given, but the main fact remains that he is assured of a profit on every order he gets.

"If he loses the business because a competitor quotes a price lower than he can possibly give, he still hasn't lost anything, because doing business without profit is usually the first step toward commercial suicide."

Outlook for Dry Goods Better.

The outlook for wholesale dry goods business this season in the Middle Atlantic States is brighter than last year, according to W. J. D. Bell, head of the Quinn-Marshall Company, Lynchburg, Va. Mr. Bell was in this city last week to attend a meeting of the Wholesale Dry Goods Institute, of which he was elected president. He said that improvement in both the agricultural and coal situations in that region presaged an increased consumer demand.

Furniture Show for Week Makes Attendance Record

Closing the first week of its semi-annual trade opening, the New York Furniture Exchange yesterday had a total registration slightly under 2,900 buyers, the heaviest single week's attendance in the history of the organization. The registration exceeded all other records by 500, it was stated.

Buying activity during the week also showed an improvement, although individual orders were considerably under a year ago. During the first three days of the display buyers purchased freely, but sales dropped off Thursday, picking up again on Friday. The showing will continue throughout this week.

WHOLESALE MARKETS REPORT GOOD ORDERS

Interest in Spring Lines Grows Wider—Costume Suit Holds Favor.

Buying at wholesale was of good proportions during the week, with Spring merchandise meeting with wider interest, according to the resumé especially prepared for THE TIMES by Felix Lilienthal & Co., Inc. While weather conditions have proved handicaps in some sections of the country, retail turnover for the month has been encouraging and is leading to more widespread optimism among merchants.

"In dresses," the report continues, "the short-sleeve type has developed into an important style factor. Prints are most important, being purchased and reordered at all prices where designs are good. Printed chiffons are developing more strongly, but the demand for them has not reached the notable stage as yet, although some short-sleeve and sleeveless numbers are selling in the South.

"Out-of-town buyers continue to concentrate most of their efforts on the costume suit, consisting of blouse, skirt and coat. The dressy type coat is more in evidence. The slightly fitted coat seems to be the desired model, some having belts of self material. Many new collars and cuffs are being shown. In the popular price coats, galyak and squirrel are the most outstanding furs.

"In millinery, manufacturers making the better hats are working on body hats of all descriptions, such as chamois soie, chandre soie, bakou, Porte Bonheur and panamalaque. The shapes all are off-the-face and with small brims. Ribbon trims in tailored effects are good.

"If the Spring tailored suit business is as good as stylists and manufacturers promise it will be, we can feel confident that this will be a boon to the scarf and flower business. We feel that, as the Spring draws near, the boutonnière of field flowers, as well as gardenias, will enjoy a stronger demand.

"Buyers all over the country are enjoying a healthy neckwear business, lace types being in the lead. Plastrons rank first in favor, with collar and jabot and tie effects closely following in importance. In gloves there is a tremendous demand for 12, 16 and 20 button suède and glacé styles for evening wear. The large chiffon dance handkerchief continues in marked popularity.

"Importers' lines of jewelry are now complete, and, while there has been no trend toward any particular vogue, a general line of beads in the popular pastel colors is being shown. Seed beads in pastel colors are being featured in imitation pearl as well as small glass types. The necklaces contain numerous strands. Metal costume jewelry is not receiving the response expected, and we do not believe there will be many calls for this type."

Trade Agent to Be Here.

Lee C. Morse, United States Commercial Attaché at Riga, Latvia, and accredited in addition to the republics of Estonia and Lithuania, will be here this week to confer with business men interested in trade conditions in his districts. He will make his headquarters at the Department of Commerce, Room 734, Custom House.

TARIFF CHANGES.

Revision of Peruvian Duties Affects Many Lines—Cuba Taxes Lighters.

The following is a résumé of the weekly changes in foreign tariffs prepared especially for THE TIMES by the local office of the Department of Commerce.

Both Cuba and Algeria have announced that special taxes are to be imposed upon automatic cigarette lighters. The new Cuban regulations impose an added tax of $1 each on imported lighters and 50 cents each on those manufactured within the country.

The Peruvian tariff bill, which has been pending for some time, is now in effect. Increased rates of import duty on lumber, textiles, jute bagging and sacks, furniture, iron and steel and their manufactures, cordage, automobile trucks and omnibuses, confectionery and other articles are provided for. Domestic manufactures in Peru are required under the law to report their production costs to the government. False declarations are subject to fines. Former rates of duty will be restored if domestic manufacturers raise their prices to a level which returns a profit of 20 per cent of the cost of production.

Enforce New Portugese Rates.

The revised Portuguese customs tariff has been placed in effect, and import duties on many articles are radically increased. Automobiles are now dutiable at 10 per cent ad valorem as compared to 3 per cent under the old tariff. The rates on tires and tubes were increased from .20 escudo to .50 escudo per net kilo. Rates on electric lamps have been doubled, while those on insulated metallic wires or cables have been raised from .015 to .75 escudo per kilogram. Duties on nearly all food products have been slightly increased, as have those on hides and skins and leather.

In Costa Rica, an executive decree provides for the reclassification of machinery for cultivating coffee, cocoa, and rice, and in the future such machinery will be exempt from duty.

The Bulgarian Ministry of Finance has ruled that the ratio for conversion of gold leva to paper in payment of the import duty on all grains except barley and rice will be 27 to 1 instead of 20 to 1.

India Restricts "Woolen" Label.

British India no longer permits the use of the term "woolen" as a "trade description" of goods containing an admixture of cotten or other material. The customs act of India prohibits the importation of goods to which a false trade description has been applied.

The Chilean Minister of Internal Revenue has recomended the removal of sales taxes on foreign and domestic pharmaceutical and toilet preparations and the transfer of the taxes to import duties. The suggestion is made for the purpose of protecting domestic products in competition with similar foreign products.

The Dominican Republic has adopted a law prohibiting the importation and use of drinking straws unless they are protected, by being wrapped two together, in special paper wrappers.

Firms in New York and vicinity desiring detailed information regarding these changes in foreign tariffs may obtain them from the local office of the Department of Commerce, 734 Custom House.

Ecuador Announces Trade Fair.

An international sample fair, in which American manufacturers are invited to participate, will be held in Quito, Ecuador, during the week of May 10 to 18, according to a cablegram received yesterday by the Consul General of Ecuador. Tariff barriers have been lifted to permit the free entry of all exhibits and special freight and other concessions have been arranged by the Ecuadorean Government, which is offering special awards for the best exhibits, the announcement states. Displays of farm and other types of machinery produced in this country are especially solicited.

TODAY'S PROGRAMS IN CITY'S CHURCHES

Prayers and Sermons of All Denominations Will Seek to Aid Universal Peace.

CHILD LABOR SUNDAY ALSO

Day Designated as Third Sunday After Epiphany—Catholics Complete Octave of Prayer.

Prayers for an abiding universal peace between nations will be offered in the churches today and scores of pastors will devote the whole or part of their sermons to a discussion of means of making peace possible. Special petitions will be made for a blessing upon the deliberations at the five-power naval conference in session in London.

The National Child Labor Committee, with headquarters at 215 Fourth Avenue, has asked that today be observed as "Child Labor Sunday" in churches and Sunday schools. A leaflet containing a suggested program for use in church organizations has been supplied by the committee.

Roman Catholics completed yesterday an octave of prayer for the reunion of Christendom. In ritualistic churches today is recorded as the third Sunday after Epiphany. Some of today's services will be as follow:

Baptist.

Calvary, worshiping temporarily in Pythian Temple, 135 West Seventieth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Hillyer Hawthorne Straton, assistant pastor and son of the late Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton, who was the pastor, on "Jesus Christ—The God Man;" sermons at 3 o'clock and in the evening by the Rev. Will H. Houghton, the acting pastor. His topic at the latter service will be "The Meaning of the Cross." All services will be broadcast by WQAO.

North, 232 West Eleventh Street—Morning, divine worship; evening, sermon by the Rev. J. Stanley Morgan, the pastor, on "Wandering Stars."

Congregational.

Broadway, at Fifty-sixth Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Bradford, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Providence, R. I. The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, the retiring pastor, will take part today in the dedication of the Horace Bushnell Memorial Building, the new civic auditorium of Hartford, Conn.

Jewish.

Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Sixty-fifth Street—Morning, sermon by Rabbi Nathan Krass on "If I Were a Layman What Would I Expect of the Ministry?"

Free, worshiping in Carnegie Hall—Morning, sermon by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise on "Jew Suss—Fact or Fiction?"

Binai Jeshurun, Eighty-eighth Street, West of Broadway—Morning, sermon by Rabbi Isaac Landman, editor of The American Hebrew, on "Our Present-Day Religious Revolution."

American, worshiping in Pythian Temple, 135 West Seventieth Street—Morning, sermon by Rabbi Marius Ranson on "Man's Last Enemy," based on the Broadway production "Death Takes a Holiday."

Lutheran.

St. James, Madison Avenue and Seventy-third Street—Sermon by the Rev. Charles D. Trexler, the pastor-elect, on "Christ and the Leper."

Advent, Broadway and Ninety-third Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Augustus Steimle, the pastor, on "Faith" and "Joseph in Temptation." At the Young Peoples' "Twilight Hour," Miss Mildred Winston, secretary of the Lutheran Board of Education, Washington, D. C., will speak on "Student Groups in Action."

Immanuel, Lexington Avenue and Eighty-eighth Street—Morning at 9:30 o'clock, sermon by the Rev. Arthur R. Kleps, the pastor, on "Wise and Foolish Builders"; evening, divine worship at which ten adults will be accepted into membership; Wednesday evening, annual concert given under the auspices of the Women's Committee of the Lutheran Education Society.

Emmanuel, Brown Place and East 137th Street, the Bronx—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Felix G. Robinson, the pastor, on "Salvation"; evening, cantata by the choir, "The Conversion of St. Paul."

Methodist Episcopal.

Madison Avenue, at Sixtieth Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, the pastor, on "Living One's Own Life" and "Glasgow: 'They Stooped to Folly.'"

Broadway Temple, at 174th Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, the pastor, on "Helpless Humanism" and "Future Life." At the evening service W. D. Pelley, author of a recent magazine article, "Seven Minutes in Eternity," will speak.

Washington Square, Fourth Street, West of the square—Morning, divine worship; evening, sermon by the Rev. Dr. John L. Davis, the pastor, on "Robert Burns." There will be music by the Scottish Triple Choir, under the leadership of Frederick Taggert. Angus Fraser will play the bagpipe. The ushers will be in kilts.

Church of All Nations, 9 Second Avenue—Evening, forum with an address by Oscar Peterson, a member of the Executive Committee of the Proletarian party, on "The Life and Work of Lenin."

St. Andrew's, 122 West Seventy-sixth Street—Sermons, morning and evening, by the Rev. Dr. James Hardy Bennett, the pastor, on "Singing Stars and Shouting Sons" and "As a Man Thinketh."

St. James, Madison Avenue and 126th Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. George Maychin Stockdale, the pastor, on "Providence"; 4 o'clock, a service for Esthonians with their own minister officiating; evening, open forum, with an address by C. Look to MacDonald to Achieve Results as President of Naval Conference.

DELEGATES ADMIRE HIM

Lords Mark the Reassembling of Parliament by Defeating Two Cabinet Measures.

By ERNEST MARSHALL.
Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—The London Naval Conference was launched under conditions which could not have been bettered, except for the slight accident of a fog, which, although described as the worst London has known for years, had few more untoward results than to make Ambassador Dawes a little late and keep Lloyd George away from the House of Lords altogether. It was wittily and not infrequently remarked that it was better for the conference to begin in a fog than to end in one.

The inaugural proceedings were deeply impressive. The absence of State ceremony in no wise detracted from the solemnity of the occasion. In fact, the pomp and circumstance usually associated with functions in the royal gallery of the House of Lords would have been a somewhat incongruous display. The King struck the keynote when he said it was "all peoples" who since the great war had determined that statesmanship should leave nothing undone to prevent a repetition of that grim and immense tragedy.

The London conference is more than a naval conference; it is a people's conference. The delegations of the five powers are assembled not with designs to obtain advantages for one country over another, but with the object of reaching agreements which will be satisfactory to all the nations concerned. The peoples have made their voices heard. The mandates they have given their representatives are peremptory. Failure to accomplish something of the task committed to their hands will be a dereliction of duty and will be condemned by world opinion. Confession of incapacity would entail dire consequences from which all peoples would suffer, and in their distress they would exact bitter retribution. During these opening days of the conference there has been general recognition of this fact, implied in all speeches, that failure would not merely be marking time, but would definitely set the hands of the clock back.

Smooth Sailing Now Expected.

Launched under such favorable auspices, what will be the course of the ship carrying her cargo of high hopes and manned by a crew animated with good-will? It is not expected that she will sail triumphantly over smooth seas and under blue skies into her haven. There may be anxious times when the winds will buffet her and rocks and shoals will endanger her progress, and even there may be moments when there will be disaffection and disagreement among her crew and she may be thrown out of her course and her prow turned in directions which cannot lead to this safe haven but only to an intermediate port where she can be laid up for repairs.

Much will depend upon the man at the helm, and there can be no doubt that among the delegations generally there exists the firm conviction that no man better qualified for the post of steersman could be found than Ramsay MacDonald, who by virtue of his office as Prime Minister of the country convening the conference presides over its deliberations. Of his zeal and enthusiasm there is no question, nor is there any fear that in adaptability and broad perception of differing points of view he will be inadequate to his task.

So far as his own fellow-subjects are concerned, the Prime Minister never commanded more complete appreciation and confidence than he won by his address in the House of Lords. His affirmation that in the naval programs of the leading powers there is a margin between naval security needs and actual or projected strengths has been accepted as axiomatic. The first duty of the conference would be to fix in the full light of day the needs of each power.

There are many who are convinced that even if its results be not all that might be hoped for, the conference will not separate without a record of "something accomplished, something done," that will contain the germs of the eventual harvest to be reaped by nations of good-will.

To sum up the impressions of the week, the naval conference has been inaugurated under much better conditions and with greater prospects of a fair measure of success than was thought possible by the shrewdest observers on the very eve of its assembly. That is at least something to the good.

Lords Defeat Government Twice.

Parliament met again on the same day that the five-power naval conference opened and the House of Lords amused itself by defeating the government twice in the afternoon. The Commons will thus lose valuable time in reversing the decisions of the peers.

Quite the most noticeable feature of the gathering of the lower house was its good temper and apparent readiness to smooth the way for government measures. Lloyd George was all smiles and received many congratulations on the way he had disposed of the questions raised by Lord Grey of Fallodon regarding future developments in the Liberal party.

He was asked whether he was really so pessimistic about the naval conference as an article he had contributed to a Sunday paper might indicate. He replied that an optimist was a man who saw his difficulties and surmounted them, whereas a pessimist was he who took them lying down.

Masterpiece of Scythian Art Discovered by Grave-Diggers

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 10.—A 1,500-year-old golden image of a deer was found by grave-diggers on the Kubik estate. By its side was a chain of amber, some buttons, earrings and a rusty helmet. The grave-diggers divided the treasure, but it was later redeemed and will enrich the Hungarian National Museum's collection.

The deer is a masterpiece of Scythian art, notable for its grace and faithfulness to nature, but shows traces of Hellenic influence.

At about the same time fourteen Hun tombs were discovered in the neighborhood of Szeged. In them were skeletons of animals, bronze finery and iron tools. Next Spring the whole cemetery will be excavated.

SOVIETS RUTHLESS IN WAR ON KULAKS

Stalin Explains "Liquidation" of Rich Peasants Means Complete Dispossession.

"NEPMEN" ALSO INCLUDED

Huge Head of Lenin Is Unveiled in Moscow on Sixth Anniversary of His Death.

By WALTER DURANTY.
Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, Jan. 23.—Last Wednesday was one of the five annual holidays provided under the new Soviet calendar and "nonstop week" system. It was in commemoration of the death of Lenin in 1924 and of the massacre of workers in the courtyard of the Winter palace in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) in 1905.

In place of the memorial services that would be held on such occasions in other countries, Communist and workers' organizations throughout Russia held meetings in "the Lenin corner" which exists in every club and factory and there undertook some voluntary work for the public benefit. Thus in Moscow tens of thousands of young Communists spent the day collecting old iron, bottles and the like in fulfillment of a pledge made by the Moscow Communist youth organization to provide enough such material before the Spring sowing to buy 500 tractors.

In front of the grand opera house, there was a brief ceremony of the unveiling of a colossal head of Lenin, above which in huge red letters is written, "Lenin lives in the hearts of all the workers of the world."

The head, which is about twelve feet high and rests on a twenty-foot black-draped scaffolding, is made of gray canvas. The features, with their narrow, half-closed eyes, suggest a death mask and the impression is heightened by the color. The raised right eyebrow gives a slightly cynical expression.

It is like a new sphinx brooding over the inscrutable future, and the crowd stared up awe-stricken. Grotesque as the idea of this bodyless head may sound, its effect is portentous and grim.

The anniversary was also notable for an editorial signed by M. Stalin which appeared in the Red Army newspaper Red Star, in which the Communist leader carefully explained the meaning of the phrase, "liquidation of the kulak [rich peasant] as a class," which is the keynote of the Kremlin's revised economic policy. M. Stalin said:

"It is necessary to smash in open combat the opposition of this class and to deprive it of the productive sources of its existence and development—the free use of land, the means of production, the right to hire labor, &c. The present policy in the country is not a prolongation of this policy, but a violent change from the old policy of limiting capitalist elements in the villages to a new policy of liquidating the kulak as a class.

A recent editorial in THE NEW YORK TIMES discussing M. Stalin's agrarian policy charitably assumed that the process of liquidating the kulaks would mean their reduction to the average present status by deprivation of their land and other provileges, after which they could enter the collective movement as poor or middle peasants. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is proposed to stamp them out root and branch, so that the place where they were may know them no more. Not only are they refused admission to the collectives, but they are being expelled if they manage to join.

Exile or Death Offered.

The press here Wednesday carried a resolution adopted by 450 delegates from the collectives of one of the counties of Moscow Province. The delegates resolved to "devote all efforts to this achievement by the end of Spring—that not one kulak, priest, nepman or trader be left in our country."

To define further the brutal truth, take the conclusion to an article in the Red Star in which that writer says:

"What will become of the kulak after his liquidation as a class? To us it is all one—let him fall under the first passing automobile or spend the rest of his life in exile—anything, provided he disappears from our midst."

The fact is that the revised policy puts the kulaks, private traders and servants of the religious cults up against a wall. In the urban centres the nepman, or small capitalist, is deprived of his apartment, his

JOY IN THE BALKANS OVER HAGUE PARLEY

All Delegates Report Victory, but Neglect to Give Details to Censored Press.

FEAST OF LOANS FORESEEN

Many Disappointments Seem Likely as Peoples Find Results Fail as Economic Panaceas.

By G. E. R. GEDYE.
Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Jan. 23.—To study the Central European press and read the utterances of Central European statesmen today is to be convinced that the statesmen attending The Hague Conference have succeeded in finding, through the agreements which they signed there, the philosopher's stone of international politics.

Like the quality of mercy, as described by Shakespeare's Portia, the blessing of The Hague Conference "droppeth like the gentle rain from heaven upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed. It blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

Such lions and lambs—without specifying which is which—as Premier Count Stephen Bethlen of Hungary, Foreign Minister Edouard Benes of Czechoslovakia, Premier Dr. Julius Maniu of Rumania and Chancellor Johann Schober of Austria apparently learned at The Hague to lie down together with all quarrels forgotten. Each went to The Hague pledged to the hilt to win victory or die, politically at least, on the field of honor.

Austria's banner was proudly emblazoned, "We cannot pay and will not pay"; Czechoslovakia's and Rumania's, "They shall pay and must pay, but we will not." Bulgaria, with the device "We have overpaid and demand repayment" went equally determined into the lists at The Hague.

All Claim Victory.

The doughty champions are all home again. They assure their peoples, who girded on their armor, "Victory is ours."

Chancellor Schober received a rousing even if pre-arranged triumphal welcome back to Vienna last night. It is all extremely gratifying to every one concerned. Only, as the tumult and shouting die uncomfortable voices—so far generally of those professionally uncomfortable, the Social Democrats—ask "What, exactly, was settled; precisely, what have we obtained?" For, incredible as it may sound, when every detail of the settlement of the biggest question of German reparation is known all over the rest of the world, it is a fact that at the moment of writing, two days after The Hague settlement, the peoples of Central Europe have only the vaguest idea of what their terms are. Secret diplomacy, apparently abolished as far as the results are concerned, at least for Western Europe, retains its hold in respect to both negotiations and results in the eastern part of the Continent.

When Hermann Bahr, Vienna's Bernard Shaw, called the old Austro-Hungarian monarchy the Land of Baroque, he was not thinking only in terms of stone and stucco. What aroused him to impotent anger was the Austrian's fondness for the façade in political and administrative solutions. Instead of ruthless German thoroughness, he found his countrymen anxious only to present an appearance of having solved all problems while concealing, instead of dragging into the light of day and threshing out thoroughly the most insidious dangers.

Few Facts Available.

The Hague settlements may, indeed, prove able to stand the light of day for all of the various nationals of Eastern Europe, but already the press has succeeded, with very few facts at its disposal, in casting such a roseate glow around them that it seems some nations at least are bound to be disappointed when the hard facts emerge—unless, indeed, the roseate glow has succeeded in blinding them.

What, for example, has Austria obtained at the Hague? It is probable, indeed, that she has come off best of all, since the burden of liability to pay reparations was lifted. The world has long realized that this hardly used mountain republic, which had far less consideration paid than had any other State to the possibility of its future existence at the Paris Peace Conference of 1918-1919, neither could nor should be mulcted of further payments. It was generally recognized that its share of responsibility for the sins of the former Imperial Government of the mighty Austrian Empire were more than expiated when the powers had insisted on its being born cripple, with all fertile territories and millions of its German-speaking nationals placed under foreign rule, while its union with great Germany was forbidden.

Liability Impeded Loan.

Nevertheless, Austria's paper liability to pay reparations was always the first obstacle to its obtaining a foreign loan, since the Allies possessed a general lien on all State property and revenues. This now falls so that Austria is entitled to a sigh of relief. Whether she is entitled to jubilate, however, is another matter. After all, the liability which vanished was a paper one only, and its disappearance makes no Austrian one penny richer and provides employment for no single man.

As a serialist on the Arbeiter Zeitung maliciously croaks in the ear of Chancellor Schober amid the cacophony of congratulations this morning: "Our Chancellor returns to a country of 6,000,000 inhabitants, of whom 300,000 are workless. The masses face the worst period of unemployment in the country's history. In such a situation one does not rejoice, but puts his shoulder to the wheel."

The truth is that the credit-hungry States of Central and Eastern Europe are mesmerized by the word loan. For the moment the Austrians, hearing that one barrier to that es-

Austrian Barbers in Despair Over Bobbed Hair Would Persuade Men to Let Whiskers Grow

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Jan. 12.—Austrian barbers and friseurs, having struggled in vain to induce women to let their hair grow longer, have now decided to popularize longer locks, and especially whiskers, for men. If the Congress of Austrian Hairdressers which has been meeting here has its way the streets of this polite metropolis will soon be populated by male citizens bearded like the angora.

"The safety razor," it was stated at the congress, "has proved our ruin. The greater the surface of a man's face which we can induce him to cover with hair the more work for our hands." It was resolved that members should induce their clients by every means in their power to develop every kind of hairy adornment, starting with the toothbrush or Chaplin mustache and rising by degrees to the dignified "walrus" or "gravy strainer," the finely waxed "Kaiser Wilhelm," and even the bushy "Francis Joseph" whisker.

Austrian men, having shown a willingness to stick feathers in their hats and enrol themselves in private armies of Left or Right, may prove fruitful ground for the new movement. But perhaps Austrian women will have something to say about it.

SPAIN FAILS TO TELL WORLD OF ITS GOODS

Producers Suffer in Hunt for Markets by Ignorance of the Value of Advertising.

MAGAZINES FEW AND POOR

Illiteracy Is a Handicap to Developing Domestic Sales—Olive Oil Men Seek Aid Here.

By FRANK L. KLUCKHOHN.
Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Jan. 23.—In the opinion of many observers, Spain's failure to appreciate the value of advertising her products and herself shows the gap existing between the industrial and transportation developments of the last six years and the ability of the people immediately to assimilate modern ideas of marketing and distribution.

Constant grasping for proper methods is one of the most important internal developments in Spain today. Advertising has not the prestige it enjoys in other countries. In fact it is regarded here in the same manner as soap-box orators are in the United States. The greater part is now done by foreign companies.

An American automobile firm carefully checked the number of automobiles passing a prominent intersection in Madrid for several weeks and then announced, "One in every four cars passing this centre of the city is ours." The Spaniards shrug their shoulders, saying "another ad," assuming the catchy phrase not necessarily true.

An agent for a foreign company recently went to the director of Spain's largest newspaper, of 124,000 circulation, with a protest because the opening shot in a big advertising campaign had not been published. The director's explanation was, "I forgot it."

Newspapers are the leading advertising medium in Spain, yet all regard advertising as a nuisance not to be encouraged, and not one has an advertising department or manager. A phrase or picture worth 10,000 words is unknown, and looking through a Spanish paper, except by the most careful scrutiny, it is impossible to distinguish the names of many products being advertised. No advertisements appeal to human desires, most being merely such categorical statements as "Our product is best."

Signboards are practically non-existent here, as 45 per cent of the people are illiterate and all towns tax signboards heavily. Magazines are few and relatively unpopular, and the Madrid newspapers are shipped all over the country, the ingenuity of the bulk of review editors being strictly limited and the contents of magazines generally being poor.

Black and White, one of the best magazines, reaches 50,000 of the 22,000,000 people. Mundo Grafico, because it consists of pictures which the illiterate can enjoy is the best seller. English, French and American magazines sell by the thousands to the non-English-speaking public because of the attractiveness of their pictures and composition.

It is felt that a splendid opportunity to propagandize is lost because few magazines are sent to South America, despite the affection and respect of South Americans for Spaniards.

The failure of newspapers to appreciate advertising perhaps is due to the fact that one is subsidized by the government and the others have high advertising rates, not based on size or circulation.

Failure of newspapers and magazines to cooperate in marketing oranges is causing a flooding of the nearer markets. There is no advertising to create new markets further abroad, the result being distress here now. Spain is the second largest producer of oranges in the world and still is primarily an agricultural nation, but her olive oils, wines, fruits and almonds are not known under Spain's trade-mark. As proof of the advance of ideas, however, a representative of the olive oil producers is on his way to the United States now to discuss the problem of marketing this product.

NEW ATTICA PRISON TO COST $12,000,000

Separate Cell Blocks Will Allow Segregation of Prisoners With Worst Records.

Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUFFALO, Jan. 22.—If the succession of prison mutinies in this State have had no other effect, they have directed an exceptional amount of attention to the new State prison under construction at Attica.

When the first outbreak occurred at Auburn on July 28, with the almost simultaneous revolt at Dannemora, the opening rush of comments indicated that even among State officials and prison reform bodies many had forgotten that a new prison at Attica was contemplated. There were those who attempted sarcastic reproaches on the folly of a State which enacted Baumes laws to fill prisons with life-termers and omitted to provide adequate prison space in which to keep them.

These arguments commonly ignored the fact that there were any other life-term convicts than Baumes law prisoners and were obviously intended to suggest the abandonment of the habitual criminal principle in the sentencing of offenders. Whatever may be the outcome of that agitation, the immediate and practical answer to the convict revolts has been the new Attica prison. In a sense, the entire controversy between the two schools of criminology may be said to have reached a compromise in this prison, in which both sides see some promise of a demonstration of their theories.

Atticans Welcome Prison.

The very slow progress that had been made toward building the institution before the riots contrasts with the energy that has been shown since those events. The village of Attica has a population of about 2,000. It is thirty-two miles from Buffalo, and is conveniently accessible by rail from other cities of Western New York. So far from objecting to the location of the prison in its neighborhood, Attica was disposed to welcome the institution as offering a considerable increase in business and employment, particularly during the construction period. Unwarned by the experience which led the former village of Sing Sing to change its name to Ossining, Attica has raised no opposition to having its municipal name attached to a place of penal detention, though a sight in the main street disputes official designation by pointing the way to "Wyoming prison." This has brought protests from the neighboring village of Wyoming. Locally there certainly was no need for riots to spur building activity.

The initial resolution ordering the preparation of plans and specifications was adopted in March, 1928. It was not till Sept. 6, 1929, that bids were opened for the construction work. Criticism that the work was delayed unduly meets the ready answer that it is no small task to draw adequate plans for a great model prison.

There appears, however, to have been some conflict of opinion regarding the kind of model which the institution should follow—whether it should embody the idea that the main object is to reform the convict or to protect society against him by keeping him under stern restraint. Governor Roosevelt, in an address before the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs at Syracuse in November, said that if he could have his way the new prison would limit its accommodation to 1,000 prisoners. As the cost of the plant then was estimated at $10,000,000, that looked like an average of $10,000 for housing each convict. It

RESCUE COMMITTEE CHICAGO'S BEST HOPE

Body Headed by Silas Strawn Has Bankers' Confidence Which Office-Holders Lack.

FINANCIAL TROUBLE GROWS

City and County Governments Are Unable to Raise Funds to Pay for Essential Services.

By S. J. DUNCAN-CLARK.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24.—The so-called rescue committee, headed by Silas Strawn, former president of the American Bar Association, which sprang into being some weeks ago as a citizen effort to avert financial disaster in the government of Chicago and Cook County, is now assuming the key position in the extraordinary situation confronting 3,000,000 people.

It seems probable that county, city and school administrations will be forced to seek its intervention, although thus far they have been disposed to treat it with more or less indifference. The committee has succeeded in effecting an organization which gives promise of ability to render intelligent service. It has summoned to its assistance specialists in political economy and municipal financing and management from the faculties of the University of Chicago and Northwestern University. With these experts are associated the technical executives of the Bureau of Public Efficiency and the Civic Federation. Moreover, it has become evident that the committee commands the confidence of the bankers, and that the latter are likely to be guided by its advice in the response they make to political appeals for aid.

County Forced Into Line.

This important factor in strengthening its position became evident when the county, having adopted a budget balanced by estimated revenue, sought to float $7,000,000 worth of tax-anticipation warrants, and was met by local banks with the suggestion that it should consult Mr. Strawn's committee. The banks refused to bid on the tax warrants, and the county is still seeking to dispose of them. From Mr. Strawn came the proposal that effort should be made to obtain bids from private citizens, who could then use the warrants to pay their taxes when the bills are presented. The chief responsibilities of the county lie in the field of public philanthropy, such as mothers' pensions, the county hospital and the Oak Forest Home for the Poor.

The city's plight is best represented by the statement of Mr. Strawn, made at a meeting of the Commercial Club, in which he estimated that if the taxes for 1928 and 1929—collection of which cannot be made until the reassessment is completed—were in the treasury Chicago would have a deficit of more than $20,000,000.

The Board of Education, after vainly wrestling with the problem of keeping its budget within anticipated revenue abandoned the effort, and adopted the biggest budget in its history, totaling more than $101,000,000, and exceeding by nearly $5,000,000 any reasonable expectation of returns from taxes.

The city and the Board of Education are both counting upon obtaining money by the sale of warrants drawn against the 1930 levy, but nobody knows on what their faith is built. If the county cannot dispose of its warrants, there seems little reason for hoping that the city and its schools will fare better.

Office-Holders Out of Favor.

Popular sentiment continues to run against the office-holders, and there is strong feeling that any relief which the rescue committee may be able to afford should be clearly conditioned upon pledges of support for a program of reconstruction in governmental financing methods. The committee is considering such a program which will cover the process of public finance from assessment as the basis of taxation to budget control at the revenue outlet. This will involve, necessarily, a very thorough study of the existing structure and system. It is a task which may take months. In the meantime some sort of emergency plan is imperative if essential services in the county philanthropies, in the city police, fire, street cleaning and health departments, and the work of the schools are to continue. Payless pay days otherwise will bring demoralization.

"Big Bill" Thompson, the Mayor, is showing signs of purpose to turn the situation to political advantage. He has raised the cry that the Loop business district has been under-assessed to the tune of $300,000,000. The fact is that Loop assessments, which were notoriously high, have been cut by about $120,000,000, and that cuts have been made throughout the city, while in the county valuations have gone up. But the Mayor is attempting to pose as the champion of the small home owner and the small business man against the Loop. Many think he is shaping an issue for candidacy in 1931. It seems preposterous under the circumstances, but the whole situation leans in the direction of the preposterous. The other night the Mayor called in the editors and publishers of neighborhood newspapers and made them a speech about the alleged conspiracy to save the Loop at the expense of the rest of the city. It sounded like a campaign speech.

County Battle at Hand.

The Mayoralty fight is a year away but the fight for county offices is at hand. Antony Cermak, Democratic President of the County Board, will not be a candidate for re-election. It is believed he wants to run as his party's candidate for Mayor in 1931. He would like to see Coroner Bundesen make the race for the board presidency in order to get him out of the way before the Mayoralty campaign. But the Coroner is also thinking of the City Hall job and refuses to be side-tracked. Meantime it is announced that Axel Lonn-

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 22.—For thirty years Mrs. Amanda Vandewater looked after the home of James Warren Whiffen, Kansas City lawyer. She milked the cows, churned and did other odd chores, and when Mr. Whiffen was ill she nursed him.

When the lawyer died he left an estate of $350,000, from which Mrs. Vandewater was to receive an income of $80 a month.

Mrs. Vandewater's claim for $80,000 has been upheld by a jury.

CLEVELAND STIRRED BY HOPKINS OUSTER

Maschke Coalition Against the City Manager Evokes Strong Public Protest.

HE TURNS ON HIS CRITICS

Tells Them They Have Made New Friends for Government They Sought to Destroy.

By N. R. HOWARD.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 22.—The largest city-manager city in the United States gave vociferous evidence this week and last that adoption of the manager plan six years ago did not after all take political battling and the machinery of politics out of the City Hall. In scenes whose public tumult harked for parallel to the days when Tom Johnson, as Mayor and boss, was fighting the street railway companies, William R. Hopkins, Cleveland's first and only manager, was voted out of office by the new City Council after a coalition of twelve Maschke Republicans and two independent Democrats had been formed to serve that purpose.

Mr. Hopkins went into office Jan. 1, 1924, with the inception of the manager plan, as the candidate of both the Republican and Democratic city organizations. Both fought onslaughts on the charter at city elections through the Fall of 1927, and the Democrats and the Hopkins Republicans, formed as a faction of the city G. O. P., staved off three more charter attacks in which the Maschke Republicans grew increasingly hostile. Early in 1928 Manager Hopkins manifested independence in his policies and patronage, and by a year ago had practically broken with the party organization led by National Committeeman Maurice Maschke, Cleveland's "boss." But it was not until after last November's Council elections that Maschke dared go after Hopkins's scalp, and his effort would finally have failed had it not been for the two defections in the Democratic ranks.

City Deeply Stirred.

The raid on Hopkins has stirred Cleveland politically as nothing else has in many years. Nearly 4,000 citizens crowded into the Public Hall a week ago to protest against the ouster, and asserted through their platform spokesmen that the time had come to drive the Maschke partisans out of Cleveland politics. As Maschka's more or less quiet supremacy for more than twenty years has never been so violently questioned, this may be viewed in the nature of a civic uprising. Two recall movements aimed at the fourteen members of the new City Council who voted for the Hopkins ouster are under way, and the choice of a successor to Hopkins resulted in near-defeat for Maschke and his chief lieutenants.

The city manager-designate is State Senator Daniel Edgar Morgan, lawyer, business man, and former president of two outstanding civic associations. He is expected to be voted into office next week, by the same votes which expelled Hopkins. Mr. Morgan is a Republican politician of nearly the same character and traditions at Hopkins, and some political watchers are predicting that he will be about as independent as Hopkins as soon as he finds himself in the City Hall.

Two wild caucuses of the Maschke Council "paper majority" preceded the Hopkins ouster. On the eve of the first Council meeting of this year, the Republicans caucused all one afternoon and evening and deadlocked on both the ouster and the succession. The candidate for city manager known to have Maschke's backing was John A. Cline, former Prosecuting Attorney and a past president of the State Bar Association. But five of the Republican Councilmen bucked, and the caucus broke up. A week ago, a second caucus resulted in the compromise choice of Morgan and the finding of twelve Republican votes in a Council of 25 to remove Hopkins.

No Reason Given for Move.

All of this time—and this is what stirred the public—none of the leaders of the ouster movement brought forth anything tangible in the way of reasoning for deposing Mr. Hopkins, under whose leadership the city admittedly has made its most imposing physical and material progress. He assumed more and more leadership and several "moderate" Republican Councilmen finally decided that he had become more of an autocrat than the charter proposed. One final cause of war was the city's 1928 negotiation with the East Ohio Gas Company for new rates. The Council, as the rate-fixing body, decided to agree to a slight advance. Mr. Hopkins demurred, and won his case through the State Appellate Court.

At last week's Council meeting, as

DRY LAW SPLITS STATE

New York's Urban-Rural Rift Is Widened by Differences Over Prohibition.

CAUSE OF REPUBLICAN WOE

Defections Almost Certain This Fall, No Matter Who Leaders Pick as Candidates.

By W. A. WARN.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ALBANY, Jan. 23—Home rule has done much to temper the bitterness, constantly reflected in legislative debates, which marked the political relations that existed between the city of New York and the rural sections of the State before the home rule amendment to the State Constitution was adopted and a law enacted to make it operative. But prohibition, which promises to become a dominant topic in the Legislature beginning next week, has since become a troublesome factor, threatening to keep alive and widen the perennial differences between the country and the cities.

In this new conflict the city of New York no longer stands alone with the rest of the State ranged on the other side of the controversy. The old dividing line was largely one drawn to mark a boundary not unnatural if viewed in the light of the political geography of the State of New York. New York City normally is overwhelmingly Democratic on election day. The rest of the State, including the other cities, normally returns a sizable Republican majority. In the struggle over prohibition which has been in progress since 1920 the line-up is different. Only New York City is a unit—practically all wet. The Republican territory outside of the big city is divided. The cities, broadly speaking, are wet, the country districts dry.

City Still Has Grievances.

Of course, there were other than party affiliation factors in the political differences between New York City and the territory beyond its boundaries before prohibition became an issue. New York City had just grievances and chafed under them. It still has some. There was the continuous meddling, before home rule went into effect, with the affairs of the city of New York by Republican Legislatures. There was the manipulation charged against the 1894 Constitutional Convention, dominated by the Republicans, to prevent New York City, with more than 52 per cent of the population of the State and furnishing approximately two-thirds of the State's revenues, from having more than about 40 per cent (it is 41 per cent in the present Assembly) of the seats in the Legislature.

This last grievance, involving in effect taxation without representation, a complaint which once upon a time furnished fuel for a revolution and gave birth to a new nation, New York City probably will be compelled to nurse along until a Democratic majority can retain its hold on the Legislature long enough to adopt an amendment to the State Constitution. But where other grievances are concerned, home rule has afforded an antidote and a preventive for the most of them, while a conciliatory policy consistently pursued in recent years by the present Republican leadership of the Legislature has acted as a palliative for others.

In this connection it may be recalled that while Democratic State platforms over a long period of years had pledged the party to home rule legislation, and home rule long had been a Democratic battle cry in successive campaigns, it remained for the Republicans to place the present home rule law on the statute books. The Constitutional amendment was sponsored by a Republican lawmaker and adopted by Republican Legislatures after the Democratic Legislatures of 1911 and 1913 had failed to take advantage of their opportunity to do the same thing. And even before home rule became a fact through the initative of a Republican Legislature, the Constitutional Convention, dominated by the Republicans, which met in the Capitol in 1915, had written into its revised Constitution that failed of ratification a home rule article which went as far in its grant of power to the cities as the amendment now in effect.

Dry Law Brings Discord.

Thus by sagacious exercise of the powers they were in a position to wield, through control of the Legislature which they still retain, the Republicans went a long way in the promotion of better relations between the city and the territory beyond its gates. But the differences that since have arisen over prohibition to create a political cleavage between the cities and the country districts are not susceptible to adjustment by any processes the Republicans have it in their power to apply.

On the prohibition issue the Republican party in this State, like the Democrats in the nation, is a party divided against itself. And prohibition is destined to become a dominant issue in the campaign this Autumn, with the new aggressive program mapped out by the anti-prohibition forces within the State, under the leadership of former United States Senator James W. Wadsworth Jr.

With this division within their own party, prohibition is to the Republicans a keen, two-edged sword, cutting in both directions. If they nominate a dry candidate for Governor there is bound to be a defection of wet urban Republicans from the

HEAD OF BAY STATE POINTS WITH PRIDE

Mr. Allen's Message Tells of Vast Program of Improvements Without Bond Issues.

AND WITH DROP IN TAXES

Finance Will Be a Campaign Issue, but It May Be Overshadowed by Prohibition.

By F. LAURISTON BULLARD.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Jan. 21.—The Governor of Massachusetts is pointing with pride these days. Examination of his speeches in the campaign of 1928, and of his messages to the General Court in January, 1929, and the present January, respectively, together with his budget messages last year and this, reveals his dominant interests to be the efficient administration of the finances of the State and generous provision for its humanitarian enterprises. With the first of these this correspondence is mainly concerned, for the reason that Massachusetts actually is in an almost, if not an absolutely, unique position among the States. The net direct debt of the State stands at its lowest point in thirty years, which means that at the peak the debt was four times what it is today; the State tax now is half what it was at the maximum, and without impairing this record in any manner the Commonwealth contemplates the largest program in its history for the construction of public buildings and highways in the current year.

Governor Allen announced this theme in his message of 1929. He said: "A rigid adherence to sound financial principles has brought us to the threshold of an era which I trust will see us free from debt." To that theme he has returned again and again in his State papers, although without such definite intimation of the possible elimination altogether of a direct debt.

No Bonds Issued.

He recited to the legislators this year the fine record of "improvements and extensions" which had been accomplished "without the issuance of a bond." Last year in his budget message the Governor declared that the system now in use in the Commonwealth had shown conclusively that "it is possible to grant large increases for desirable and necessary purposes without increasing the tax burdens of the people." In the message with the budget recommendations for the current year he stated that "the government of the Commonwealth has lived within its income for the entire decade." Yet the budget of 1929 called for total expenditures of $55,413,000, which was an increase over the year preceding of $1,641,000, and the budget for 1930 calls for appropriations of $62,542,000.

At the end of the last fiscal year on Nov. 30, 1929, the net direct debt of the State was 72 per cent below the maximum, there having been a reduction within the year of $1,660,000. At the end of the present fiscal year there is careful computation to justify the expectation that the debt will be 75 per cent below that maximum, and this remarkable reduction will have been attained in a period of ten years.

Further, the Governor shows that the State's building program for 1929 was one of the most extensive in the history of the Commonwealth, and larger than the program for any two-year period prior to 1927, a large part of the construction having been for needed facilities for such State humanitarian departments as mental diseases, public health, public welfare, education and correction. The program for 1930 contains provisions for large increases over that of last year, and the expenditures again will be chiefly in the interest of these and other State institutions. The Governor asks also for appropriations of $12,570,000 for highway construction, which also is a large increase over the corresponding appropriations of 1929.

Budget System Pioneer.

Massachusetts established a budget system three years before the adoption of the plan by the Federal Government, and this is believed to have been the first really effective such system in the country. The system was developed by a process of evolution which found expression in 1917 in the creation of the office of Supervisor of Administration, and the following year the full-fledged budget plan began operation. About the same time the departmental machinery of the Commonwealth was transformed from an outworn and archaic aggregation of many scores of bureaus and commissions into the present consolidated system.

Under the old plan the legislators provided the money for the departmental heads to spend, and they proceeded to spend it, and that was the whole story. Under the plan now in use these expenditures are carefully supervised. The theory is that the men at the head of the State departments may be at the top of their respective professions, and expert in the care of the interests entrusted to them, and yet not be financial experts. The supervision of expenditure has produced economies where it had been supposed the utmost farthing had been saved and eliminated waste where no waste had been supposed to exist.

That, however, has not been the whole story. The governmental machine as a whole functions smoothly and well. Business administration has been emphasized by a succession of Governors, including Coolidge, Cox and Fuller, and now by Governor Allen. The powerful committees of the Senate and the House have been ably manned, especially that of Ways and Means, and their heads have been devoted to the theory which the Governor so warmly endorses.

On the wall of the office of the chairman of the Commission of Administration and Finance, Charles P. Howard, a commission usually called the "State Fin. Com.," which is short for Finance Commission and alludes to the long well-known "Fin. Con." of the city of Boston, there hangs a framed graph which certifies with emphasis the proud position Massachusetts holds among the States in the matter of costs of government. The chart shows the results of an investigation made in Wisconsin, an order of a Legislature which resented criticism of the alleged "extravagance" of Wisconsin in State expenditures. A tabulation was prepared on the basis of the figures of the Department of Commerce at Washington. The list of the forty-eight States has at the top North Carolina and at the bottom Massachusetts, with Wisconsin a notch above. In the ten years 1915-1925 North Carolina's costs of government had increased 847 per cent, Wisconsin's 101 per cent, those of Massachusetts only 72 per cent.

Taxes Are Lower.

The State tax of Massachusetts in 1913 was $8,000,000, in 1920 it reached $14,000,000, last year it was $8,500,000—for the present year the recommendation is $7,000,000. The net direct debt in 1901, when figures began to be calculated on the present basis, was something less than $12,000,000. The fiscal year of 1919-20 began with a peak load of $40,433,205. Since that year reductions have been large and steady. The debt last year was a little more than $11,000,000. The estimate for the current fiscal year is below $10,000,000. In commenting on this showing Governor Allen says that "since the debt last stood at so low a point the population of the Commonwealth has increased by 50 per cent and the total valuation of all property in the Commonwealth has increased by over 150 per cent." The appropriations for interest on this debt show a corresponding downward trend. That charge in 1918 was almost double what it had been in 1910, but the appropriation for this purpose in the present year is $1,176,000 less than it would have been had the debt stayed up on the high level of 1918, and that saving more than takes care of the charges for serial bonds and sinking fund in the present year.

It is strongly suspected that Governor Allen will use the arguments based on such facts as these in the coming Gubernatorial campaign. The facts are undeniable, whatever may become of them as a political issue. A few years ago the present State expenditures would have been pronounced ridiculously extravagant, yet the State spends these sums without borrowing money by bond issues.

The trouble, of course, with any such arguments on the platform is that it is difficult to put them over. Of aspirants for the nomination at the hands of the Democrats there is one avowed candidate in the person of former Mayor of Boston John F. Fitzgerald. "Sweet Adeline" will go over big with the crowds, and yet it will require other blandishments to produce a sufficiency of votes for the ejection of Governor Allen. General Edward L. Logan is a probable candidate for the nomination, and former Mayor Andrew J. Peters is believed by many to be the most formidable man his party could run against the present Governor.

It may be, however, that the Governor has intimated a campaign purpose in his last message—prohibition. He emphasizes observance of law and denounces the idea of the repeal of the "Baby Volstead act" as an "open invitation and incentive to violate the law." Fitzy would probably insist on making prohibition a clear-cut issue. And Senator David I. Walsh is out with a definite statement that "it can't be done"; that is, that prohibition cannot be enforced.

Texas University Will Wait Ten Years for Observatory

AUSTIN, Texas (AP).—Because the president of the University of Texas would not be satisfied with a $900,000 astronomical observatory for his school, it will wait ten years before getting one.

W. J. McDonald left $1,000,000 for an observatory, but court contests over his will reduced the amount to $900,000. Then Harry Yandell Benedict, the university's astronomer-president, said that was not enough. He urged that the bequest be placed on interest.

Dr. Benedict was a student of astronomy under Asaph Hall, discoverer of the moons of Mars. For the last twenty-five years he has had a private observatory at his home.

NEW ATTICA PRISON TO COST $12,000,000

suggested a purpose to raise the standard of living for convicts somewhat above what millions of free and honest citizens ever attain for themselves. It appeared to imply a purpose to surpass all precedents in efforts to cure crime by kindness.

Will Accommodate 2,000.

On the other hand, the actual plans for the prison reveal that it is to be a veritable bastile. Its outer wall will be thirty feet high, as compared with eighteen to twenty-two feet in existing prisons. Paralleling the wall on the inside, at a distance of ten feet, will be a thirty-foot steel fence. Guard houses will be placed every few feet along the wall. There will be four separate cell blocks, permitting four classifications of prisoners. The more dangerous convicts thus can be segregated from the others. For these the exercise yard will be separated by a strong wall and fence from the blocks leading to the other exercise yards. Each cell block will be operated mechanically from a central point in the administration building, which cannot be reached by convicts. The corridors leading from one cell block to another will have heavy iron gates every few feet that can be locked from a central point in the administration building. The power house and industrial plant will be especially protected by a thirty-foot wall and a thirty-foot fence.

Apparently the Governor has been overruled or has revised a too-hasty opinion on the point of capacity, for it now is announced that the prison will accommodate 2,000 convicts. The effort to satisfy the two opposing theories in criminology, however, may be reflected in the fact that the estimates of the cost of the prison have risen from an original $7,200,000 to over $12,000,000.

At all events, this Attica prison is destined to represent the utmost rigor of immurement which stone walls and steel gates can provide, whatever welfare principles are applied to a man after he is inside. Moreover, the Attica prison already is affording an example of practical welfare treatment and relief for the overcrowding in other prisons, for cantonments are nearing completion where will be housed several hundred trusties who will be employed at grading and other labor in the construction work.

RAIN, HAIL AND SNOW DELIGHT CALIFORNIA

Los Angeles District Gets Wide Variety of Weather, but City's Climate Holds.

WATER SHORTAGE RELIEVED

Residents Revel in Unaccustomed Winter Sports—Police Board Would A-Censoring Co.

By CHAPIN HALL.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 21.—Well, it rained. Also it snowed, hailed and performed other tricks reminiscent of "back East." The long drought is ended and business breathes easier than it has in months. The first rain of the season in sufficient quantities to do any good immediately became not only first-page news but extras were actually issued detailing the extent of the storm and rainfall tables were revised every hour.

Thus weather is not only the main topic of conversation, but for a time it was almost the only subject to be discussed. Not in the casual Eastern way of making conversation but because the whole commercial and agricultural integrity of the community hinges upon an adequate water supply, and adequacy in this regard comes as a gift from the Pluvian gods.

The most interesting phase of the storm, however, was the reaction to the first snowfall of almost blizzard proportion to occur in years. Mountain roads within a few miles of Los Angeles were blocked and on one of the main arteries to the north and San Francisco several hundred automobilists were marooned until rescued by road crews with snow plows.

As soon as it became evident that the celebrated climate of Southern California had slipped a cog there was a mad rush on the part of an enthused populace for the snow field. Through a pouring rain in the lower levels thousands of automobilists dashed for the white clad hills and desert. Result—a series of most enticing traffic jams, for it was the evident purpose of every driver to get to the precious snow in nothing flat lest it take wings and fly away.

Storm None Too Soon.

The storm came in the nick of time, but did not prevent the Water Board from calling attention to a poetical suggestion somewhat to the effect that a single swallow does not make a Summer, or from issuing a warning against wastage. Southern California is growing so fast that it is a major problem to keep her water supply abreast of the demand pending the tapping of the Colorado River or the development of some other reservoir of large capacity.

Before leaving the subject of weather and its hold on the imagination it becomes advisable to square this report with the standardized outgivings of the Chamber of Commerce, the All Year Club and other national advertisers. No, it did not snow in downtown Los Angeles, and it was necessary to smudge for frost in the citrus region only a few nights. The snow was just far enough away to make a beautiful setting for the metropolis and the slope to the sea. No damage was done, and it remained possible to swim in the Pacific at noon and roll in a snow bank at 2 P. M., but, confidentally, the darned fool who tried it would have been a psychopathic candidiate.

Traces of Aboriginal Gang War.

That Southern California can produce just as satisfying archaeological specimens as Egypt or Mexico was demonstrated the other day when a steam shovel working near Carpenteria turned up a rich find of Stone Age articles of utility, including a stone fishline sinker, a large flint spearhead buried in the base of an aboriginal skull and a quartzite arrowhead found in the ribs of a skeleton. A portion of a three-edged stone drill was also turned up, together with many pieces of steatite, evidencing commerce with the channel islands.

From the shellwork beads and soapstone artifacts unearthed it is evident that the early denizens of this region were contemporaneous with the ancient channel islanders, who were notable for the delicacy of their shell carvings and inlay work. From the number of bodies found which showed evidences of violent deaths by spear, arrow or club, it is apparent that some warfare existed between this tribe and others on the mainland or islands.

Censorship Powers Wanted.

The Police Commission of Los Angeles has gone Boston, which is to say that the board recently broke down and confessed its desire to set up a censorship over all local theatres and to decide what the good people shall see and hear and what it would be improper for them to see or hear. This is really a bigger joke than those who, from lack of proximity, are able properly to appreciate. The cultural discriminatory powers of this highly political and extremely practical unit might be questioned by some, and the public fairly gasped when a resolution was introduced asking power over "all the theatres and other such places," whatever that may mean.

So broad are the powers the board craves that, under a strict legal interpretation of its proposed ordinances, it is doubtful whether a church might hold services without a permit or a concert be given by the Ladies' Aid Society. Los Angeles, in the main, demands and gets clean theatricals. In a few instances where the line has been overstepped revision ensued from the first drastic legal objection.

It is pretty generally agreed that theatre censorship is neither wanted nor needed here, nor does the Police Commission seem to require any additional duties. It is believed to be far too heavily burdened as it is for the capacity of its members. The greatest requirement of the city at present is a common sense of proportion in its government.

Alberta's Clinic Caravan Prepares to Start On Fourth Season of Good Work in Province

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

EDMONTON, Alberta. — The Alberta Government's traveling clinic, the only institution of its kind in the world, soon will be taking to the road for its fourth season. This motor caravan was organized to carry the benefits of modern surgery and dentistry to children in the sparsely settled farming areas of the Province, and last year, with a personnel of two doctors, two dentists and four nurses, it traveled from the southern border to the Peace River country in the north.

The clinic was devised by the Department of Public Health after its need was pointed out by district nurses who found that many children failed to receive urgently needed attention because of distance from hospitals and expense. It is partly self-supporting. Under the scheme of operation a community which wishes a clinic forms a local committee, secures the cooperation of at least ten school districts, and arranges dates with the Department of Health. Prior to the clinic's visit a public health nurse visits the schools in the district, makes a preliminary survey, and recommends those she feels needs attention to take advantage of the opportunity.

The first day of the clinic is given over to examinations, doctors and dentists looking for such ills as diseased tonsils, adenoids, heart and chest trouble, malnutrition and infected teeth. On the second day operations are performed. Families bring their own beds. Patients rest under supervision until the doctors decide they are well enough to go home, and it is a matter of pride to the clinic staff that never has a fatality followed an operation.

Last season forty-one clinics were held. Dr. R. T. Washburn, head of the establishment, made 4,413 examinations, performed 1,408 tonsil and adenoid operations, and 240 minor operations. The dental staff made 4,273 examinations, put in 1,150 fillings and extracted 2,775 teeth.

CHAIN STORES ISSUE IN THE SOUTHWEST

Texas Politicans in Particular Are Greatly Stirred by Spread of System.

INDEPENDENTS ORGANIZING

Group Plans "Militant Support" of Candidates Who Would Save Home Enterprises.

By IRWIN S. TAUBKIN.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DALLAS, Jan. 22.—The trust bugaboo, this time in the guise of the chain store, seems likely to cast its shadow across the political screen of the Southwest in this year's elections. However, the big stick which the chain stores and their business and industrial allies can shake at the campaigners will probably scare most of them into keeping their little wooden swords safely strapped to their sides and not attempting to stay the march of progress.

A movement which has appeared in Texas among independent retailers is probably the first in which they have been bound together in an avowedly political party. The independents are being formed into a group which boasts that it will enter the primaries with a strength of 75,000. The prime mover is H. G. Harcrow, executive secretary of the Official Food Distributers, an organization of independent grocers combating the chain stores by means of community advertising and cooperative buying. A mass meeting is to be called soon at which the independents, and not grocers alone, are to form permanently "in militant support of candidates for State offices who are favorable to the preservation of home-owned enterprises."

Tax System Proposed.

"Constructive thinkers over the State are fast realizing the harmful effects of chain stores," Mr. Harcrow explains, with the further complaint that the stores "are sending their profits to Northern and Eastern centres of finance. They leave the burden of charitable and civic organizations and that of municipal and county government on the shoulders of the people from whom they have taken their profits."

Manifestly, this is unjust, in the view of Mr. Harcrow and those of like opinion. Hence they demand that the independent merchants of the State join in a louder demand for legislation to force the chains to invest in Texas. As an alternative, they suggest that perhaps it would be just as effective to tax the chains on a scale so graduated that their growth would necessarily be checked.

For the present, until politicians have decided just how profitable or how dangerous this subject may be, they are about as worried over it as they are over the question of Hoovercrats being barred from the Democratic primaries. The newspapers have as yet been of no help to them, editorial comment waiting, apparently, until the independents reveal more of their plans. The lobbies of the chain stores and of the utilities are not outwardly perturbed. They feel that the movement will die aborning. But they cannot disguise their concern over what the psychological effect may be on the people, not only at the polls, but in their shopping, too.

General Stores Passing.

In Texas, as doubtless throughout the country, one is struck with the rapidity of urbanization. The general store in the small towns is fast disappearing. The only business, in truth, which remains in the smaller centres is the filling-station-hamburger-stand. Good roads and cheap automobiles have induced people to go to the larger towns, where the small stores have grown larger and the larger stores have become big.

The small retail stores are not the only ones to feel the chain store competition here. Dallas is a great wholesale distributing centre. It is the one Southwestern market, each year taking more business away from St. Louis, Chicago and New York. Last year its wholesale business was $831,500,000, and a billion-dollar year seems not far distant. But with the chain stores spreading over the State, receiving supplies from their own warehouses, themselves small markets, fed, perhaps, by their own factories—where is the wholesaler and his Dallas market to be let down?

The business men are thinking of these things, and talking about them. A few weeks ago Dallas saw several bank mergers, the largest ever to take place in the State, follow one another within a few days. This brought banking into open discussion all over the State. Dallas banks are reaching out and buying up the small banks in adjacent counties. Already in political council chambers there is talk of the branch banking proposition and the subject is bound to be tossed about in the open political arena before many more campaigns are waged.

SHOUSE HEARTENS KANSAS DEMOCRATS

Reconciles Elements of Party and Stirs Them to Thoughts of State Victory.

REPUBLICANS ARE WORRIED

Senatorial Situation Presents Complications—Anti-Reed Crowd Active.

By ROY BUCKINGHAM.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 22.—Kansas Republicans expected Jouett Shouse, executive committee chairman of the National Democratic Committee, to come to that State with the customary Jeffersonian appeal made up of brave utterances and visions of hope, but they hardly expected the former Kansas Representative in Congress to raise his party's morale to such an extent that the Democrats are talking about electing a United States Senator and a Governor.

But this is the accomplishment of Mr. Shouse to date. Although he says "bean" for been," he talks the Kansas language, plays Kansas politics and in his two addresses in the State recently spread so much harmony talk that even the Hoover Democrats are trooping back into the fold. In the Third and Seventh Districts he departed from his set speech to say that the past should be forgotten, that the Democratic party is a party of the future and that its program is not built to serve one person.

Of course Democrats in Kansas are in the minority and for the party to achieve success except in county and State elections a split in the Republican ranks will be necessary. The more hopeful Democrats, however, point out that this is likely with the cleavage between the Reed-Allen and Old Guard Republicans growing wider. Also they say the Shouse appeal to the Wilson Democrats is good politics.

See Tammany Influence Gone.

The interpretation placed on Mr. Shouse's address by many Democrats is that the Tammany influence has departed from the party. This will draw all of the Hoover Democrats and Wilson Republicans into the fold, and there are more of the latter than one would expect. The suave Mr. Shouse neatly forestalled Republican credit for the successful outcome of the London conference, if it should turn out that way, when he predicted President Hoover and his party would point to peace as an achievement of the administration. Mr. Shouse said that favorable results at London would reflect the Versailles efforts of the late President Wilson. In every address the mention of Mr. Wilson brought the Democrats to their feet.

The Democrats, however, are not stopping at emotional display. They are trying to reduce district jealousies and unite behind the ablest men in the State. The outstanding Democrat in Kansas, so far as overcoming Republican opposition is concerned, is Representative W. A. Ayres of the home district of Senator Henry J. Allen. Although much mention has been made of Dudley Doolittle of Strong City, national committeeman, for United States Senator, Mr. Ayres may get the call. He is the ablest campaigner in the party, a lawyer with a State-wide reputation, and a quiet worker of the Arthur Capper type.

While the Democrats tighten their belts and screw up their courage, the anti-Reed Republicans this week finally got back of a candidate for Governor. He is Frank Haucke of Council Grove, who has been the moving spirit of the organized opposition to Governor Reed and is expected to make a play for the Legion vote. The Wichita Eagle, unfriendly to both Reed and Allen, played up the announcement, and observers say this means that Victor Murdock, former Congressman, who was thought to have his eye on the Governorship, will get into the Kansas fight. They predict a battle royal.

The chief worry of the Republicans is the Senatorial situation. The powerful Farm Bureau and the Farmers' Union are said not be elated over Henry J. Allen. While W. H. Sproul continues to be mentioned as a primary candidate against Allen, Representative Homer Hoch and Ralph Snyder, president of the State Farm Bureau, are more likely to make the race, and either has a better chance to make it interesting for Mr. Allen than has Mr. Sproul, whose candidacy is said to be the fruit of a Wells-Reed feud. Mr. Wells is a Third District editor and the foe of Governor Reed. Friends of Senator Allen see a walk-away if he runs against two or three opponents, because the Wichita man can more than hold his own in any campaign. Should the Republicans, however, name a weak candidate for this office, Mr. Shouse's prediction might come true.

CANADA VIEWS 1930 AS FULL OF PROMISE

Prosperity of the Dominion Due Largely to State of Mind, Banker Declares.

GREAT EXPANSION PLANNED

Half of Billion-Dollar Program to Be Undertaken This Year—Brokers Under Scrutiny.

By V. M. KIPP.
Editorial Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

OTTAWA, Jan. 22.—The new year has been launched with the blessing of the big Canadian bankers and business men. Many of the great banks, insurance companies, trust corporations and commercial institutions have held their annual meetings during the last two weeks, and without exception their reports express perfect confidence that 1930 would be an average year, and possibly a good deal better than that. All of them pointed with great pride to the accomplishments of last year, and the bankers found reason for satisfaction even in the collapse of the stock market, despite the loss it brought to individuals.

Sir Thomas White, a former Federal Minister of Finance and a safe and cautious banker, seems to have expressed the general sentiment when he said that with opportunities such as were provided in Canada prosperity was "largely dependent upon a state of mind." Obviously, it has been the desire of the nation's financial leaders to overcome, by the presentation of a convincing case for optimism, whatever doubts might have been created by the debacle among the market speculators, and there is reason to believe that a state of mind favorable to continued expansion now may be counted upon as an assured foundation for the business structure of 1930.

Only Two Unfavorable Factors.

In all the reviews of last year there was evidence of only two factors which disturbed general prosperity and the march to new records, and both of these factors are by way of being overcome. The short Western wheat crop, and then the policy of the pool management which temporarily held that crop out of the market, had a severe and inevitable effect on the transportation companies and their associated interests. The pool expresses the conviction that events are justifying its policy, that before many months the wheat will be sold at profitable prices, and then its golden stream of wage and profit will flow across the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The other influence, of course, was the stock market. It is interesting to have the opinion of Sir Thomas White that the scale of losses from this cause proportionately was less in Canada than in the United States; and his further opinion that the adverse effect on the luxury trades of a falling market had been much less marked than was anticipated and would be but temporary.

There is abundant reason for a thorough-going optimism. A careful estimate of work planned in major mining properties, construction of business buildings of all kinds, hydroelectric development, railway and industrial expansion and road-building places the cost at more than $1,000,000,000, of which at least half is certain to be undertaken this year. This excludes many of the classes of construction which last year went into contracts awarded in Canada to the extent of $576,000,000. Development of natural resources is proceeding on a scale never before experienced. A mineral production of more than $300,000,000 in 1929 is higher than ever before. Lumbering, the fisheries and agriculture all are in a healthy state.

Industrial expansion has kept pace with the exploitation of natural resources. Canada stands seventh among the nations in the value of manufactured products, with an estimated value in 1929 of almost $4,000,000,000. Foreign trade is increasing, although imports have a tendency to rise faster than exports. Foreign investments in the Dominion have gone beyond $6,0000,000,000, of which 59 per cent is from the United States. Canada now has available for tourists nearly 400,000 miles of roads, improved and unimproved; but of more interest to a traveling generation is the fact that 60,000 of these miles have been surfaced either with gravel or some kind of paving material. Canadian newsprint mills last year produced 2,728,827 tons, a substantial increase over the 1928 total of 2,381,102 tons. Production was more than double that of the United States for the same period, and was about 63 per cent of the total for all of North America.

Brokers Under Scrutiny.

Provincial governments in the Dominion are giving very serious study to the operations of stock brokerage firms, particularly those dealing heavily in mining and oil securities, and in Ontario, at least, the question of whether investors get an "even break" promises to become a political issue. W. E. N. Sinclair, Liberal leader in the Legislature, has come out with a demand for a royal commission to conduct a sweeping investigation into the whole situation, and he is likely to press his case when the House meets next month. He declares action should be taken as a measure to relieve public uneasiness, and of course blames the Ontario Government for not having done something about it, pointing with approval to the course of the Alberta Government in launching criminal prosecutions against the heads of an important brokerage firm with national connections, alleging among other things that it has been "bucketing" orders.

Mr. Sinclair will not get his royal commission, as the government takes the attitude that its own auditors and investigators can achieve every desirable purpose without the publicity of a public inquiry. In pursuance of that policy, agents of the Attorney General's department have been working quietly in various centres, considering the methods of brokers and hearing such complaints as were forthcoming from speculative persons who thought they had been badly treated, and as a result making orders disguised as suggestions for the better conduct of business. The Ontario Government takes the ground that in the absence of definite criminal intent it would be folly to endanger the accounts of the public by public embarrassment of brokerage houses which might force them into financial difficulties, and in a broad way this is the policy favored by the governments of sister Provinces.

The public has shown intense interest in the situation and in the meantime is leaving the market largely to the brokers themselves. It is the interest of the outsider looking in, because the lesson of last Fall has not yet lost its effectiveness.

Keeper of New Bedford Light Of Third Generation at Post

WASHINGTON (AP).—If the United States happened to be a monarchy instead of a republic, C. A. Baker of New Bedford, Mass., would be invested with the title of "hereditary keeper of the light," or something equally distinctive.

He, his father before him, and his grandfather before his father, have been keepers of a single lighthouse station off the New Bedford harbor for fifty-nine years in unbroken succession.

The first Baker took charge of the light in 1872. He died in 1879, and was replaced by his son, A. C. Baker.

C. A. Baker was appointed in 1898 to assist in keeping the light burning, and succeeded in charge when his father died in 1911.

PROHIBITION WIDENS CITY-COUNTRY SPLIT

party ticket. Let them nominate a wet or a moderately dry candidate and they will face a dry revolt and a third ticket which will make a strong bid for the vote in rural sections of the State, without which no Republican candidate can emerge victorious from an election.

Recent election figures give a strong indication of how the prohibition issue has affected the vote in the cities throughout the State.

Prohibition went into effect in 1920. Of the cities up-State, of which a large majority normally are Republican, the Democrats, with Alfred E. Smith, who was wringing wet and by no means a popular idol with the people of that section, as their candidate for Governor against Nathan L. Miller, who had affixed his signature to the State enforcement act, which was repealed in 1923, carried 43 against 16 carried by the Republicans.

Politically 1922 was an "off-year," with no candidate for President in the running and no national issues to complicate the campaign. Undoubtedly there were contributory causes for the bad run made by Governor Miller in the cities. He was not a popular candidate even with the voters of his own party.

But neither was Ogden L. Mills, now Under-Secretary of the United States Treasury, who was the Republican candidate for Governor in 1926, the next "off-year," also against Governor Smith. Mr. Mills was known as a wet Republican. With a dry uprising, which cost the Republicans in round numbers 230,000 votes against James W. Wadsworth Jr., who as candidate for United States Senator was his principal running mate, and with prohibition an outstanding issue, Mr. Mills carried 31 of the up-State cities to 29 carried by the wetter Democrats.

His vote exceeded that of the dry Miller in 1922 by approximately 265,000 and the wet Wadsworth, with almost 232,000 votes polled by former State Senator Franklin W. Christman, whom the drys placed in the field to defeat him, although a loser, ran only 71,000 votes behind Mr. Mills.

RESCUE COMMITTEE CHICAGO'S BEST HOPE

quist will be candidate of the Business Men's Republican organization for president of the County Board, and that Alderman Albert will contest the nomination with him as the Deneen candidate. Mr. Lonnquist is a real estate man. The Alderman is the youngest member of the City Council, a former newsboy who has advanced himself by diligence and gained a reputation for fighting independence.

The Deneen faction of the Republican party is now the only faction which shows any signs of knowing what it wants to do. The Snow-Barrett-Harding-Brundage group has broken into as many parts as it has leaders. Snow sticks with the city hall. Barrett, who wants to be Mayor and fears "Big Bill" may block his way, has quit the combination on that issue. Harding, as County Treasurer, has his problems and seems to be plowing a lone furrow. Brundage shot his wad in the judiciary election, and is not now much of a factor. There are rumblings of dissension in the Democratic camp. Rumor says the leaders want to get rid of County Judge Jarecki and will not renominate him. He is the best County Judge Cook County has had in many years, according to the opinion of fair-minded men of both parties, and it is believed the effort to dislodge him, if made, will occasion no small rumpus.

Ruth Hanna McCormick, candidate for the Republican Senatorial nomination against Senator Deneen, is campaigning down-State and getting as good a hearing as the inclement weather will permit. She is making her chief attack on the World Court. The Senator is held in Washington by committee work on the tariff, so that for the moment his woman rival has things all her own way. Former Senator James Hamilton Lewis is counted on as the Democratic nominee without primary opposition.

SEES ALL AMERICA SPEAKING SPANISH

Panama Editor Predicts Growth of Population Will Force Move to South America.

SETS LIMIT OF 30 YEARS

Views Our Increased Interest in Language as Realization of Necessity.

By C. H. CALHOUN.
Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COLON, Panama, Jan. 14.—A race between the English and Spanish languages to determine which shall predominate in the Americas is predicted by the editor of The Caribbean Press here in commenting on the interest in Spanish in the United States as shown by the ever-growing number of schools and colleges in which the language is taught. The editorial says:

"The time may be envisioned, and that not so far distant either, when the Western Hemisphere will see a race for supremacy between the English and Spanish languages, with the chance about 10 to 1 that Spanish will win out. This statement is deduced from the fact that there are only two large English-speaking countries in the Western Hemisphere—the United States and Canada. The Dominion, due probably to its rigorous climate, grows in population but slowly, notwithstanding the development of recent years in its Western Provinces. There is no reason to suppose a more rapid increase in the future. The United States may find itself in the same position as Japan, with a population so large that it must seek an outlet elsewhere, but this problem, however, is one that a good many future generations will not have to worry about.

Population Is Increasing.

"On the other hand the vast sparsely-populated countries of South America will afford for many centuries to come a haven to the overcrowded nations of the Old World. Yet, even so, the population in the South American republics is increasing at a rapid rate, and with it the expansion of the mother tongue, which, with the exception of Brazil and the Guianas, is Spanish. For the sake of the argument, it is estimated that English-speaking people in the Western Hemisphere number about 128,000,000 while the Spanish-speaking people inhabiting Latin-American countries, and those in Cuba and Porto Rico, number very close to 100,000,000. Due to the closing of the door to unlimited immigration into the United States, the growth in population in the great republic of the North is now confined to the natural increase, which superimposes year by year, plus such immigrants as are permitted to come in under the quota law. There is a possible 30,000,000 majority still to overcome before Spanish moves to the front but the writer ventures to predict that this will come to pass within the next thirty years. The present rate of increase in the Spanish-speaking countries is about 3,000,000 per year, as against 2,000,000 in the English-speaking countries of the Western Hemisphere.

"The mortality among children is much greater in the Latin-American countries than it is in the English-speaking ones, or there would be a much greater natural increase than is now the case. Gradually, however, more interest is steadily being shown in the feeding and care of infants through the establishment of free clinics, and where this interest has been shown the results have been gratifying. It is estimated that 500,000 children die in Latin America yearly through malnutrition, lack of medical attention and parental ignorance.

"No wonder, is it, that even small communities in the States are awakened to the importance of the first language introduced into the New World, and which is destined to be its most widely spoken?"

MARSEILLES BARED AS CRIME CENTRE

French, Who Are Shocked by Conditions Here, Uncover a "Chicago" of Their Own.

INDICATIVE OF WIDE TREND

75 Prisons Throughout the Country Closed for Economy to Reopen—Naval Parley Holds Public.

By CARLISLE MacDONALD.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 23.—A prominent European police official said recently that every country had its own Chicago, whereby he meant that America was not alone in the possession of a city where vice and crime, organized with a certain amount of modern efficiency, have proved too big a problem for the police and the other forces of law and order. He might have had in mind the French seaport City of Marseilles, where a recent investigation by a Paris newspaper disclosed a state of affairs very similar to that in the Illinois metropolis.

To peope in Paris and other French cities the disclosures came as a shock and a surprise, for your average Frenchman will loudly insist that there is nothing in the world to compare with American crime conditions.

It was found that a strong alliance between politics and crime, with the inevitable immunity for the criminal, had long been effective in Marseilles, to the utter helplessness or perhaps indifference of the police. However, since all the police of the nation are ultimately under the Ministry of the Interior, inquiries have been begun and it will not be surprising if Marseilles soon boasts a new set of police officials.

As in the case of American cities, there have been many arrests but few convictions, and those who have been found guilty have proved to be the tools of higher-ups, thereby leaving the problem as far from a solution as ever.

Being a seaport city, Marseilles has more than its rightful share of bars, 2,000 to be exact, and it was discovered that 400 of these were rendezvous for the "Nervis" or gangsters, who themselves number about 3,000. That they have been active in the pursuit of their various criminal ways can be seen when it is realized that the population of 650,000 has been in a more or less constant state of uneasiness if not of actual fear.

A Nation-Wide Crime Wave.

The Marseilles situation, while a glaring example, is nevertheless indicative of what may be called a nation-wide crime wave. The Ministry of Justice, for example, has just announced that seventy-five prisons in various parts of the country which were closed in 1926 as a measure of economy will soon be reopened. Altogether 200 were shut at that time. It is true that many of these institutions contained ten or even fewer inmates, but no explanation has been given for reopening the prisons other than the general impression that crime is rapidly increasing.

It cannot be doubted that murders and injury done by firearms to ordinary citizens are increasing at an alarming rate. According to one newspaper forty-five women are now awaiting trial in the Department of the Seine for killing their husbands and their sweethearts, and hardly a day passes without at least one of these "crimes of passion," the title whereby the French dignify these events.

Everybody admits that the trouble is caused by the freedom with which any one can purchase firearms, but whenever a Deputy brings in a bill to regulate their sale it is always thrown out on the ground that it will ruin the gunsmiths.

France's Eyes on London.

The French public, which at first was inclined to give scant thought to the London Naval Arms Conference, is now fully alive to the great issues at stake. It is realized that upon the ability and courage of the French delegates depends in large measure the whole future of the status of France on the high seas.

Having been painstakingly informed by the Parisian and provincial press of the reasons for the French naval position, nearly all Frenchmen have rallied to the thesis which Premier Tardieu is defending in the British capital: That France should build and maintain a navy worthy of the important rôle the nation is playing in world affairs as well as one that will insure the safety and integrity of what Nationalist writers call "the French Empire," is an assertion of principle upon which the leaders of nearly all shades of political thought have found a common basis of understanding.

The experience and subsequent humiliation of the Washington conference still rankles in the minds of those who follow closely the trend of world events, and Frenchmen are depending upon M Tardieu and the exceptionally strong group of negotiators with him to re-establish the dignity of France in naval affairs even to the point of saying an emphatic "No!"

As to the conference itself, few Frenchmen, it must be admitted, regard it through other than skeptical eyes. While the original suspicion that the real purpose was to create an Anglo-American sea entente to dominate the world has been somewhat modified by later events, those persons who have to do largely with molding public opinion have had trouble impressing upon Frenchmen the necessity of looking below the surface for the real aims of the London meeting.

A successful issue of the negotiations will, of course, be welcomed here as well as in other countries, provided, however, that it takes into account the requirements of modern France. On the other hand, failure in London will almost certainly cause an acceleration of the present French naval building program.

How the Casinos Fared.

Reports from Riviera resorts that the devotees of gambling are being much more economical in their bets, due to stock market losses, and a general feeling that one must be careful in the present current of business, are interesting in connection with gambling figures for the year just concluded. Last year the 166 registered casinos of France made $17,000,000 from the gamblers, of which the French Treasury collected $11,000,000.

Deauville, famous for high stakes and venturesome play, surprisingly comes only third on the list of the principal casino winners, both Le Touquet and Cannes being ahead in the order named. Monte Carlo does not appear in the French list, being outside the jurisdiction of the country, but it is understood that this gambling factory netted just under $3,000,000.

Nice seems to be the favorite gathering place for the worshipers of chance this year. Frank Jay Gould, the American millionaire who recently constructed one of the most beautiful casinos in the world, to which he has given the name, "Palais de la Mediterranée," has attracted to Nice an enthusiastic gambling crowd from all corners of the world, and the indications are that the Gould casino will be the first one in France to make 100,000,000 francs ($4,000,000) in a single year.

In its first month Mr. Gould's Palais earned nearly $500,000. There are six other casinos in Nice and the combined profits of the seven last year were nearly $3,000,000. Cannes, with three casinos, took $2,500,000 from the gamblers, mainly British and American.

One startling feature of the play was the fact that 5,000,000 decks of cards were used.

Protecting Pedestrians.

Every pedestrian is to be his own traffic cop under a new system soon to be introduced in Paris as a measure of further security for the hard-pressed tribe of men and women who are forced to walk.

Signal lights will be installed on numerous street corners. The pedestrian will arrive at the curb, look upon the street traffic and nonchalantly press a button. This will release a light which is, theoretically, at least, supposed to halt traffic for fifteen seconds. The temptation for long-desired revenge will, it is feared, prove too strong to insure the smooth working of the experiment.

Clerk Falls Three Stories In His Dreamland Elevator

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Dec. 30.—Dreaming he was an elevator operator, Lorival Freitas, a bank clerk, stepped through his open bedroom window, crashed through a skylight and awoke three floors below with only slight injuries.

Freitas said that he awoke almost every night to find himself in the middle of his room. This night he dreamed he was running an elevator which started down of its own accord. He dove through what he supposed was the door to get at the controls. He is in hopes that the fall will cure him of sleep walking.

SEA TAKES HEAVY TOLL OF BRITISH TERRITORY

Millions of Tons of Chalk Cliff and Sandy Headland Lost Annually by Erosion.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Kingston-on-Spey, the old Scottish village menaced by sea and river, adds another to the considerable number of places along the coast where Britain is constantly falling victim to erosion.

Every gale that lashes the sea against white chalk cliffs and sandy headlands topples more tons into the sea. Millions of tons are known to have disappeared in the course of a short time.

It is as yet difficult to estimate what this Winter's monetary loss has been. The government's bill for coast protection, for example, is based upon information gained by a royal commission established nineteen years ago. But more than thirty local authorities have recently combined to urge the government to action in the matter. Of these, many have applied for assistance in carrying out sea defense schemes involving large expenditures.

In the thirty-five years preceding 1911 it is said that England lost 6,000 acres, and while it is also true that during that time the sea surrendered 48,000 acres in return, there seems to be no adequate reason why acreage should continue to be lost.

The most serious erosion continues for forty miles between Flamborough Head and Spurn Point, Yorkshire. Twelve towns and villages have disappeared there. Near Dunwich, Suffolk—a city that had fifty-two churches, a royal palace and mint, now lying fathoms deep in the sea—170 acres were lost in seventy years prior to 1906.

TURKISH DOCTORS WORRY.

Physicians May Lose Their Titles to Other Professions.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 8.—Whether the title of doctor should be reserved for lawyers, philosophers, political economists and like professions is agitating Turkish medical circles. Now that the country is to have a Latin dictionary the question arises as to the proper appellation of physicians; should they be known as "hekims" (medicos) or "doctors"?

"How come?" asks one leader of his profession. "You can't say to a physician, 'You aren't a doctor, but a medico.' "

"No," admit the hekim faction, "but how are you going to separate medical men from all of the other holders of the doctorate?"

The Dictionary Commission is still pondering.

Austria Adds to Dog Restrictions.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Jan. 3.—Austria, which already is known as an "anti-dog" country owing to a permanent muzzling order and many other restrictions on dogs in Vienna, is adding to its reputation in this line. The Carinthian Diet has declared war on Alsatians, Dobermanns and Airedales. These breeds have been classified as "game-tearing" dogs, a term which is also to include "any breed which from its strength or racial character might be dangerous to human beings, cattle or game." Owners of such dogs must keep them chained up, and may take them out only when muzzled and on a leash.

IRELAND ENDS WEEK OF HONORING NUNCIO

His Reception Is Final Act in Catholic Emancipation in the Free State.

WRITERS AT ODDS ON ART

Literary Brickbats Exchanged by Ae and Sean O'Casey on Moderns—Sir John Lavery Honored.

By M. G. PALMER.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DUBLIN, Jan. 23.—The week's festivities to celebrate the arrival of Archbishop Paschal Robinson, the Pope's diplomatic representative in the Irish Free State, closed with the presentation of the freedom of Kilkenny City.

It is Kilkenny's distinction in Irish history that three centuries ago it was for a brief time the national capital, and the Confederate Parliament which met inside its gates in 1645 was presided over by Mgr. Rinuccini, the Papal Nuncio. It was, therefore, only fitting that Kilkenny should pay tribute to the Pope's first envoy since those unhappy days of religious strife, more particularly as the appointment of the Nuncio was the final act in the long drama of Catholic emancipation in Ireland.

Although it is true that the Constitution of the Free State forbids a State church, it cannot be gainsaid that this is a decidedly Catholic country, in which the Catholic hierarchy may be expected to exert a powerful, if not increasing, influence in national affairs. It is clearly for the general good that a diplomat like Dr. Robinson, who is a man of the world, possessing a statesmanlike outlook, should represent the Vatican and exercise its authority, not only in the Southern counties but in Ireland as a whole.

Battle of Letters Rages.

A lively encounter between Sean O'Casey and George Russell (AE) in the columns of The Irish Statesman has provided some entertainment for Dublin literary circles, which, truth to tell, have been painfully dull for a long time back. It is not generally known that O'Casey is as keen on pictures as drama, and struck some shrewd blows in the crusade to assure the return to Dublin of the Lane collection from the British national gallery. AE is, of course, a painter as well as a critic of painting, but in neither capacity is his work acceptable to a section of younger men, who insist that his preference for Corot as compared with the moderns like Cézanne and Matisse, definitely labels him as a reactionary.

It was as champion of this group that O'Casey, whirling a blackthorn, swooped down with a wild warwhoop upon "the Polonius of literary and art circles in Dublin."

Unfortunately for his cause, O'Casey made the mistake of hanging everything on a statement by AE which he interpreted as a declaration that photography could be a great art and he insisted that, by recommending to his readers in one issue of The Irish Statesman they surround themselves with reproductions of masterpieces, and in another by praising the Japanese practice of displaying one picture at a time, the editor revealed "that his emotional and intellectual experience in painting is very limited indeed."

Retort Quick and Fiery.

Whatever AE's limitations in the field of painting may be, he is a formidable literary controversialist for O'Casey, and he had no difficulty in showing that the apparent contradiction in his statements was simply an expression of different moods. This argument he supported by appeals to Blake, Emerson, Whitman and Eddington—names which had the effect on the dramatist of a red rag on a bull. Ultimately he told O'Casey that, since he was obviously incapable of understanding the articles in the Irish Statesman, he ought to try his teeth on stuff better suited to his intellectual capacity, and declined to publish a reply on the ground that it was "a rigmarole of repetitions that would weary his readers."

O'Casey has now got the Republican organ, "An Phoblacht" to reprint the suppressed letter, with the addendum that whereas "Lady Gregory has said that AE hides his mystical light in a turnip, the fact is that AE hides a turnip in his mystical light."

Belfast Honors Artist.

Sir John Lavery, the distinguished artist, is to be honored soon with the freedom of Belfast in recognition of his munificent gift of $150,000 worth of his own paintings to the new art gallery, where the pictures are hung in the special Lavery room.

Although Sir John lives in London, when fame came to him he never forgot his native city of Belfast, which harbored him when he was practically a waif. When he was but 2 years old the ship in which his father was emigrating to America was wrecked and all the passengers lost. The little orphan was befriended by Belfast folk, and today ranks among the most eminent of the world's painters.

It was Sir John who designed the Free State's new bank-notes, choosing his wife as model for the Irish colleen's head which appears on one. Lady Lavery is an American of singular beauty.

A view of the Wicklow Hills embodied in the design of another of the bank-notes was drawn from the garden of a lovely cottage overlooking Dublin Bay owned by Lennox Robinson, the Abbey Theatre dramatist.

Belfast is noted for the meticulous care with which it selects its freemen. Among the chosen few on the roll of honor appear the names of two distinguished Americans, Whitelaw Reid and Andrew Carnegie. Sir John Lavery is not only the first artist but the first Catholic to be so honored.

Incidentally, the Lord Mayor of Belfast, Sir William Coates, intends to converse by telephone with Mayor Walker of New York on Jan. 29, when the northern capital celebrates the introduction of the new city telephone service. Sir William will take the opportunity to interlard appropriate compliments with an eloquent plea for American support of the vanishing Irish linen industry.

Parents Recover Children Stolen by Gypsies Years Ago, Only to Have One Abducted Again

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SOFIA, Jan. 3.—A romantic recovery by the parents of two children stolen by gypsies is reported from a Sofia suburb. Seven years ago, the parents, who were then small farmers in Dolna-Banja, missed their 3-year-old daughter and 2-year-old son. There was no doubt that gypsies had stolen them.

Two days ago, a gypsy caravan halted outside the chandler's shop in Sofia which the bereaved parents are now keeping. The mother, who had never abandoned the hope of recovering her children, saw two children of about ten years of age playing on the floor of a car. A tiny scar on the face of one of them convinced her that it was her long lost daughter; the other was her little son. The gypsies admitted the crime, but were allowed to go free.

There was a sequel. Under the pretense of apologizing, the gypsies a few days later tried to get one of the children back for a time, saying they could not live without them. Suddenly the male gypsy drew his knife, stabbed the father, picked up the boy and ran. Outside the gate he jumped into a waiting automobile and drove off.

The little girl and the mother succeeded in holding the gypsy woman until police arrived and arrested her, but the boy has not yet been recovered.

TURKISH BEAUTIES COMPETE AT BALL

Girls, Free From Old Seclusion, Stand on Table for Election as 'Queen' and Trip to France.

WEAR GOWNS FROM PARIS

All Favor Long Skirt Fashion—Despite Cheers of Partisans Crowd Proves Critical.

By J. W. COLLINS.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 23.—Sultans, hodjas, the old Turkish pashas and princes would have rubbed their eyes with astonishment and amazement if they had been present at the beauty ball organized by the newspaper La République and held at a fashionable Russian restaurant in Pera the other day.

Gone are the days when Turkish women led secluded and sheltered lives, and the scenes at the beauty ball were reminiscent of what used to happen at similar fêtes in Paris, London and New York. Thousands of persons were present and the restaurant was crowded almost to suffocation.

The competition was open to all unmarried Turkish girls between the ages of 16 and 25. More than one hundred entries were made from all over the country.

At midnight the competitors, each wearing a cardboard ticket with a number, walked in procession round the ballroom to the sound of martial music. Some of the girls were attired in expensive gowns brought specially from Paris, though foreign dressmakers established in Constantinople had created many of the robes. One or two girls wore striking headdresses, while others had their hair curled in bizarre fashion. All, it was noticed, favored the long skirt. After the procession the competitors were filmed and each beauty aspirant had a close-up taken.

Audience Was Critical.

Then came the most exciting part of the evening. One by one the candidates were hoisted onto a small table, while the cards bearing their numbers were waved in the air. This was the signal for a wild outburst of cheering on the part of the friends and relatives of the girls. These partisans exerted themselves in order that their nominee might obtain the most applause.

The audience showed a critical tendency and a few girls who were thought lacking in the necessary charms met with frigid receptions, interrupted by occasional catcalls.

When all the competitors had made their bow to the public the latter received voting cards and were asked to write down in order of beauty the numbers of the first twenty candidates. In a day's time these twenty will appear before a special jury consisting of thirty men and ten women. The Turkish beauty queen for 1930 will then be chosen and she will proceed to Paris in order to take part in the European beauty competition.

The newspaper La Republique will pay all her expenses, and, it is said, the Argentinian paper La Nacion will invite her to visit Buenos Aires.

The only unfortunate thing about the competition is that many Turkish girls renowned for their beauty were not eager to participate or else were restrained by their parents from doing so.

Pretty as some of the candidates were, it is hardly thought they represent all that is best in Turkish women, who are, of course, renowned for their good looks.

VIENNA HEADWAITERS ESTABLISH A BLACKLIST

Tired of Financing Slow-Paying Patrons, They Establish Their Own Credit Exchange.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Jan. 13.—The headwaiters of Vienna's famous coffee houses, tired of financing indefinitely a long list of patrons with bad memories but good appetites, have instituted a blacklist. On the first Friday of each month they will exchange particulars about their non-paying guests. Patrons who presume on a too-long-extended credit in future are likely to find "Pay or go away" the only alternative.

To be banned from his favorite café means, to a Viennese, what to be excommunicated from his church meant to his ancestor in the Middle Ages. It is his address, his rendezvous, his workroom, business office, cardroom and chess club. He also eats there, whether he has money or not. The system is something like this:

"Joseph, what makes there out? Rostbraten, gemischter salat, drei brot, ein Emmenthaler, ein Mokka, zigaretten—5 schillings 20 groschen, that means 6. Give me 4 schillings and you'll get 10 tomorrow."

And the long-suffering Joseph performs the operation known to headwaiters as "hanging up a jacket" or "slipping a prince," which means inserting in a special compartment in his roomy leather pocketbook a slip inscribed with the patron's name and indebtedness.

Not all those who eat and forget are immortal only among headwaiters. It is on record how in the Zentral Kaffeehaus during the war a certain guest drank coffee and played chess until one day, after an interesting opening with king's pawn gambit against bishop and knight he disappeared—to conclude the game on the broad chessboard of Russia. He was Leon Trotsky, about whom it is claimed in the Zentral that in his haste to join the revolution he forgot to pay for his last Mocha. Another headwaiter occasionally produces for the edification of special customers a slip inscribed with the name Vladimir Ilitch Lenin, who is also debited thereon with a "schwarzen."

But that, perhaps, is nothing against Messrs. Lenin and Trotsky, since in the course of his protest one headwaiter naïvely admitted that his best payers were professional criminals.

Making German Railroads Safer.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—The end of the year found about 2,000 miles of the German railroad system equipped with an electrical device which automatically applies the brakes to locomotives and coaches if a danger signal is passed. Fifty-three locomotives and 1,055 cars have been equipped with the device. More than 1,300 miles of track have been relaid with rails 94.4 feet long in place of the former 32-foot rails in order to reduce the number of jars and thus lessen the noise.

JOY IN THE BALKANS OVER HAGUE PARLEY

sential of their existence has fallen, readily persuade themselves that the loan itself is there. Tomorrow they will realize that it is not, and may then begin to grumble at whatever price they have had to pay for freedom from reparations of which they have not yet been told.

Doubts Voiced in Hungary.

In Hungary also voices are beginning here and there to question the value of Count Bethlen's great victory. Intensive propaganda kept up for a period of years has raised the optants' quarrels to a matter of national prestige. Hungarians have been brought to feel that the Rumanians are ill using their Hungarian brothers. The righteous indignation of many of them would have been less forceful had they realized that the whole agitation was to obtain greater wealth for a comparative handful of landlords who complained they had lost part of their vast properties.

So for the moment Hungary hails Count Bethlen's victory for Hungary's cause, even the Liberal Opposition fearing to speak out and shatter the business men's feeling that "Hungary's victory at The Hague" will somehow bring a loan nearer.

Only the Social Democratic newspaper Nepszava continues its merciless attacks on Hungary's champion, Count Bethlen. In an editorial yesterday it said that Count Bethlen, before leaving for The Hague, promised to "take the consequences and resign if any agreement was reached whereby the Hungarian taxpayer was committed, by camouflage or openly, to indemnifying the optants." This, says Nepszava, is precisely what has happened, and the people of Hungary are committed for an entire generation to contribute to the wealth of Count Karolyi, the owner of 50,000 acres; Count Andrassy, the owner of 34,000 acres; Count Zichy, the owner of 19,000 acres, &c.

Only 384 persons, writes Nepszava, are concerned in the whole optants dispute. Of them forty-two are counts and twelve are barons.

As far as Count Bethlen's personal position is concerned, of course, the words of the Socialists are simply "sound and fury, signifying nothing." The Hungarian Premier already has made it clear that expectations that he is about to resign and give place to a semi-Fascist dictatorship under Julius Gömbös, the Minister of Defense, are entirely unfounded.

Whether Count Bethlen's policy be approved or not, certainly the country is not likely to gain by the helm passing from his cool hand to that of the fiery former leader of the anti-Semites. But Hungary still has to get to the bottom of the mystery of the Hague settlements. It is semi-officially denied in Budapest that, while Hungary has assumed new burdens amounting to 87,000,000 gold crowns, the optants alone will obtain 240,000,000 gold crowns.

Dr. Maniu, the Premier of Rumania, despite Austrian and Hungarian shouts that they won the battle, declared that the Little Entente standpoint triumphed throughout, Dr. Benes of Czechoslovakia adding, however, that there was no victory and no vanquished.

Dr. Voyislav Marinkovitch, the Yugoslav Foreign Minister, declares, however, that the Little Entente standpoint was not accepted in its entirety. Yet even here is no admission of defeat, for he says that Hungary is the loser.

Fairy Godmother Somewhere.

Then who has put all of Central and Eastern Europe on the road to happiness? Unless one can believe that thrifty France turned spendthrift, that Fascist Italy decided to sacrifice her armaments program in order to add her mite to make the cup of Balkan—including Yugoslavian—happiness overflow or that Philip Snowden decided the British taxpayer was so rolling in wealth that he must be longing to dig up handsomely to bring the millennium to the Balkan peoples, one is forced to the conclusion that The Hague really found a philosopher's stone which transmutes the bearer's political passions to gold. If the charm really works Dr. Benes did not exaggerate in saying that The Hague provided the greatest readjustment in international relations since the Paris Peace Conference.

OLD TALES CLING TO HARJES CHATEAU

This American-Owned Building Is One of an Historic Trio in the French Riviera.

Opera Star Introduces Spanish Singer Who Has Won High Praise From Paris Musicians.

By MAY BIRKHEAD.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Jan. 23.—Historical interest in certain French châteaux does not always depend on their size and antiquity.

Take as an example the château known as Abondant. This interesting Louis XIII structure, with its handsome parlor, acquired some years ago by an American, the late Colonel Herman H. Harjes, now owned by his widow, lies astern of the edge of the forest of Dreux and forms a château triangle with two neighbors, the Château of Anet, one of the most superbly historic in France, built by Henri II for Diane de Poitiers, and the Château St. George, also owned by an American, Mme. Jacques Balsan, formerly Consuelo Vanderbilt.

The chatelaine of the latter magnificent edifice uses as a guest chamber the storied room where Henri IV spent the night before the Battle of Ivry.

This region is redolent with striking souvenirs. A short distance from these châteaux is the Church of Tilly, which now holds the remains of Admiral de Grasse, one of the heroes of Yorktown, and here Napoleon bestowed upon Josephine after their divorce property near Dreux, while in this vicinity once lived the celebrated Ninon de l'Enclos.

Early History Vague.

Although data as to the early owners of the Château Abondant of the Harjes estate are somewhat scanty, the château with its grounds changed hands in the time of Henri IV., and in the next generation Cardinal Richelieu advised the beautiful and much married chatelaine not to let slip at the age of 18 a chance to wed a rich and highly decrepit octogenarian.

At the end of Louis XIV's reign and during the Regency the family of Du Bouchet de Sourches, high in royal favor, transformed the original edifice into a spacious regence structure with individual decorations in each room, thus softening the austerity of the Louis XIII interiors.

One of this family, who took the name of Marquis de Tourzel, who continued to perform, like his forebears, the office of Grand Provost of France, was hurled so violently against a tree by a horse that he succumbed at Fontainebleu in 1786. Curiously enough, the elder daughter of Mr. Harjes several years ago met death on this property in exactly the same manner.

Soon after the Marquis of Tourzel's fatal accident his widow became the governess of Marie Antoinette's children and accompanied them in the desperate flight from the Tuileries, which ended ignominiously in the arrest of the royal party at Vincennes. Almost by miracle she escaped the guillotine, and was ordered to withdraw to the Chateau Abondant, where she was kept under surveillance. Undoubtedly her presence there saved the property from pillage and confiscation.

Her grandson married into the ancient de Crussol family of Uzes. Abondant passed eventually to the Duchess de Vallombrosa, from which family it was acquired by Colonel Harjes.

Marie Harjes, daughter of the Colonel by his first wife, has just become the bride of R. W. Curtis, son of the late Ralph Curtis.

The ceremony was a fashionable affair at the American Church of the Holy Trinity and was attended by many Americans. The bride was given away by her uncle, Andrew Graves.

Young Mr. Curtis spends much time with his mother, whose property, the Villa Silver, well known in the Riviera and not far from the James Gordon Bennett villa. The late Ralph Curtis Grew, a friend of this gifted and eccentric newspaper genius, took many prizes on the Riviera for his beautiful garden and extraordinary flowers.

Mme. Balsan has closed the Chateau of St. George's for the Winter and has just left for Egypt with her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who has chartered the Dahabiyeh for a trip on the Nile.

Spanish Singer Hailed.

One of the outstanding receptions of the week was given by Mme. Ganna Walska, permitting friends to hear the great Spanish singer, Conchita Supervia, who has taken Paris by storm. Appearing in Carmen at the Opéra Comique to packed houses, she also showed the spell she could weave over hearers at Mme. Walska's salons. Something over a hundred guests, many of whom were musicians, surrendered to the wizardry of her pulchritude and genius. Her voice was so perfect, her art so complete, and her temperament so rich that the effect was one of absolute enchantment.

Spain adores this extraordinary and gifted artist. Her countrymen, including King Alfonso and Premier Primo de Rivera, telegraphed congratulations on her overwhelming Paris success. Many of her friends are predicting that America soon will be calling insistently for her.

One of her greatest admirers among Mme. Walska's guests was the Infanta Eulalia.

The Paris Opéra has just arranged for Senora Supervia to appear in her famous rôle in "The Barber of Seville." She is the only artist since Falcon who sings this opera in the keg originally written, it suiting her rich, low Spanish voice.

Classics Watch the Rhine.

DUISBURG, Jan. 10.—The "tired business man" has not yet made his influence felt in the Rhenish theatrical world to any serious extent. The management of the Duisburg Municipal Theatre sent a circular to patrons of the theatre in this part of the Rhineland some time ago asking what they would prefer to have the theatre offer. Sixty-four per cent preferred opera, 22 per cent the drama and 14 per cent operettas. More than 60 per cent of the writers asked for classical works. The operas obtaining the most votes were "Aida," 396; "Lohengrin," 386; "Rosenkavalier," 354; "Oberon," 344; Wagner's "Ring," 338, and Halevy's "La Juive," 310. Modern operas, such as "Turandot," "Palestrina," &c., received fewer than 200 votes.

Surrey Skeletons Indicate An Early Saxon Settlement

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The discovery of more than forty skeletons on the Hog's Back, near Guildford, Surrey, has revealed that there was once a large Saxon settlement there.

It was thought, when first the skeletons were unearthed, that they were the remains of malefactors hanged on the gibbet which once stood there. But further excavating resulted in finds of great interest, including a perfectly preserved drinking vessel and a spearhead and ferrule. From these British Museum authorities are able to place the date of burial somewhere between 600 and 650 A. D.

Among the skeletons are some of very large men, several measuring over six feet.

LEARNED WAR SECRETS BY TAPPING PHONE WIRE

Czech Author Tells of Intercepting Austro-German Orders to Entente's Advantage.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PRAGUE, Jan. 2.—An interesting story of how a group of anti-Austrian Czechs learned and transmitted to the Entente intimate secrets of the Austrian and German General Staffs during the war is told in a book recently published under the title of "To the Rescue of the Entente: Secret Activities of Some Czech Patriots During the War."

The author, M. Otschenaschek, relates how in the Spring of 1918 he and some friends, including F. Sis, editor of the Narodny Listy, began a search for the secret telephone cable connecting the Ministry of War in Vienna with the General Staff in Berlin. After tapping many wires in vain, they were at last rewarded by hearing one day "Great General Staff in Berlin speaking. Is that the Ministry of War in Vienna?"

The next step was to fix an intercepting station. This took the form of a Summer house, which they bought from an officer who had lost two sons in the war and little knew the purpose to which it was to be put. Here day after day they listened in to communications, mostly from Vienna to Berlin, and created endless confusion by short-circuiting some messages, such as orders for dealing with disloyal Czech regiments, and inventing others which stopped supply of food and ammunition by diverting them to dead railroad sidings.

Otschenaschek also claims to have designed the dread "aerial torpedo" and to have transmitted the plans via the leader of the Czech Sokols, Dr. Joseph Scheiner, to Professor Masaryk in Paris as the gift of the Czech people to the French Government.

AIDES DE CAMP, LTD., COVER A BROAD FIELD

British Ex-Officers' Corps Will Do Shopping or Organize Big-Game Hunts.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—"Adventurers, Limited," might well be the name of a new corps officially known as Aides de Camp, Limited, recruited exclusively from British ex-officers seeking employment. This organization has been formed by the City of London Branch of the British Legion and in the preliminary announcement it is stated that these officer-guides "are willing to go anywhere and do anything."

Aides de Camp, Limited, are prepared to organize big game hunting expeditions, Winter sports, mountaineering trips, yachting and fishing parties, act as super-guides in London and other historic places of Britain, undertake business commissions, city transactions and shopping by post, "and so forth."

Majors, Captains, Lieutenant-Colonels and Lieutenant Commanders appear on the list of the organization, which includes some distinguished names.

WANT A SAILING SHIP.

British Owners Would Have Public Aid in Training Seamen.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A proposal to build a square-rigged ship to replace the Garthpool, which was lost off Cape Verde in November, for the training of young officers of the British mercantile marine was made at a meeting of ship owners and navigators held at Winchester House recently.

Sir William Garthwaite, who was its owner, recalled that the Garthpool was the last of a glorious fleet of ships which had sailed under the British flag for many years, and the sea-loving public should have an opportunity of saying whether or not that vessel was to have a successor. He pointed out the desirability of young merchant marine officers having training afloat under working conditions.

It is impossible at present, he explained, to make a profit with a sailing ship; therefore it is necessary to find money to provide for the running of a sailing ship that would give the necessary facilities. He submitted two schemes, one for a sailing ship which would cost about $250,000, involving an annual loss of some $20,000; the other for a smaller ship, the loss on which would not be so great. Liner companies had refused to take part, most of these companies having their own arrangements for training apprentices. The owners of tramp steamers were interested but rather lukewarm and the British Board of Trade, which had also been approached, could not give any assistance.

A committee is to be appointed to arouse public interest in the plan.

property, including his furniture, and is even forbidden to live in any large city. It is done legally on a taxation basis, but it amounts to expropriation, differing only in form from the nationalization of apartments and other property, which occurred in the early days of the revolution.

The same things happen to the kulaks in the villages. It is a wholesale and ruthless carrying out of what the word "liquidation" means in Russian. Lenin's widow, Mme. Krupskaya, alone has raised her voice in protest, not against liquidation as such, which she declares she approves, but on behalf of the children of the "doomed classes."

"To expel the children of the class enemies from the crowded schools in order to give places to the children of workers and peasants," writes Mme. Krupskaya, "is correct enough, but it is time to consider the social problem involved. Do we wish to create millions of new homeless waifs as a shame and a burden to the country?"

Say Dispossessed May Work.

In answer to your correspondent's inquiries, the authorities said the "dispossessed classes" could gradually regain their standing by work in the lumber camps or on construction projects where the labor demand exceeds the supply. In any other country the problem would seem terrific, but actually in Russia things do not move with the implacable rapidity of the Kremlin decrees. The liquidation process probably will be gradual and its aftermath less difficult than it would be elsewhere. During the early years of communism the same process occurred on a greater scale working worse hardships.

From the general standpoint the revised economic policy seems far from unpopular. In the cities the overcrowding is so great that the news that hundreds or thousands of apartments will be vacated by the expulsion of nepman tenants is good news to all. Similarly, the poor peasants are delighted to hear that the best land in the village, with a mill or dairy attached, is to become the property of the new collective.

Nor does the anti-religious movement seem to meet opposition. On the contrary, the workers of one factory in Moscow celebrated Lenin's anniversary by tearing down the famous monastery of Saint Simon in order that it may be replaced by a communal house with a clubroom, theatre, restaurants, nurseries, sports centres and a park.

Augsburg Buys "Suicide Library."

AUGSBURG, Germany, Jan. 10.—The Augsburg Municipal Library has bought the "suicide library" collected by Hans Rost, a journalist. The collection contains more than 4,000 units. It begins with a pamphlet written in 1785 by Bishop Seiler and includes many works on suicide that have been forbidden by the censors of various countries. An archive for investigation into the causes of suicide is to be added to the library.

SECURITY.

One common description of the proceedings at the London Naval Conference is that all the nations represented are laying their cards on the table. This is scarcely the method. Or, if any cards are laid on the table, they are covered with elaborate calculations. Each delegation submits what might be called a series of algebraic equations. They contain several unknown quantities—tonnage, guns, armor, cruising radius, colonial dependencies, trade lines. But in all of them there is one x that is not only common to them all but is a known quantity. It is "security." If everything else could be canceled out and this left beyond question, there could be a great reduction of naval armaments and all the powers involved would be satisfied.

For the logical development of this thesis one needs only to go back to the note of the French Government a month ago. While heartily accepting the invitation to London, and pledging every reasonable support to the plans for reducing naval armament, it pointed out the absolute need of France to provide for her national security. This might be done by piling up an overwhelming force of arms, or it might be done by international agreements. Pointing out that both the British Government and that of the United States had laid great emphasis in their diplomatic exchanges upon the Briand-Kellogg treaty, the French communication proceeded to say:

> The treaty of Paris is founded upon the force of public opinion, which is great; but its methodical application has not yet been organized; it does not control all the questions of peaceful procedure, of mutual aid against the aggressor which is implied in placing war outside the pale of law. It is true that it constitutes real progress from the point of view of maintaining peace, but we cannot say that it is sufficient, as it stands at present, to guarantee the security of nations.

In such a passage appears the characteristically French desire for explicit engagements between nations, all set down in black and white. The more cautious British and American custom is to leave some things unwritten as between friends; it would depend upon a tacit and gentlemanly understanding; not promise that it will do the right and handsome thing, when the occasion demands, but do it as a matter of unexpressed moral obligation, all the same. Thus in 1914, Great Britain had made no treaty pledge to come to the aid of France when attacked, but came nevertheless. In 1917 the United States were not bound by anything except their own free will to begin the sending of 2,000,000 American soldiers for alignment with the French Army. The force of this example cannot have been entirely lost upon Premier TARDIEU, for in his note to the British Government he concedes that, "by hypothesis," it might be expected that signatories of the Briand-Kellogg treaty could not keep out of a conflict "born of the violation of solemn agreements." However, it would be hard to deny that there is both validity and appeal in this argument of the French Government.

It ought to have great weight with President HOOVER. There can be no doubt of his entire sincerity in working for naval reduction. No one has pressed for it with more earnestness. No one would be readier than he to admit that national security must never be sacrificed. Yet if it can be established beyond cavil by peaceful means, the duty of our Government to move in that direction seems imperative. Before the Naval Conference gets on very far, this whole question of strengthening the Kellogg treaty by a supplementary agreement, and of harmonizing London and Geneva, will have to be discussed. Our Government may not yet have thought the thing through, but when it does, it will see at the end, in this matter, very much face to face with France.

RUSSIA'S FIVE-YEAR PLAN.

In another section of today's TIMES there appears a condensed study of the famous Five-Year Plan of economic development inaugurated by the Soviet Government in 1928. The writer is justified in describing it as the most extraordinary enterprise in the economic history of the world; extraordinary, at least, in the boldness of its aims when compared with the brief term set for their realization. So striking is the arithmetic of the plan that in the ultimate effect its character ceases to be economic and becomes psychological. The dominant impression upon the reader is of the vision, courage and resolution of the men who have set themselves this enormous task, frankly staking upon it the fate of the whole Communist experiment. By Oct. 1, 1933, the Soviet Government expects to have invested in industrial and agricultural development the sum of $32,000,000,000. Some of the results by that date are expected to be: Coal production nearly doubled over the year 1928-1929; iron ore production nearly trebled; steel production multiplied by 2½; petroleum more than doubled; electric power more than trebled; boots and shoes nearly quadrupled; grain output increased from 76,000,000 metric tons to nearly 100,000,000 tons.

Only in one respect does the table reveal a touch of restraint on the part of the Soviet leaders. Their figures matched against the respective figures for the United States do not bear out the purpose reported from Moscow to make Russian industrial production at the end of the Five-Year Plan equal to that of the United States. It seems that we are still to be allowed to keep a comfortable margin, at least for some time. But short of this the pace envisaged is breathtaking. Coal production increased from 25,000,000 to 40,000,000 tons in the three years preceding 1928-29, or at the rate of 5,000,000 tons a year, but is expected in the next four years to rise to 75,000,000 tons, or at an annual increase of nearly 10,000,000 tons. Grain production was 73,000,000 tons in 1924-25 and 76,000,000 tons in 1928-29, but is expected to rise to very nearly 100,000,000 tons four years hence. Electric power is to rise from 6,500,000,000 kilowatt hours to 22,000,000,000 hours. The great Dnieper River power development for which Colonel HUGH L. COOPER is consultant engineer is scheduled to be completed in 1934 and to produce 2,500,000,000 kilowatt hours. Therefore the Five-Year Plan would seem to contemplate by that year the completion of six power developments of the size of the Dnieperstroy. The total scheduled cost of the electric power program is more than $2,000,000,000.

Where are these dollars, all the $32,000,000,000 called for by the Five-Year Plan, to come from? The question is pertinent because of the immediate situation in Russia. Even so magnificent a spectacle as the Five-Year Industrial Plan has recently been thrust into the background by the outbreak of civil war on the agricultural front. But the reasons for the war lie in the plan. It is frankly stated at the Kremlin that the costs of the Five-Year Plan, of the entire Communist experiment, must be borne by the peasants. They are bound to pay in the form of taxes, direct and indirect, but much more heavily in the form of grain surrendered to the government at prices fixed far below the open market price. Because the peasants with grain to sell, the "kulaks," have resisted, their extermination has been decreed. Because the former big export surplus has disappeared, the Soviet Government is out to restore it by means of State and collective farms. It seemed a sufficiently stupendous undertaking to increase Russia's industrial output two, three or fourfold in five years. But the Soviet Government has taken on a war with the peasantry.

PAYING FOR PROTECTION.

The farmer as consumer is now getting another lesson in the blessings of protection. The illusory benefit of the duty on wool was inevitably followed by compensatory duties on woolen manufactures. In consideration of a bagatelle to the sheep-raising farmer, he and all other farmers and everybody else will have to pay more for woolens or go without them. Another specimen of relieving the farmer by lightening his purse is the proposal on which debate began in the Senate last week to take hides, leather and boots and shoes from the free list. We begin with a duty on hides. That means practically nothing to the ordinary farmer with a few cattle. The whole matter was threshed out while the Fordney-McCumber tariff was under consideration.

The farmer must be pacified or duped. If he be content with the merest sop, the woes of the tanners, or some tanners, must be alleviated. Up goes the price of leather. The protected farmer and everybody else has to pay more for his boots and shoes and every other leather article that he uses. The tanners and manufacturers must have their compensation. Prices of shoes have risen steeply while they have been on the free list. Let us raise prices still higher by means of the tariff. Why does Senator HAWES of Missouri darkly estimate that a duty on hides would cost the country $100,000,000 a year? Mr. BROOKHART crushingly replies that the farmer will get all the benefit of the duty and the wicked big cities have to pay a large part of it. Evidently the Iowa farmers are to go barefooted or wear wooden shoes, as Mr. HAWES suggests.

One likes to see the friends of the farmer consistent. Thus Mr. WHEELER, who "grew up in the shoe industry," will vote for a tariff on boots and shoes. Mr. SHEPPARD is at least in a hopeful condition of mind. He only wants to find out what the rate on the finished product should be. This is the true protectionist way; and it is hard to sympathize with those who stray from it. The duty on hides logically involves the succeeding steps. If the farmer's share in the grab game seems to be inadequate, he should remember the many millions of persons who are to be mulcted again without having received even a slight or imaginary part of the spoils.

These demonstrations of what protection is and the combination of interests by which it is obtained have a high educational value. It may be doubted if they will bamboozle the farmer. They show how little, in spite of the virtuous escape in the case of sugar, protectionists, agricultural or industrial, care for the consumer. Give little and take much: that is the motto of the more or less tripartisan tariff show at Washington. In time, perhaps, "the people" will get sick of paying the bills.

TRENDS IN STATE LAW.

What are the trends in State legislation? In the old days one could glean from the review of legislation published by the New York State Library some hints of the mental processes and purposes of lawmakers the country over, but after the fire in 1911, which destroyed, among other valuable records, the Index for the years 1909 and 1910, that publication was discontinued. Three years ago Congress, recognizing the needs of students of comparative State law, made provision for a "Digest of State Legislation" to be prepared by the Director of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. The first of the new series has just been published. It covers the years 1925 and 1926. Any one who wishes to follow the course of legislation during those years will find this volume a handy guide.

One section of the book, based on the reports of a committee of the American Bar Association, deals with outstanding measures. One gathers that during the years under review the States were giving more than usual consideration to constitutional changes. Many of them dealt with the salaries of legislators and Governors, widely deemed inadequate to their present responsibilities. Here and there terms were lengthened. Some States, led by New York, undertook a far-reaching reorganization of their governments in the interest of efficiency, economy and centralization of authority. The theory of "responsible government," however, elaborated in this State under the leadership of ROOT, HUGHES, STIMSON and SMITH, has not made converts of all the States. Many of them still cling to the old régime of divided responsibility and the balance of power. "Boards and "single-headed departments, Gubernatorial responsibility and overlapping "commissions so organized as to prevent "one Governor from gaining control "exist side by side."

It may surprise some to learn that twenty States have set up various agencies to advertise the virtues and charms of the Commonwealth, some of them through government radio stations. Kentucky emphasized the sentimental side of State life by naming a poet laureate, an official bird—the Kentucky cardinal, of course—and a State flower, the goldenrod.

NEW BOOKS FOR OLD.

The retiring president of the National Association of Book Publishers, Mr. LIPPINCOTT, lamented to his co-workers that, though intellectual progress is "speeding up, interest in the great books "of the past is showing signs of dying "out." A book now has a short life; and were it not for the use of the classics in schools and colleges, even their reappearance in new editions would not suffice to attract purchasers. Yet library statistics, issued from time to time, show a surprisingly steady demand for them. It may be that the collectors of small libraries are more interested in contemporary works of literature. But is it not a fact that those who have many shelves to fill buy the familiar volumes which have held their interest through years and centuries?

"Pilgrim's Progress" is the work selected by Mr. LIPPINCOTT to illustrate his point. He fears that in another decade BUNYAN'S allegory will be "buried in oblivion." That may prove true, if oblivion be understood to mean the personnel of school classes in English literature. Yet it is not probable that the general circulation of "Pilgrim's Progress" will even then be appreciably less than it has been. BUNYAN'S great and moving story, though written in a style and with a viewpoint which the march of human life has for the multitude left to one side, has still a world-wide vogue because of the interest of the great religious bodies. If the publisher had said, however, that DICKENS, SHAKESPEARE, GOETHE and other great lamps of the past were shedding their light upon the discriminating modern few, it is probable that a hundred public librarians could rise up to controvert him.

There are some writers of "classics" who for various reasons are grimly "dated." If they are novelists writing of a stiff period, as TROLLOPE did, they have little attraction for an age which prefers to read more liberal fiction. Yet the mighty few who will continue to read "The Small House at Allington" and drink deep of the dark currents of EMILY BRONTE'S "Wuthering Heights" will always extend their taste to an appreciable circle. It may not be as wide as that ephemeral ripple which surrounds SINCLAIR LEWIS'S latest. But the test of a book's life is after years; and each year—as Mr. LIPPINCOTT himself concedes—thousands of volumes go to the trash-heap.

If the schools and colleges did not require acquaintance with standard literature they would not be educational institutions. And if they were not, there would, in time, be no reading at all.

TRADE REACTION AND RECOVERY.

That valuable and conservative critic of current industrial conditions, The Iron Age, took occasion last week to rebuke what it calls the tendency to "minimize signs of betterment." It remarks that "the new-era enthusiast has passed" and that "his place has been taken by the alarmist." The emphasis of this alarmist's judgment, it thinks, is laid on "frozen securities" in the hands of banks, "decline in silver to the lowest price in history," a "threatened gold famine" and, not least, on the allegation that the present month's recovery in steel production from a 40 per cent to a 65 per cent basis of activity reflects "nothing more than post-inventory replenishment buying." The Iron Age admits that "business faces serious uncertainties," but it also holds that "to "destroy confidence is to discourage "enterprise."

This statement will hardly be disputed. Nevertheless, The Iron Age's indictment of the alarmists will cause perplexity to many minds. It is quite true that during the final spasm of forced readjustment in November on the Stock Exchange, Wall Street itself began to indulge in gloomy forecasts of the industrial future. Our own observation was, however, that this spirit did not continue to prevail for more than three or four days. It vanished when the stock market itself recovered. As soon as President HOOVER'S conferences took measures with the hope of insuring continuance of construction work and averting serious unemployment, our recollection is that some of the newspaper headline-writers began to talk of the "new boom" that was foreshadowed. We do not recall any serious argument that the low price of silver was a menace to American prosperity. Professor FISHER, it is true, predicted to the commission on public service valuations that a "shortage of gold" may, within the next few years, "bring prices well below the pre-war level," curtail credit expansion and precipitate hard times. But Professor FISHER has said the same thing on many previous occasions, without exciting any great emotion in the public mind.

The attitude of the business public in general appears to be one of confidence in the longer future; tempered, so far as regards immediate results, by recognition of the fact that the abrupt and violent ending of an era of overspeculation in stocks may have marked also the ending of overexpansion in certain industries. This, however, the public is well aware was not accompanied by extravagant use of credit, arbitrary bolstering-up of wholesale prices for merchandise or accumulation of excessive inventories. No one has therefore imagined that the prolonged period of actual distress and acute embarrassment in productive industry, such as followed many other "major panics" in our history, is due to be repeated on this occasion.

How early and how complete the recovery from the present industrial reaction is to be is a question which possibly evokes more difference of opinion. To many watchers of the trade returns, the great shrinkage in activity at the year-end may have brought discouragement. Official reports have now shown that December's steel production was the smallest since the middle of 1924 and 40 per cent less than last May; spinners' purchases of cotton the smallest of any corresponding month since 1920; motor-car output the smallest since the beginning of 1922; the "index" of employment in manufacture at the lowest of any month but one since 1922. This shrinkage of business activity doubtless reflected the great uncertainty of the commercial mind over November's financial movement. Yet it does not seem to have created belief in a coming year of hard times. On the contrary, an idea appears to have pervaded business circles that, since unsold stocks of goods in November were as a whole below rather than above the normal average, so great curtailment of production as last month's might easily turn out a little later to have foreshadowed depleted yards and shelves, and therefore largely increased "replenishment orders."

This, as we take it, explains why the production figures for December have been received with such general absence of apprehension. The exact underlying facts of the business situation we are likely to learn before long. Whatever their character, they will throw an exceedingly interesting light on economic problems of the day.

"CRESCAT SCIENTIA."

Professor ROBERT MILLIKAN puts science on the witness stand in the case of Frederick Soddy, Raymond Fosdick et al. vs. the Old Savage in the New Civilization. She is accused of being responsible not only for the awful wreckage of the World War but for putting into the hands of the "old savage" the means of blowing entire cities into oblivion by the future release of the earth's store of subatomic energy. Another count is that she has imposed upon humanity a materialistic philosophy and made a mechanized world for man to live in. There are more specific counts, but these are sufficiently comprehensive and heinous to convict if there is not strong evidence to the contrary, and to condemn her to the "ten-year holiday" from scientific research recommended by the Bishop of Ripon at the meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

In the current Scribner's some of science's evidence is presented under the questioning of eminent counsel—Professor MILLIKAN being aided by Professor MICHAEL PUPIN. In the first place, war was the chief business of all the glorious civilizations of the past, when there was no science. With the advance of science it has become less and less glorious. It has "only a survival value" and will disappear like the dinosaur because changes in world conditions brought about by modern science so decree. Science has, moreover, helped beyond all other agencies to make it the last war. And as to the sub-atomic energy, it is improbable that there is any appreciable amount that will ever be available for blowing-up purposes, however savage and selfish man might grow to be.

The chief charge is that science has brought on a machine age and mass production and "ruined the life of the common man." It has "deadened and routined" labor and taken away "the joy of craftsmanship." But science insists upon looking beyond the mechanical processes in the making of thousands of cars in one factory in a day to the skilled occupations which it has fostered outside of the factory: self-respecting, sober, intelligent chauffeurs (instead of "the bleary-eyed, ruby-nosed old soaks "of thirty years ago on a New York or "London cab"); the garage mechanics, who must know the intricate mechanism from top to bottom; the courteous service-station men; back of all these the refineries with their expert chemists and physicists, and still further back the geologists and engineers of the producing companies. The list extends as far in the other direction in the uses to which the mechanism of the new civilization are put. Even the routine men of the factory in which the machines are made are "less routinized" and have shorter hours than "the dumb agricultural "drudge who hoed for twelve hours a "day before the machine age appeared."

This and further testimony science has to offer in her own behalf. But her counsel in summing up the case adds that if providing food for millions who would otherwise die of starvation or drag out a miserable existence, if filling mankind with a new vision of, and a new effort toward, a better human existence, or if shifting the relative emphasis from individual salvation to race salvation be "exalting the material," then she is guilty. As for himself, these mean rather an increase in spiritual values. Moreover, he adds: "I am en"thusiastically for everything that in"creases knowledge," whatever the field, and for acting on that knowledge; for "all progress comes of knowledge."

Professor PUPIN, associate counsel, adds that the machine so far from being a menace is the visible evidence of "the "close union between man and the spirit "of the eternal truth which guides the "subtle hand of nature." Man's engine is but the "crude copy" of the cosmic engine.

ANTARCTIC WHALERS.

Modern whaling ships in Antarctic seas may provide relief for Admiral BYRD'S explorers. If the City of New York fails to break through the Ross Sea ice pack, the Admiral would have to avail himself of the hospitality of the Norwegians or the British. The floating factories on which the great fish are flensed and their oil refined were unknown a comparatively few years ago. The statement that the British ship Southern Princess is the finest whaler afloat would probably be challenged by the Norwegians, who would claim that distinction for the C. A. Larsen, of 17,000 tons. The tonnage of the Southern Princess is 15,250. She is a sister ship of the Southern Empress. The Norwegians, who dominate the whaling industry, could probably not match the accommodations provided for officers and men on the Southern Princess, the last word in modern whaling ships. When SHACKLETON and his small party from the Endurance, crushed in the ice in 1914, reached the Norwegian whaling station on South Georgia to find a ship to rescue their comrades left on Elephant Island, they reveled in the luxury of a bathroom. In this convenience the Southern Princess administers to the wants of all, and carries a crew of 250.

The old method of treating the whale's carcass was to tie up the ship to the sloping stage of a shore factory, where the blubber was cut up into strips and transferred to boilers. On the Norwegian and the Scotch coasts there were many such stations, but when the Antarctic became the most profitable region for whaling, and there the Svend Foyn gun could slay whales by the hundred, the floating factory was designed. Sailing ships had become obsolete, and to get through the ice pack steel vessels capable of a speed of twelve to sixteen knots were built. The Norwegians had invented the accurate and deadly harpoon gun, and in the technique of whaling they have proved themselves most proficient. It is the practice to anchor these floating factories in sheltered coves, where they are "fed" with whales by smaller ships called the catchers.

The season usually begins in the Antarctic in November and is over by the middle of February, unless weather conditions are exceptionally favorable. The C. A. Larsen and the James Clarke Ross have docked at Staten Island with enormous cargoes of oil, sold to manufacturers of soap and other products. The Larsen has brought 78,000 barrels to the United States on one voyage. The oil is used in currying leather and in batching flax and jute. It is in demand for machinery as a lubricant. The whalers have made valuable contributions to geography in the Antarctic. There is today a strenuous rivalry between the Norwegians and the British, but the Norwegians are well in the van.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Nurses on the Frontier. City dwellers have fallen into the habit of thinking that the polar regions and the air are the only places left for hazardous exploration and adventure. The Western frontier has been pushed into the Pacific, but it moved along so rapidly that in great stretches left behind there are conditions of most primitive living. In one of these, the isolated mountains of Kentucky, modern transportation, schools and medical care are unknown.

The nurses of the Frontier Nursing Service, of which Mrs. MARY BRECKINRIDGE gave a report last week, have been facing extraordinary hardship during the five years since it was established. Six health stations and twenty nurses are in the field at present. To cover the thousand square miles of their territory and to reach the hundreds of children who are in special need of care, the nurses are sacrificing contact with all urban civilization and comfort. They ride horseback through all kinds of weather over uncertain trails to bring relief to the most remote cabins. It is a work that makes its own plea.

A Word of Good Cheer. Rejoicing with many other American newspapers that "What the Negro Thinks," by Dr. ROBERT RUSSA MOTON, has been awarded a prize of $1,000 as the most noteworthy contribution to interracial cooperation during the past year, The Birmingham News quotes an extract from the book well worth reprinting. The principal of Tuskegee wrote:

> In the midst of all this the negro thrives. Segregation, disfranchisement, prejudice, injustice, lawlessness—in spite of them he prospers. Above it all his voice rises singing, and the note of his joy has become the symbol of our modern America. Whatever he hides in his heart, whatever he may think in the back of his head, he turns to the world a smiling face, and in spite of itself the world, when it turns to look, is captivated by that smile; when it stops to listen, is thrilled by that song. And all the while he presses steadily onward * * * determined to let no man, no movement, drag him down so low as to make him hate his fellow-man.

American negroes should be proud of the sane, eloquent teacher who wrote those lines.

Gypsy Moths on Long Island? The reported discovery of gypsy moths on the North Shore of Long Island is rendered the more alarming by the statement that they were found in the stock of two well-known nurserymen. Unless promptly eradicated, they may be spread throughout the entire district.

The gypsy moth has for years done great damage in New England, especially to trees. Local communities and the State of Massachusetts cooperated in organizing "drives" against it, spraying trees in the infected regions. After a large outlay and a constant fight, the moth has been held more or less in check.

Yet these efforts at control have not prevented it from spreading. For years the New York State Conservation Department has maintained a barrier area east of the Hudson which has been constantly sprayed. In this manner the inroads of the moth from New England into New York have been held up.

Fortunately, the Conservation Department has taken prompt action in the case of the reported discoveries on the North Shore. Specialists are making thorough investigations, and all possible measures will be taken to wipe out the pest before it gets a start. This may work temporary hardships on those whose properties are quarantined, but will pay in the long run.

A Year of Centenarians. Eighteen centenarians died in Great Britain and Ireland during 1929, on the authority of The London Times. Fifteen were women, of whom eight were married. The oldest centenarian was a single woman of 104 years. Mr. C. B. GABB supplements the list of home centenarians by drawing attention to others outside the British Isles who, dying in 1929, had turned the century corner.

The most remarkable was a Turk, ZARO AGA, who, at the age of 143 (which must probably be taken on trust), died from an accident while embarking at Constantinople to fill a film engagement in the United States.

RADU MERARUL, a Rumanian, lived to be 120, and the year before his death was selling flowers, vegetables and fruits. In the added list was THOMAS SLOAN, an Irish cobbler, who had emigrated to the United States in 1826, was said to have made boots for President LINCOLN, and died at 116. LUIGIA CASELLI, known as "the Grandmother of Piedmont," lived under nine Popes and survived until she was 108.

In countries where vital statistics do not go back far enough, records of centenarianism must be viewed with suspicion. The United States census of 1930 will no doubt eclipse the list of The London Times, although it may be difficult to prove the century in every case.

JANUARY THAW.

Last night the stormy wind smote all the doors
Of darkness and the void, and wild and clear
The torrents drenched across these wintry shores,
Flooding the snow that whitened on the year.
There was the hammered sound of brittle ice
Unlocked crystal gates, as flood on flood
The sky outpoured, and all the silver mice
Of frost crept down to darkened solitude.

Now with this morning comes the sun, and white
That was on all the earth is seen as small
And scattered islands in the liquid light.
While moving objects are not men at all;
Nor beasts; but argosies, time-wandering,
Sailing through Winter toward the isles of Spring.

BY-PRODUCTS.

A casual violator under the proposed new dry laws is one who inflicts casualties only on himself and friends, instead of on strangers for profit.

Dr. Frederick A. Cook, after serving five years in Leavenworth Prison, is about to receive a parole. This means that he is free to go anywhere, including the North Pole.

Few eyes in New York City were dry after reading the telephone company's letter in which it describes just how a cruel United States court compelled it to boost rates to the public.

Nothing need be added to the bare announcement that downtown New York is to have a new hospital to serve the growing needs of the financial district.

The Republicans at Albany are sticking manfully to their new policy of being friends with Governor Roosevelt, but every little while they can hardly keep from bursting out crying.

The Conference.

We note with interest that radio reception of the opening speeches in London was exceptionally clear in the Alps at an altitude of 13,000 feet, where, of course, the problem of naval disarmament is particularly acute.

The women stenographers and secretaries attached to our delegation brought their bathing suits with them. They didn't really believe the conference was going to sink everything in sight?

Some people are hard to please. THE NEW YORK TIMES, for instance, complained in one column that Glitter is Lacking as Parley Opens, and then went on to specify that Only Murals, Stained Glass and the Gilt Throne Lend Color to the Scene. Now, if instead of depending for color only on big war pictures, red and blue and yellow glass windows and a golden throne, the delegates had appeared in golf sweaters and the meeting were at Roxy's!

For the British Commonwealth, in all seriousness, it was a great day. Where an empire is held together only by a common sentiment for a throne, the voice of the occupant of that throne reaching out over the radio is very much of a binding force.

Coming back to those twenty-four American lady secretaries and stenographers, as it is only a pleasure to do, the London press is unanimous in extolling their prevailing chic cruiser lines by comparison with the heavier battleship type turned out by English business and secretarial schools.

Whether or not the conference will turn out a success we refuse to predict until we hear something from or concerning Mr. H. G. Wells, who at the Washington conference eight years ago volunteered to settle everything by sinking the French fleet single-handed.

In deference to the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, it must be pointed out that if the radio draws the world together it also creates differences and diversities. Before the age of radio the King's speech would have been read all over the world by men and women in ordinary day garb. Over the radio New York listened to the King in pajamas at 6 A. M., London heard him in cutaway or business suit at 11 A. M. and Tokio was all set to hear him at 8 P. M. in evening clothes.

But more important than dress was the geographical diversity of mood. A plea for world peace over the radio, we venture to say, would be most effective at 8 P. M. after the cocktails at Tokio and least effective at 6 A. M. with the dark brown taste still in the mouth at East Orange.

Tokio didn't hear the King's speech because static interfered at first, and when things grew clearer a pianist from Khabarovsk in Siberia broke in. His name was probably Misha and he never would be mished.

Thousands of Americans heard the naval conference speeches by getting up at 5:30; the zero hour for peace, one might say.

Another week gone and not a word from Premier Mussolini! What can possibly be wrong?

Moran is suing Mack for an accounting. On grounds of incomputability, so to speak.

Extraordinary nerves the Japanese must have, taking on simultaneously a naval conference in London and a general election at home.

Concerning that other conference—the Young Plan meeting at The Hague—we note that the Rumanian delegates came home proud of a triumph for Rumania, the Austrian delegates were greeted as conquerors on their return to Vienna, the Czech delegates brought back a moral victory to Prague, and the Hungarian delegates came back to Budapest more than pleased. What is Central Europe coming to?

Disarmament in Space-Time.

In a special dispatch to THE NEW YORK TIMES the other day Professor Einstein expressed the opinion, by way of comment on the London conference, that under present-day conditions "any one State would incur no appreciable risk by undertaking to disarm—wholly regardless of the attitude of other States."

Odd that it should be Einstein of all people who believes that a nation can disarm absolutely instead of relatively to other nations.

"Dry League Lays Drinking to Colonel Foran." It is extraordinary how the dry league will lay drinking to almost everybody and everything except the desire to take a drink.

Anti-drys are asking Senator Borah if he is prepared to sacrifice the Fifth Amendment in order to enforce the Eighteenth. But sometimes even Senator Borah must feel as if he would like to sacrifice all the nineteen amendments for the sake of a quiet half hour.

A perfectly revolutionary idea for keeping New York streets clean has been advanced by the new Sanitation Commissioner. Instead of concentrating on electromagnetic snow plows or psychoanalytic incinerators, Dr. Schroeder suggests that people refrain from scattering paper and fruit skins over the sidewalks.

Timely Letters to the Editor From Readers of The Times on Topics in the News

REPEAL OF THE PATENT LAWS WOULD CHECK DEVELOPMENT

Odds at Present Are Against Independent Inventor Whose Work Needs the Encouragement of Legal Protection

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with a great deal of interest the various letters appearing since the publication of THE TIMES editorial "New Light on Inventors." Waldemar Kaempffert's letter particularly appealed to me, possibly because I respect his wide knowledge of the subject of inventors and their work. His comments on the letter of Mr. O'Brien, however, to my mind raise other questions.

I believe it can be shown that the reason about 25 per cent of all patents are assigned before they issue is because 90 per cent of the assignors are employed by industrial concerns on development and inventive work. Such patents cover largely improvements and modifications pertaining to products and processes manufactured or used by the particular employers. For example, hundreds of patents are issued each year covering improvements—specific details—of typewriters, adding machines, telephones, motors, &c. These patents may be valuable to the concerns owning them because of their relation to other patent interests; that is, as a part of a patent situation they help to build a protective wall, as it is sometimes called. But taken alone, very few of these patents would be of any value in the hands of an outsider.

Inventions and Progress.

If we exclude the professional inventor class, the technician employed under contract to assign any patents resulting from his work, it is a safe estimate that among the rest of the patentees far fewer than 5 per cent ever realize any worth-while return on their patents. Much of the work of independent patentees is worthless because of lack of merit of the inventive idea or because the patent is defective.

If Mr. O'Brien had said all industrial progress rests on inventions, he would have been nearer to the truth. Taking exception to his statement that industrial progress rests on "patents," Mr. Kaempffert reminds us that much of our industrial progress is traceable to physicists and chemists who would scorn to take out patents. One very good reason why more workers in pure science do not take out patents is because very few of them are constituted to think initially along original lines; they do not employ their imagination as a rule until a problem has been presented to them; then, as there is no limit apparently to what may be learned about a particular subject, they might ultimately, if not under competent laboratory direction, find themselves hopelessly involved in abstract speculations.

Odds Against Independent.

The laboratory scientist is an important factor in the modern industrial scheme; progress would be slow without him. Ready and mentally equipped to solve problems which to the untrained mind seem impossible of solution, he is unconsciously making it very difficult for the so-called "garret" inventor. The laboratory worker of a big industrial corporation has everything that money can buy on his side, excellent equipment, skilled aids and the reputation of the firm. An independent inventor who approaches a large industrial organization in the hope of selling an invention has all of the odds against him. If he is not 99 per cent right in his premises, assuming that his idea is valuable, his chances are doubtful to say the least. To put over his proposition he must, among other things, know that his invention is actually protected; he must know its relation to the art and its probable worth to the concern, and above all he should be able to talk the language of the business executive and not indulge in temperament.

Most inventors discover when it is too late that all they have succeeded in doing is freely giving away such value as their idea possessed without the slightest chance of material realization. Inventions are rarely stolen, but unprotected ideas frequently stimulate others to think along similar lines.

Mr. Kaempffert refers to the question of whether our patent laws have not outlived their usefulness, and seems to indicate that in his opinion industrial research would certainly not be stayed if patent laws were repealed. The mere necessity for reducing production costs in the face of competition is in itself enough to spur on the innovator, he says.

Hardship Seen in Repeal.

It is difficult to picture such a condition as might exist were everybody free to copy and reproduce the exact accomplishments of others. Certainly in time we would witness a war of industrial giants, because the smaller firms could not exist, and it would then be a question of how few large groups could make all of the commodities consumed. We would probably see industrial spies hovering from plant to plant collecting and selling data to competitors. In a small way we have the counterpart of these spies now, but the patent laws modify the value of their efforts to a large degree.

Personally I believe repeal of patent laws would work many hardships among both individuals and industrial firms. On the other hand, I believe we will see radical changes in patent procedure during the next few years as a result of the enormous activity of inventors both here and abroad. While it is doubtless a fact that each patent opens up channels for more patents, it is also a fact that as the number of patents continues to grow it becomes more and more difficult to establish broad patentable distinctions. This may lead to the establishment of a new system of issuing protection to inventors in which merit and utility will outweigh to a greater extent past art of questionable commercial or industrial value.

There are hundreds of private individuals and groups of individuals throughout the country engaged in the development of inventions whose efforts certainly would be discouraged by the repeal of the patent laws. Many of these developments pertain to arts in which hundreds of thousands of dollars will be required ultimately to commercialize the work. It should not be required that an inventor not only shall make an important contribution to mankind, but that he shall also finance its exploitation. If no protection was afforded him, he could not sell his invention or raise capital for it. It seems to me the urge to invent would soon become a feeble impulse. Some of us appear too ready to assume that because most large manufacturers employ men to invent that they will do all of the inventing that is to be done; that the salary paid them affords the stimulus to conceive.

CONCERNING AMBIDEXTERITY

Development of So-Called "Active" Hand May Prevent Nervous Instability

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with interest the article from Berlin printed recently in THE TIMES, "Germans Dispute on Ambidexterity." The writer speaks of the active hand and the auxiliary hand, taking it for granted the right with some people is the active hand while with others it is the left. He states: "We have no statistics to inform us how many there are born right-handed, and how many left-handed there are today." Further on he states: "There is much evidence for the contention that there are not many more born right-handed than left-handed, and that most persons are born with a more or less pronounced gift for the use of both hands equally well."

This recalls a similar statement by a European psychiatrist lecturing in New York. To prove to us that at least 33 1-3 per cent were left-handed we were told to clasp our hands naturally. If the left thumb was uppermost, he said, we were left-handed. I chanced to sit with a group of psychologists, all of whom had done laboratory work in some university, and all were definitely right-handed but all our left thumbs were on top.

Many Tests Made.

Neither the writer of the article nor the lecturer seems to know that thousands of boys and girls from 6 to 20 years old have been carefully and individually tested as to handedness in the United States by a special dynamometer, and that only a small percentage, generally 3 to 4 per cent, are born left-handed. Furthermore, these returns have been charted, showing there is a difference in the strength of the two hands every year, the right hand being stronger than the left in right-handed persons. Left-handed children, even when taught to eat, write, shake hands, &c., with the right hand, test weaker on the right than on the left side.

It has been found that when tests have been made of two or more thousands of selected groups the findings are reliable for like groups. These tests were carried out by Dr. Smedley in Chicago on between 6,000 and 7,000 children, 6 to 20 years old. There have also been studies on left and right handedness made by Binet and Vaschide in France, by Engelsperger and Ziegler in Zurich and by Dr. Lucy Ernst in Leipzig.

Work in Various States.

In addition to Smedley's work much has been done in psychological laboratories in New York, Nebraska and Washington and in institutions for the feeble-minded and epileptics in a study of the correlation of left-handedness with intelligence. The Manual of Mental and Physical Tests (Part I) by Dr. G. M. Whipple has an account of work done by Dr. Smedley, with graphs showing the difference in strength between the two hands as well as the difference between boys and girls.

Dr. Mark Baldwin, formerly of Johns Hopkins, made a study for many years of left-right handedness and I understand a report is to come out soon of work done recently on this same subject in the Johns Hopkins Psychological Laboratory.

If returns from testing thousands of Americans can be used as reliable tests in any part of the United States, considering the European origin of much of our population, these same returns might well be used in Germany and other European countries. At least lecturers coming here from abroad might well inform themselves of the careful, scientific work carried on here in many psychological laboratories and not use such crude tests as clasping hands to get the percentage of left-handedness, and expect us to accept these conclusions.

I should like to refer also to an article appearing about a year ago in The Scientific Monthly showing the relation of speech to left and right handedness. This stresses the need of careful individual testing of children to be sure which is the hand nature meant them to use as the active hand. For the speech centres, being on the side with the stronger hand, are affected and properly developed by training the correct hand and thrown out by overtraining the weaker hand. Stammering or hesitancy and emotional instability often ensue. I have had some cases where the subjects were 16 to 30 years of age and gave a history of being forced to use their right hands more than their left, but who, on being tested, were still stronger in the left hand. Re-education led to stabilizing them emotionally and correcting certain speech defects.

It is possible then to do more than guess whether we or our children are left or right handed and so develop the active hand over the auxiliary hand and be saved from emotional and nervous instability which is sure to come if the weaker hand is made to do the harder work.

NO COERCION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES Watch Tower correspondent, Roland M. Jones, writes that he expects to witness something interesting when the Farm Board tries to use force to stop overproduction. Why must the Farm Board use force? There is nothing in the national farm marketing act that makes it mandatory for the board to deal with any given cooperative association.

What is there to prevent the Farm Board's saying to any given cooperative association, "So long as your members play the game with us we will work for you. But whenever your members persist in increasing production above the probable demand, we are through with you. We help no association whose members persist in overproduction." That seems to me to be just the opposite force. That means, instead of having to force any one, all the Farm Board has to do is to drop the producers of any given commodity such as corn, wheat, cotton, beef, pork or tobacco.

It is generally agreed that the farmers are poorly educated, poorly led and the worst organized of any group. It is a pity that their agricultural college men persist in trying to teach them how to produce more instead of less at a greater profit. The difficulty is the college professors have nothing to sell. The college men do not suffer from overproduction. What the Farm Board and the officers of the farmers' cooperative associations will have to do is to put on a campaign to educate the educators.

TEA AND TOAST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On Nov. 20 you published a letter from H. Glynn-Ward on a subject of very real importance—the absurd New York and also Boston method of making tea with tea tied up in a cheesecloth bag. This need not cause your correspondent any great trouble. Let him carry a sharp pocket knife or small scissors and surreptitiously cut open the cloth bag and drop its contents in the pot. He may burn his fingers, and if caught will be stigmatized as an objectionable and perhaps dangerous nonconformist. Most waiters and waitresses will regard him with scorn, but there are a few restaurants where it is possible to procure tea worth all this cost.

This tea making, however, is merely one manifestation of a much more serious condition—our American craving to mess everything up. If one orders toast, it is reasonable to suppose that he wants bread that has been slightly dried and crusted, otherwise he would order bread; but what does he get? In the first place, the slices of bread have had the crust cut off them (the best part); then the toast is served wrapped up in a napkin, where it steams and softens. The toast-rack serves toast as toast.

The list of hardships involved in living in New York or Boston might be greatly lengthened, but to what purpose? And yet it is not altogether impossible that these little annoyances may have contributed to the recent collapse of Republican prosperity. Let our Senators tackle this problem. It is not the first time, as your correspondent intimates, that statesmanship has had to deal with tea.

THE CHOLO.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of S. B. G. of Montevideo in THE TIMES of Dec. 8 caught my eye.

May I submit that Cholo is the generic name given to the Peruvian Quichua Indian who is referred to in Presidential speeches &c. as "el Indio Peruano" or "el Indigena Peruano" and who is a pure-blooded descendant of the subjects of the Inca?

Secondly, that a mestizo is a half-breed of mixed Cholo and foreign blood.

Thirdly, that the Chuncho is the wild red Indian of the forests, divided into different tribes. He most certainly does not engage in menial tasks, such being undertaken by his wives, of whom he often has several.

WILD FOWL AND BAG LIMITS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES is to be commended for printing Dr. William T. Hornaday's protest regarding Secretary Hyde's press bulletin on our migratory wild fowl. In that statement the situation has been set forth with clear, uncompromising accuracy.

The Department of Agriculture's bag-limit announcement has up to this moment gained such menacing impetus against the welfare of our birds, and the ignorance of the people is so great regarding the true aspects of the matter, that it becomes urgent that in the brief time there is left thought be given to these plain facts.

A reduction of bag and season limits on the waterfowl for one year, as proposed by Secretary Hyde in lieu of the McNary-Haugen bill, which promises a much longer period of protection, would do the birds no good. Today our game birds have been shot down to a point where shooting, except on private preserves or in the wildest districts, is a thing of the past. The American system of free shooting has proved a failure. Now, does any one suppose that one single year of the very mild restrictions in shooting that the Secretary would offer would restore the ducks?

The McNary-Haugen bill is not a harsh dose for the "game hogs." In fact, considering the few wild ducks and geese that are left and the constantly increasing hazards promoted by man against them, Senator McNary's bill is very much of a compromise. Instead of it being defeated, as Secretary Hyde's press bulletin proposes, the McNary-Haugen bill should not only become a Federal statute but it should be still further improved with added conservation measures. The bill as it stands is the very least for which conservation can ask.

Undoubtedly it is a mistake to assume Secretary Hyde a deliberate offender against the birds; rather we gather that the Secretary has been the victim of bad advice. But nevertheless his bag-limit proposal has assumed such proportions as to obscure from the very friends of the McNary-Haugen bill the inevitable need for the passage of that bill.

RECLAMATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In Mr. Coolidge's last message to Congress he said that, on the whole, the Federal reclamation act had proved of such incalculable benefit to all interests that no one would advocate its abandonment.

I am informed that should the Western States accept title to the remaining public domain, as suggested by the President, the Federal reclamation act would be nullified.

Secretary Wilbur stated in his annual report, "From Nebraska west, water, and water alone, is the key to our future."

Our Western States are no better equipped or prepared to handle their reclamation needs, alone, than are the Mississippi Valley States their flood control problem.

CHARITY IS NOT SOLE PANACEA FOR THE ILLS OF PORTO RICO

Islanders Have Suffered Economically Since American Occupation, But a Better Day Is Seen to Be Dawning

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For a long time the false notion has prevailed here that organized charity is the only panacea for all Porto Rican ills. My docile and hospitable countrymen are very easily swayed by sentimentality—a characteristic trait that forever has been the stumbling-block on our road to self-assertion. Governor Theodore Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt have done more in three months to place our tutors in contact with our problems than was ever accomplished before in the thirty long years elapsed since American sovereignty was implanted on the island.

What Porto Rico needs most is less sugar-cane and more of the old food growth; and, incidentally, a return to the good common sense and faith of our ancestors.

During the old order of things Porto Rico was a semi-pastoral country, endowed with the most prolific of soils. In our meadows grew the finest creole rice, corn, beans and a hundred other varieties of foodstuffs. Our hillsides were crowded with all the fruit trees of the tropics. Our highlands produced the finest coffee, and the plains gave sufficient sugar to satisfy our needs at two cents a pound, leaving a handsome exportable surplus. Alongside the sugar-cane fields great herds of cattle grazed and many cattle ranches flourished.

Ignorant But Well Fed.

Then we had less education, but more pure and wholesome milk, rice, corn and beans. Now we are fed on grubby rice from Rangoon and Ceylon; stale corn meal, condensed milk and fish from North America; beans from Manchuria and Japan. And from the time that these foodstuffs enter Seattle to leave through New Orleans or New York, two or three middlemen add their profit to an already inflated cost. The very sugar extracted from our soil must first go abroad to be refined, and then come back to the island to be resold at three or four times its original cost.

In the island itself, those that have the good fortune to be able to earn a paltry 25 to 60 cent wage need $2 to purchase their daily bread. A retroactive tariff wall provides the offset for the fantastic privilege of free entry accorded the island's sugar—the proceeds of which, incidentally, never come back to the country, but are spent or accumulated abroad. The drainage pipes of our insular wealth run only in a northerly direction, and our very earth has become so sterile that it will not yield any more crops without the most intensive use of fertilizer.

The cost of living in Porto Rico is altogether out of proportion to the income—or rather the total lack of income—of its people, but the unfortunate island must support itself under the price standards of the State of New York or perish in the struggle. And yet our New York friends often want to know why so many Porto Ricans come here to aggravate the local labor problem when, as a matter of fact, our national bird itself has been forced to find a more secure haven of refuge in the neighboring islands.

Modern Facilities Available.

To say that we have not gained through the paternalism of our Uncle's association with the island would probably savor of ingratitude. For have we not many new schools, roads, automobiles, movie houses, jazz and even moonshine and pugilism? Now, when we find that the "mens sana in corpore sano" becomes impracticable on an empty stomach, if we have to discard our primer and turn to the ringside to nurture our ricketty brain, we have no one to blame for our troubles, as our good Yankee friend is bound to reason. For as Daniel Webster rightfully said: "God grants liberty only to those who love it and are always ready to guard and defend it."

In 1898 Uncle Sam found the "jibaro" in a humble hut by the edge of virginal woods—illiterate, but well fed and contented. His acre of land, cow, horse, a few pigs, goats, chickens and several game cocks were about the limits of his earthly ambition; and inasmuch as he was not deprived of these primitive comforts, politics was not a matter for his concern. During the day he attended the cattle or helped in the planting or harvesting of some seignorial manor, receiving for this labor a small share of the crops. His cupboard was always well stocked. No one ever approached his hut without getting at least a steaming cup of delicious coffee. He knew not how to say "good-bye"; but he always said "Come again soon" with a sincerity that touched the heart.

In the tropical night, the fragrance of many exotic flowers seemed to blend with a starlight divine to make of these innocent surroundings a primeval Eden. The sound of guitar, "tiple" and gourd laid the countryside to sleep. At Christmas, New Year's and the Epiphany the peasant's ballad and music roused the soul of the village to romance and fiesta. Sunday morning the "jibaro" worshiped at the nearest church, and wound up his holiday at the cockpit by the mango or ceiba tree. A "velorio" (country wake), with its typical chants and sorcery tales encouraged by coffee and rum, was the most pressing engagement complementing this social program.

This age of happiness was an actual reality in Porto Rico at the outset of the Spanish-American War, and those who claim that the economic and health conditions of my homeland were then worse than now grossly misrepresent the sober facts of history, as intimately known to one whose early adolescent memories spring from this period, and who was an integral part of that very environment.

Pace Too Swift.

In 1930 Governor Theodore Roosevelt finds that the hitching of the Porto Rican wagon to the fast train of American progress has wrenched the "jibaro" from his natural surroundings, and he is now either succumbing to the ravages of inanition prevailing in the island or wandering like an outcast over the face of the earth. He will also find that a few syndicates of absentee landlords, who are interested only once a year in the polarization and quantity of the sucrose extracted from the island's cane, have succeeded—despite existing statutory restrictions—in cornering more than one-half of the soil, eliminating the small farmer and the small hacienda.

Mr. Roosevelt will be confronted with a population of 1,500,000, 2 per cent of whom scarcely fit into the classification of rich or well-to-do; a bare 5 per cent who are self-supporting and an appalling balance, one-half of which is reduced to slavery wages and the rest to beggary—a people on whose head floats the spectre of disease.

For all of these distressing conditions we are, I repeat, more to blame than our guardian, who once pointed out to us blessings of a liberty that we have translated into licentiousness. We have not only forfeited our free trade, but as well our character, until all the spiritual progress that our forefathers attained in four centuries of struggle has gradually decayed along with the material designs of everyday life. Up to the time that Governor Roosevelt arrived in Porto Rico the clamor of our agonizing population had been a cry lost in the desert. Our people have been tossed hither and thither by a predatory horde of political caciques. Without either a definite orientation or a patriotic motive and devoid of real leadership they have never been able to test the advantages of association for a common purpose.

Better Times Coming.

But we can already perceive the light of a new day dawning upon our country. A new type of revolutionary junta, unlike the one that functioned here in 1898, will see to it that the parasitic vines that have hitherto hindered the island's life be forever extirpated. To this patriotic movement—like all similar undertakings of the past coming from the sons in enforced or voluntary exile—the heart and the mind of every Porto Rican worthy of that name is pledged.

The administration of Theodore Roosevelt should decide whether or not a people that lack the ties of geography or consanguinity can work out their salvation in common with the American Commonwealth, and upon what definite basis such relationship is to continue. Today Porto Rico—as Robespierre said of the revolutionary France—must be purged of its sins before we can ever attain the goal of a free people, and the sooner we carry through to a finish this vital measure the better for all concerned.

ANSWERING LADY RHONDDA

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May one who is wedged in between the Colonel's Lady and Judie O'Grady aspire to enter the ring with Lady Rhondda?

It was rather startling to read her views, set forth by Kathleen Woodward in THE TIMES Magazine of Jan. 19, with regard to "women in the home, the leisured and semi-leisured, getting jobs," when we have just been assured by an article in The Fortnightly Review of London that England's chief anxiety today is the permanent unemployment of more than 1,000,000 people! It would seem from this that perhaps some of Lady Rhondda's converts are holding down whole or part time jobs that could be very well filled by some who are at present in that vast army.

Like thousands, perhaps millions, of other married women, "semi-leisured" and "kept" (not a ladylike word) by a husband, my actual, manual working hours per diem would not be much in excess of two. In that time I can do all of the work in my small, modern, button-touching apartment, cook sensible, nourishing meals for my "keeper," mend his clothes and darn his socks.

Now for the balance of a working day. If I am lucky, some other "semi-leisured" woman may ask me to fill in at a game of bridge. Good mental exercise. Or a good movie may claim a few hours of an afternoon—one without sex-appeal preferred. The balance of the time is devoted to reading and studying—poetry, good fiction, biography, the magazines; this to fill up the gap that would, according to Lady Rhondda, be occupied in my mind by matters appertaining to sex, "if not openly, at least covertly;" or, more likely be a vacuum. Perhaps Lady Rhondda has not met any American women of my class except disguised as tourists, and she may be confining her remarks entirely to Englishwomen. I have never met any of the English "semi-leisured" in their natural habitat; but the few I have met over here have been pretty fine, with nice sterilized minds.

Really she is all wrong about our "semi-leisured" class, at any rate. Our personal adornment, instead of being like the siren's she would have it, "not very much before and rather less than arf of that be'ind," consists of a very unromantic ready-to-wear, or made-at-home, frock, covered by a nice starched smock, and, I ask you, would such an attire—and millions of us look just like that—tend to arouse Don Juan thoughts in a tired business man?

The sad part of all this is that nearly all of us were holding down good jobs before some foolish man undertook to "keep" us. If we have been wise, and most of us have been, we have not since allowed our minds to go to seed or sex—they are in better working condition than ever—but we are glad to have retired from the tyranny of the alarm clock. Who can tell, maybe some day, all too soon, our nice, kind "keeper" may be called for service in a better sphere; the insurance may not be adequate for even semi-leisure, and then the one-time slave will have to match her luck against the vast numbers of younger, stronger, more business-wise applicants for a job!

Meantime, if we really do not have to work, why give whole or part time to satisfy an inflated ego, or to please Lady Rhondda, or to buy cake when more worthy ones may need to buy bread?

TOO MANY TREES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I note an increasing demand for the planting of trees along our highways. A word of caution is suggested. Out here in Kansas, trees and hedges which border our roads are being ripped out as rapidly as possible.

The objections are that the prevailing winds during Winter cause blocking by snow of our east-west roads, while the north-south roads remain open regardless of the planting. It is desirable to have free access of the sun and wind to dry off the surface after rain. Drainage is interfered with by roots. When trees become old they are a menace to traffic. It is annoying, and even dangerous, to drive through a series of intermittent shadows cast by trees or tree hedges in the bright sun of a late afternoon.

The beauty of trees can better be appreciated and observed if they are set well back from the roads, and then there will be no later destruction of the planting when future generations widen our highways.

THOSE CLIPPER SAILING RECORDS

Mr. Henson Cites Figures to Show Supremacy of American Vessels

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To disclose the error of the Thermopylae's record myth to which E. J. Routledge, together with many another Britisher, clings with such tenacity, it is necessary only to set out the facts. Conceived and perpetuated in comparing records not properly comparable, the legend has been reiterated until it is in a fair way of becoming unassailable by right of prescription; but the facts do not bear it out.

When it was pointed out to Mr. Routledge that the Thermopylae's port-to-port time from London to Melbourne was not sixty days but sixty-three, and that the American-built James Baines had made the run from Liverpool to Melbourne in sixty-three days, fourteen years before, he countered that the Baines's port-to-port time was sixty-six days. Passing over the fact that sixty-six days appears to be an erroneous figure in any event, Mr. Routledge's point seems to be that a passage from Liverpool is not port-to-port if measured from the time of leaving Rock Light, while in the same sentence he insists upon the Thermopylae's time from leaving Gravesend being credited as a port-to-port London-to-Melbourne passage.

The Melbourne Voyage.

The facts are that the Baines "sailed" from Liverpool on Dec. 9, 1854, and dropped down the river, but for one reason or another did not pass Rock Light for some two days. She was then delayed by strong head winds in the Irish Sea and Bristol Channel and "touched off St. Ives Head" on the seventh day out. She sighted Cape Otway, just outside Melbourne, on the fifty-fourth day out of Liverpool, but did not get her anchor down in Melbourne harbor until Feb. 12, 1855, being sixty-three days from Rock Light and sixty-five days from the time of "sailing" from Liverpool. She encountered much light and contrary weather and her British captain wrote his British owner: "Had I only had the ordinary run of winds I would have made the voyage in fifty-five days."

The Thermopylae on the other hand left Gravesend on Nov. 7, 1868, and was then at least two days from London—if she came from there at all—having been at Gravesend since Nov. 5. If the two days which the Baines spent lying in the Mersey are to be counted, so must the two days the Thermopylae lay at Gravesend. The ship had a good run, or more probably tow, down the channel and took her departure from the Lizard on Nov. 8. She was up with Cape Otway on Jan. 7 and came to anchor in Melbourne harbor on Jan. 9, 1869, in sixty-three days from Gravesend and at least sixty-five from London.

Pilot to pilot Thermopylae was sixty days. We have no record of when the Baines dropped her English pilot, but it may well have been when she touched at St. Ives Head. She picked up her Australian pilot at least one and probably more days outside Melbourne, and so if Mr. Routledge wants to talk about "Thermopylae's sixty-day run" he will have to compare it with something like fifty-six or fifty-seven days for the Baines. If it is a question of England to Melbourne, the Thermopylae was sixty-two days and the James Baines was fifty-eight.

Shortest Time for Run.

But if Mr. Routledge will stand by his own criterion and admit that the ship which "did her 13,500 miles" in the shortest time is the swiftest ship; if he will give up the advantage of 1869 model tugs over those of 1855 and consider only open ocean work where sailing ships were not unduly helped or hindered by the vagaries of land breezes in narrow waters, then let him look at the times of these two ships from the Lizard to Cape Otway and let him haul down his flag, for the James Baines not only made her 420 miles a day on occasions, but she ran her 13,500 miles in forty-seven days as compared to sixty for the Thermopylae.

In computing his averages, Mr. Routledge must have private information contrary to the recognized authorities or else his mathematics differ from mine. Even using his selected runs, I cannot make my figures agree with his in a single instance. For example, the Thermopolae's first five homeward passages were 81, 90, 75, 87 and 79 days, respectively, and I average these as 82 2-5 days not 78¼ as Mr. Routledge asserts.

There are no doubt numerous British, as there are numerous American, ships not in the hard-driven clipper class which lasted longer than any clipper. If Mr. Routledge is interested, I can supply him with names of American ships in active service well toward or beyond the century mark. But we are here considering clippers, and his best example is fifty-three years of trading, as against sixty-nine years of active service for an American.

Summarizing American Advantage.

To summarize this and previous letters, the indisputable facts are: 1—Americans first conceived and produced clipper ships. 2—The ocean routes which made the fast passages possible were devised by an American. 3—The greatest speeds ever made by sailing vessels were attained by American clipper ships, whose performances in excess of 20 knots have never been seriously rivaled. 4—In the matter of 24-hour runs, American clipper ships, led by the Flying Scud's 449 nautical miles, never had any competition worthy of the name. 5—American clipper ships made the fastest average passages between England and Australia as well as elsewhere. 6—American clipper ships hold practically every passage record of any importance, including England to Australia, Australia to England, the round trip, New Zealand to England, England to America and America to England. 7—The record for longevity of clipper ships in active service is held by an American, the Syren.

These statements are not fancies; they are history. If there is any material particular other than the prodigality and vehemence of their advocates, in which, upon a proper comparison, British clipper ships can be considered the equals of the American, it has never been suggested. To me these facts seem irrefutable; having established them, I rest my case.

A MAGIC WORD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When the panic of 1929 has passed into the dark, abysmal depths of time some inquisitive person will ask: "What genius supplied a word expansive enough to plug the hole through which tens of millions of dollars were running every minute, and horriferous enough to keep the bears from sneaking back and clawing out the plug?" For the purpose of accurate and interesting history, let us know who suggested "consortium." His name should go down to fame with that of Horatius at the bridge and Sheridan at Winchester.

It might have been termed a "bankers' pool." But that wouldn't have stopped anything. Pools were bobbing around like corks in a whirlpool.

It might have been called a "bloc." But the antics of the jackass bloc in the United States Senate have created the impression that the primary function of a "bloc" is to stand in the way of anything worth while. Had it been named the "bankers' bloc," we should have pitched headlong into national insolvency. But when the ticker announced that a "bankers' consortium" had been formed, the effect was instantaneous. Sanity was restored by opposing fright with worse fright. No one knew what "consortium" meant, or what it would do to him. Upon the bears it had the same effect as the frantic warning of the itinerant showman: "The giasticutus is loose. For God's sake save yourselves."

As a preventive against panics in the future, let the "bankers' consortium" be preserved as a group in enduring bronze and placed over the entrance to the New York Stock Exchange with the legend, "The consortium will get you if you don't watch out."

ITALY AND TOURISTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reference to THE TIMES article "Rivalry for Tourists Cuts French Lead," I take issue with a statement regarding "the contempt felt by more violent Fascists for tourists." The Italian Government and all Italians are making every effort to have Italy retain its traditional favor with tourists, who are not only considered an important factor in economic life but have acquired a far loftier rôle inasmuch as they are still the best and most efficient instruments of international understanding and good feeling.

WIDESPREAD DESIRE TO LEARN LANGUAGES OF RECENT GROWTH

Development Carries Tremendous Significance The Bearing of Which on World Events Can Only Be Surmised

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Repeated mention in THE TIMES and elsewhere, gives emphasis to the fact that there is going on at this moment, all over the world, a steadily broadening acquaintance with languages other than one's own. This is true of all the leading countries, and particularly so, perhaps, in those whose natural speech is English; while, on the other hand—and notably through the wide extension of the motion picture and the radio—the English language itself is steadily gaining in currency all over the earth.

Important as all this is, it is highly interesting to note that it is only of comparatively recent date so far as the United States is concerned. As President Butler of Columbia University well points out in his annual report, "there was a time when music and drawing, together with French and German, were frankly classed and treated as outside and in addition to the ordinary and normal program of study. Although modern language instruction was offered in Columbia College at a very early period in its history, it disappeared entirely, and even as late as 1880 no undergraduate was offered instruction in French, Italian or Spanish, although he might get very limited instruction in German as a purely optional subject if he chose to do so."

Conversational Ability Needed.

Proceeding, Dr. Butler adds that it "often excites surprise in Europe and South America, and justly so, that even American university teachers, including scholars and men of science of consequence, who can read French or German or Italian or Spanish more or less stumblingly, are wholly lacking in the capacity to carry on conversation in any one of those tongues or to make themselves agreeable and interesting in a European or South American drawing room. This lamentable condition is perhaps in the way of being remedied, but that complete remedy will take some time is very obvious. There is no reason why the educated and the cultivated man should not have a speaking knowledge of at least two of the four chief modern European languages. To attain such knowledge is not difficult, and the addition which it makes to one's pleasure, to one's comfort and to one's satisfaction is literally enormous."

While, owing to the relative youth of our country as compared with European nations, it is natural that the attention given to the acquirement of foreign languages has been quite markedly more recent than was the case abroad, yet it is interesting to note that, even in England, the movement is not specially ancient.

Sir Charles Firth, in his "Modern Languages at Oxford, 1724-1929," just published by Oxford University, whimsically says: "A hundred and twenty years went by before the university attempted to provide any teaching of modern languages. Once more the initiative came from without, not from within, and the money which made the attempt possible was derived from an external source. The difference was that in the first case the money came from the government, in the second, from the gift of a private man."

Money Given by Sculptor.

This has reference to Sir Robert Taylor, who was born in 1714, was originally a sculptor and studied for some time in Rome. He was a pupil of Sir Henry Cheere, whose work is best known in Oxford by the statue of Christopher Codrington in the Library of All Souls. Taylor's success as a sculptor is attested by two monuments in Westminster Abbey.

The present widespread activity in the acquirement of foreign languages is therefore seen to be relatively recent, and the tremendous significance of the results can only be surmised as to scope and world importance.

There is an increasing feeling, in which I share, that there would be great wisdom in the holding of an international conference which, after due deliberation, should decide upon an international second language, to be taught in the schools of each country, side by side with the national language of that country.

Although there is, of course, some advocacy of using one of the manufactured languages, such as Volapük, Ido or Esperanto, for this purpose, there is a strong feeling that the decision should be made upon a purely engineering basis of "the greatest good to the greatest number," in which case the choice is felt to lie between English and French, with the probabilities in favor of the former.

Armed with this second language, it would be simple enough to conduct business or social contacts with perfect ease and readiness in any country whatsoever, whereas, at the present time, even those who know, let us say, English, French and German, are quite at a loss in Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Russia, Italy, Greece, Turkey, &c., not forgetting the countries of the Far East.

Of course the problem will be somehow worked out—indeed, all the world is at this moment engaged upon it, in one way or another. It is much to be desired that the present scattering though well-intentioned efforts might be systematized through international determination.

Surely it will be a great day for mankind when every man may speak freely and understandingly with his brother man, all over the globe. It will come.

KANSAS AND PROHIBITION

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Senator Capper, in his comprehensive defense of prohibition in THE TIMES of Jan. 19, used one word for two vastly different concepts and so proceeded to draw conclusions which would not have been possible if the confusion of ideas had been avoided. He stated, in effect, that prohibition in Kansas, after many years of non-observance, achieved definite success twenty-five years ago.

In this assumption he discovered a historical parallel to national prohibition and, at least by inference, contended that a considerable period of failure to enforce the law need not augur ultimate failure, but rather the contrary.

His whole argument as to the future of prohibition, however, in so far as its rests upon a comparison with the course of historical experience in Kansas, appears to me to collapse utterly when attention is drawn to the obvious fact that "prohibition" in Kansas prior to 1917 was not complete prohibition at all. The State bone-dry law was passed in 1917. Prior to that time, under "prohibition," any thirsty Kansan could without violating the law cause to be shipped to him at a modest price from any neighboring wet State liquor of any kind or in any quantity. "Prohibition," which according to the Senator's own testimony was so successful in Kansas long before the day of the Eighteenth Amendment, did not differ essentially as a liquor-distributing plan from government control as practiced in Canada today.

There were a few bootleggers in Kansas even in ante-bellum "prohibition" days, just as there are in Canada today, as Senator Capper says. Few persons who could earn even a few dollars a day at honorable work were to be found in that calling, however. The business could not have been very remunerative, since the bootleggers had to meet the competition of the good quality product which could be obtained by express from a neighboring State in a day or two. The bootlegger was generally in about the same category as the panhandler—furtive, beggarly, with a stock in trade of at most a few pints and no known place of business. His only outlet for his inferior product was the chance stroller down a dark street, whom he accosted in the same manner as the slinking vendors of allegedly stolen pinchbeck jewelry and shoddy furs now do. Is that the usual status of the bootlegger even in dry States today?

Liquor legally but not too easily obtainable loses its romance. It no longer is a boon which the salesman may hold out to the prospect. Its possession and consumption no longer confer distinction upon the callow adolescent. The liquor problem in Canada is now upon the promising road to solution on the same essential basis which Senator Capper found so successful in Kansas twenty-five years ago. Give the nation prohibition—Kansas style of the years prior to 1917—to replace our present national prohibition; then let's all get back to work!

TRANSIT PROBLEMS UP IN QUAKER CITY

Move to Eliminate the Mitten Interests From Control Nears Climax.

CITY MAY PAY $149,000,000

Court Hearings of Equity Suit Are Transformed Into Series of Round-Table Talks.

By LAWRENCE DAVIES.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 23.—Nearly two decades after Thomas E. Mitten came to Philadelphia, in response to appeals from banking interests, to rescue the city's harassed transit system, and little more than four months after Mr. Mitten's death, an energetic drive for the complete elimination of Mitten interests from transit affairs is rapidly approaching a climax.

The campaign began even before Mr. Mitten was drowned on his Pike County estate last Oct. 1. There had been months of bitter verbal warfare over an audit of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company's books. City Controller Will B. Hadley finally filed an equity suit against the Mitten corporations, not only demanding a complete audit but asking for the end of Mitten Management's control of the transit system.

Early this month hearings in the suit began before presiding Judge Harry S. McDevitt in Common Pleas Court. After a few sessions the court observed that things were "going from bad to worse" and the result was that the equity suit hearings were transformed into a series of round-table conferences which may mark the birth of a new transit policy for the city.

City May Condemn System.

Behind closed doors in Judge McDevitt's court room this week Mayor Mackey, Deputy Controller S. Davis Wilson and representatives of the City Council and the Mitten interests decided that four transit experts, one each for the four persons or groups represented, would be designated to formulate recommendations as to the future of the transportation system.

The way was thus opened for a readjusted relationship of the city and the rapid transit company that may involve the municipal condemnation of the entire transit system, the ousting of the Mitten interests as managers and the appointment of a new managerial organization. Suggestions in political and financial quarters that the move for a "re-deal" has the backing of interested banking and public utility corporations eager to gain a foothold in the Philadelphia transportation field have won credence in the last few days, despite denials from one or two of the concerns mentioned in the speculation.

The early days of the equity suit were spent in bickering of opposing counsel in revealing intricate phases of the financial relationships among the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, Mitten Management, Inc., Mitten Bank and Securities Corporation and other Mitten interests, including admissions that Thomas E. Mitten and his son and successor, Dr. A. A. Mitten, were sole owners of the stock of Mitten Management, Inc., which collected an annual fee of $1,100,000 for P. R. T. operation in adducing from the city's representatives on the P. R. T. board, Joseph S. McCulloch and Ernest T. Trigg, that they knew little of the company's operations, especially as to its financial transactions, and in warnings from the judge that the case must be tried in court and not in the newspapers.

This last admonition followed the release to the newspapers of the city's answer in the suit before Deputy Controller Wilson, chief of counsel, had turned the papers over to the court. After Mitten lawyers had described the answer as "vitriolic, defamatory, malicious and scandalous" Judge McDevitt received Mr. Wilson's apology and ordered him to file an amended paper with the "vitriolic comment" deleted.

Ellis Ames Ballard and associated counsel for the Mitten interests have taken the position that although the late Thomas E. Mitten dominated the transit company's affairs, his domination had brought the P. R. T. operation to "as high a plane of excellence as that attained by any surface street railway in any metropolitan area in the United States, and that the relations existing between the men and management had been brought to a degree of harmony unsurpassed in any other community." They have contended that the regulatory power and jurisdiction over the P. R. T. methods and classification of its accounts rests exclusively with the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Wilson Annoys Opponents.

The hearings have had their amusing incidents as well as the revelations that produced headlines for the Philadelphia papers. Deputy Controller Wilson, although not a full-fledged member of the bar, was authorized to prosecute the suit, but was assisted by Assistant City Solicitor John J. Elcock. Mr. Elcock one day protested to Judge McDevitt that Mr. Wilson paid no attention to him. All he had to do was to sit and twiddle his thumbs. The judge bade him find a comfortable seat and cease worrying about his inactivity, for "the public understands the situation."

Former Senator George Wharton Pepper, former Judge James Gay Gordon and other prominent lawyers associated with the Mitten side, have been by turns enraged, exasperated and caustically tolerant of Mr. Wilson's prosecution methods.

The round table conferences were agreed upon after the Deputy Controller had suggested to the court the city's purchase at par of the outstanding $30,000,000 of P. R. T. common stock, the $14,000,000 of preferred stock and the $25,000,000 of bonded indebtedness, as well as the condemnation of the underlying companies for $80,000,000. This estimate would bring the total price to $149,000,000.

Mr. Wilson pointed out that elimination of Mitten management would save a yearly fee of $1,100,000, and he figured that there would be saved also $8,000,000 which the company pays annually for such things as underlier rentals and $2,400,000 in annual dividend requirements. He also declared the $800,000 paid yearly to P. R. T. officials was excessive.

Judge McDevitt in agreeing to the conference plan called attention to the division of transit system ownership among the city, the P. R. T and the underlying companies. "The sooner we face the music and realize that somebody has got to take over all of this—and probably the city—and run it by competent management and executives the better off will all be," he said.

"Now, if we can solve that problem and put the transit system where it belongs, and pay a fair and reasonable price for it, then permit the city to employ competent persons to operate it, you will be infinitely better off than having a contract with P. R. T. and they with Mitten management and the M. B. S. C. and three or four other companies, where it is almost as impossible to unscramble them as it was to unscramble the railroads after the war. They have become so intertwined and interwoven now that I cannot put my finger on the line of demarkation in any of the evidence that has already been produced."

To many observers any agreement on terms for possible condemnation of the whole transit system seems far distant. Skepticism is the reigning state of mind. And in the meantime the clamor grows for speedy tunneling under the Schuylkill River in order to lay the West Philadelphia elevated tracks underground in preparation for the Pennsylvania Railroad improvements and for the extension of the city-owned Broad Street subway into the northeast section. Transit has become the urgent outstanding problem of the Mackey administration.

BILLS WOULD LIMIT GOVERNOR'S POWER

Kentucky Democratic Majority Seeks to Obtain Control of Appointments.

By ROBERT E. DUNDON.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LOUISVILLE, Jan. 22.—Bills aimed at the appointive and supervisory powers of Governor Flem D. Sampson, originating with members of the Democratic majority of the General Assembly of Kentucky, have been started on their legislative ways. Political onlookers, recalling the dubious course of previous efforts of a majority in the two houses to hamper a governor of the opposing party, predict that in the event any, or all of them, are enacted over the anticipated executive veto, the Court of Appeals will have the final word to say.

Three bills of the ripper variety have been introduced by Senator Allie W. Young, who was a strong supporter of Governor Sampson's policies two years ago. One of the bills would remove the State Highway Commission from executive control and vest the appointment in the President pro tem. of the Senate, Senator W. A. Yates, a Democrat. Another would bestow the selection of the members of the State Board of Charities and Corrections upon Auditor Clell Coleman, also a Democrat. The third would remove the Governor's appointive power over the State Tax Commission and make it a department under the Democratic Secretary of State, Miss Ella Lewis.

Critics of the Young bills declare that the Kentucky State Constitution expressly reserves to the Governor the right to fill vacancies, and assert that it is beyond the power of the Legislature to deprive him of these rights except by constitutional amendment submitted to a vote of the people.

The present Constitution resulted from the prolonged labors of a convention held almost forty years ago. Like all such documents it is the product of a thousand compromises. One of the things it does is to limit the salary to be paid any State officer to $5,000 a year, with the exception of the Governor, who gets $6,500. Numerous efforts have been made to increase this limit, especially for the members of the Court of Appeals, but the voters have always refused to sanction the change.

Although it seems not to be generally known, the Constitution reserves to the Governor a considerable power over and above his rights of appointment. He has the authority, when the two houses of the General Assembly fail to agree on question of adjournment, to adjourn the Legislature for four months. He also can call a special session of the Legislature at any time, and can outline the subjects which it may consider, and which must be adhered to.

Besides the trio of bills entered by Senator Young, there is another sweeping measure in the House, introduced by Representative L. Boone Hamilton, which would do away with the bi-partisan restrictions upon various boards and bureaus. The various women's clubs of the State are expected to oppose any return to the partisan system, especially as it applies to the eleemosynary institutions.

Senator Young, although the sponsor of three bills aimed at the Governor's power, appears not to be out of harmony with the Executive on at least one topic, for he has taken up the fight against chain stores suggested by the Governor in his message. The Senator is backing a bill, to be introduced in both houses, which he declares would obtain $2,000,000 annually from the proprietors of various chain enterprises, of which $1,000,000 would go toward retiring the State debt and $1,000,000 to the general expenditures fund.

Several States have passed chain store tax measures, most of which have been declared unconstitutional, but this apparently is not discouraging Senator Young. The consensus of opinion among observers at Frankfort is that the bill is likely to pass by a large majority in both houses.

Senator Gates Young of Owensboro has suggested as a means in increasing the State's revenues the passage of a bill to make the tax on whisky prescriptions $1 each, instead of 50 cents, as at present. He said that there are 3,000 physicians in the Commonwealth, each of whom is permitted to issue 400 whisky prescriptions annually. If all of the doctors should write their limit of prescriptions, this would mean 600,000 quarts a year, and would yield $1,200,000 in revenue.

So far no bill has been introduced putting a tax on the mint beds, which produce an essential ingredient of the far-famed juleps which Kentucky Colonels are still said, on occasion, to imbibe.

Mirbach Assassin Reported Shot.

Reports from Moscow recently printed in the European press tell of the execution by the G. P. U. of the man who played the leading part in the murder on July 6, 1918, of Count Mirbach, the German Minister in Moscow. At that time Blumkin, the reported victim of the Soviet secret police, was active in the ranks of the Left Social Revolutionaries, who were fighting the Bolshevist Government because of the latter's yielding to Germany at Brest-Litovsk and its favoring of the industrial workers at the cost of the peasants. After firing the shots that killed the German Minister and participating in an abortive uprising, Blumkin escaped and later made his peace with the Soviet authorities. He served in the Tcheka, the predecessor of the G. P. U., for several years. German Socialist papers are inclined to doubt the truth of Blumkin's execution, believing that the story may have been sent out as a blind.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, Jan. 19.—During the past two weeks the most sought-after man in Porto Rico has been Senator Santiago Iglesias, Socialist and labor leader of the island, and those who have been most interested in winning his favor are those who for thirty years or more have represented elements or political parties antagonistic to almost everything he has advocated. The change is due in small measure to a new appraisal of Senator Iglesias, with the general verdict that he is more conservative than he has in the past been painted, but more particularly to the fact that with his aid old leaders may be supplanted or others may gain a more favorable footing in the island's public life.

While he was still en route from New York to San Juan, Senator Iglesias received a radio message from Dr. Antonio R. Barcelo, president of the Senate since its organizations seventeen years ago, seeking an interview, thereby establishing a modern instance of the mountain going to Mohammed. Soon after the Senator's arrival Dr. Barcelo was closeted with him for several hours. How satisfactory the interview was may not be known exactly for some time, but the impression grows that Dr. Barcelo will not continue as president of the Senate when it meets next month. Some of his followers seem reconciled to this situation and already talk of the necessity for a comeback movement in the election of 1932. Dr. Barcelo himself is described by some persons close to him as being more or less aware of what they consider to be the inevitable. He won his most sweeping victory in a campaign in which his advocacy of independence for Porto Rico was the chief issue. Senator Iglesias for three decades worked first for American citizenship and always for a closer association of the island with the United States.

Political Agreement Seen.

On the other hand, this past week R. Cuevas Zequeira, president of the reorganized Alianza, has also taken counsel with Senator Iglesias, in the course of which it is generally admitted that a possible working agreement between the Alianza and the Coalition, of which Mr. Iglesias and his followers form a part, was discussed. The statement issued later by Cuevas Zequeira was not sufficiently specific to indicate that if an understanding had been reached and agreement had been entered into. The Alianza which Cuevas Zequeira heads is composed of island elements, which in the past have been just as strongly opposed to all that Senator Iglesias has stood for as is Dr. Barcelo and his Unionist party. It is made up largely of landowners and those who normally would be classed as capitalistic. Their present hatred of Dr. Barcelo has for the time caused them to seek an ally in Senator Iglesias. With support from Iglesias, Barcelo could retain the power he has so long enjoyed. The possibility of a reconciliation between Barcelo and his loyal Unionist followers and the Alianza is so remote as scarcely to have been considered. Yet both groups, despite the fact they have sought his aid, are inherently antipathetic to Iglesias and his following.

The conference between Senator Iglesias and Cuevas Zequeira here supplemented conversations between Resident Commissioner Felix Cordova Davila and Mr. Iglesias in Washington recently. The resident commissioner is known to desire the retirement of Senator Barcelo from public life, certainly from his present position. He is credited with going so far as even to promise his own commissionership to Iglesias, should he desire it, in return for Iglesias's support in the retirement of Barcelo. The latter has charged as much and Senator Iglesias has merely said that the report is not wholly correct.

For the present Iglesias is surrendering none of the advantage of his position by making promises for the future.

Court Gets Mayoralty Row.

In the meantime, new political alignments may be brought about as the result of a case in court involving the filling of a vacancy caused by the resignation of the Mayor of Caguas, chosen in the last election by the Alianza. Cagues has for years been a strong Unionist town, stanchly supporting Barcelo. To insure one of the Barcelo supporters getting the office the matter has been taken into court. It probably will be decided within six weeks.

A somewhat similar case is pending in Mayaguez, where a municipal Assemblyman retired. Mayaguez at present is controlled by the Alianza. The vacancy normally would be filled by an appointee of the Governor, in the event the Assembly did not act by naming a man from the same political party. To this Senator Barcelo objected on the ground that his party was a part of the Alianza at the time of the last election. The appointment has not been made and is pending a decision of the Caguas case.

Should the court decided that the Unionists are still entitled to recognition as a party, Senator Barcelo would gain much of the prestige for which he is contending. If on the other hand it is decided that the Unionist party ceased to exist when it became a part of the Alianza, the Alianza will by decree become the technical although not actual majority party. It is predicted that whichever side wins will have an accretion of members.

Governor Roosevelt has delayed making appointments pending the court decision. To certain appointments urged by leaders he has stated that a matter of law is concerned, and that the government, to be fair and not to prejudge the matter, will await the court decree.

Approval of the appointment of Manuel V. Domenech as insular treasurer has been assured by the announcement of Senator Iglesias that he will support Domenech. At the time the appointment was announced there were indications that the Socialist groups would oppose confirmation on the ground that Mr. Domenech, as president of the Chamber of Commerce and otherwise, had been too closely associated with the capitalist class. Senator Iglesias, however, since his return has announced another view and there is every indication that his judgment will be accepted.

Legal Comment on Current Events

Pennsylvania Action Balks Reciprocity in Taxation Practice, but Decisions Would Seem to Be Against Procedure—Dramatic Plots Carry No Exclusive Rights.

Edited by Current Events Committee of American Association of Legal Authors.

Reciprocity Strikes a Snag.

The State of Pennsylvania recently engaged counsel in New York to recover from the estates of New York residents who died between July 1, 1925, and March 12, 1928, transfer taxes on shares of stock held by such decedents in Pennsylvania corporations, although such shares have already been transferred without the requirement of waivers or the payment or claim of transfer taxes thereupon.

The Legislature of New York, in 1925, added what was known as Article 10A to the tax law going into effect July 1 of that year. Therein were incorporated provisions to the effect that "the tax imposed by this article in respect of personal property shall not be payable (1) if the transferor is a resident of a State or Territory of the United States which at the time of the transfer did not impose a transfer tax or death tax of any character in respect of personal property within said State or Territory on residents of this State, or (2) if the laws of the State or Territory of residence of the transferor at the time of the transfer contained a reciprocal provision under which non-residents were exempted from transfer taxes or death taxes of every character in respect of personal property providing the State or Territory of residence of such non-residents allowed a similar exemption to residents of the State or Territory of residence of such transferor."

Under the reciprocity provisions of this act, many States having similar provisions in their tax laws, allowed shares of stock in corporations organized under their laws and owned by the estates of New York residents to be transferred without the issuance of waivers or the payment of transfer taxes. Among such was the State of Pennsylvania.

The New York statute of 1925, however, was, in 1927, declared to be unconstitutional for the reason that its taxing rates were deemed discriminatory against non-residents of New York (245 N. Y. 649). Thereupon the New York Legislature, on March 12, 1928, re-enacted Article 10-A, omitting the unconstitutional features and providing for reciprocity retroactively for the period covered by the statute which was declared unconstitutional (Chap. 330, laws of 1928). But although pursuant to such statute, the State of New York grants exemption to the estates of residents of States coming within the reciprocity provisions of the 1925 law (226 App. Div. 864), the State of Pennsylvania has taken the position that it will not recognize the retroactive reciprocity provisions of the 1928 law, and will only grant exemption to estates of New York residents who died on or after the date of the curative act, namely, March 12, 1928. Hence the employment of counsel in New York for the purpose of collecting transfer taxes from the estates of New York residents who died prior to that date on shares of stock held by them in Pennsylvania corporations, and hence the receipt of letters from a New York attorney representing the State of Pennsylvania by the representatives of such estates requesting the payment of transfer taxes based upon transactions considered by such representatives to have been long since settled and closed.

Now that Pennsylvania has spilled the beans of reciprocity, New York may adopt a corresponding course and make similar claims upon the estates of Pennsylvania residents who died between July 1, 1925, the date of the first reciprocity statute, and March 12, 1928, the date when the act providing for retroactive reciprocity became effective.

Taxation as Limited Territorially.

Though court proceedings are hinted at, no action has yet been brought in the courts of New York, State or Federal, by the attorney retained by the State of Pennsylvania against representatives of the estates of New York decedents who departed this life prior to March 12, 1928, based upon transfers of stock in Pennsylvania corporations. If and when such suits are instituted in New York, the courts will be asked to apply the rule that tax laws have no extraterritorial jurisdiction, neither the "full faith and credit" clause of the Federal Constitution nor interstate comity having any bearing upon this particular question.

In this connection, the case of a Colorado resident who died in New York a few years ago will be remembered. His will was probated and his estate was administered in Colorado, that State, under its tax laws, assessing a transfer tax of more than $55,000. Being unable to collect the tax within its own jurisdiction, an action was instituted against the executors and legatees in the New York Supreme Court. When the case reached the New York Court of Appeals (232 N. Y. 71), that court, in holding that the action could not be maintained, declared the rule to be "universally recognized that the revenue laws of one State have no force in another." The same conclusion was reached in an action ultimately carried to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The treasurer of a county in Indiana had brought an action in the Southern District of New York to collect a tax claimed to be due under the laws of that State against the representatives of the estate of a resident of Indiana. Circuit Judge Manton declared that to sustain such an action in a New York court, whether Federal or State, would be "repugnant to the settled principles of private international law, which preclude one State from acting as collector of taxes for a sister State, and from enforcing its penal or revenue laws as such."

The Theft of Ideas.

Larceny, broadly speaking, consists of the taking of an article of value with intent to deprive the true owner of his property—a definition comprehensive enough to include the purloining of ideas. Though the charge of the theft of ideas or theme or language is frequently brought by one author against another, it is doubtful whether any criminal prosecution has ever been based on the particular form of misappropriation of property known as plagiarism, or whether such a prosecution if brought could be sustained. Resort is had, rather, to the civil side of the courts with a suit for damages; and as authors almost invariably take the precaution to copyright their work, the alleged imitator is usually sued for damages for infringement. Of course, if a person should copy the manuscript of another or a published story and sell it as his own, he would be liable criminally for a fraud upon the purchaser.

Some months ago the points of resemblance and difference between "Abie's Irish Rose" and an alleged imitation entitled "The Cohens and the Kellys" were threshed out at great length in the Federal District Court in New York in a suit brought by Miss Anne Nichols, author of "Abie's Irish Rose." A later case of this character, also involving a successful play, was the suit brought by Miss Katherine Burke Sherman, author of "Flags and Flowers," against R. C. Sherriff, author of "Journey's End." Miss Sherman alleged that the plot, the "essentials of drama" and "much of the dialogue, and the plaintive, poignant sentiment" of "Journey's End" were "snatched" from her work.

It is as easy to formulate the general principles of law governing this class of cases as it is difficult to apply them to a particular situation. The late Circuit Judge Hough (11 Fed. 2d 693) pointed out that "the copyright law, like all statutes, is made for plain people; and that copying, which is infringement, must be something 'which ordinary observation would cause to be recognized as having been taken from the work of another.'" This was a case in which the producers and one who claimed to be the author of a play called "Polly Preferred" were sued for infringement by a Russian author of a dramatic manuscript entitled "Personality." In dismissing the suit, Judge Hough conceded that the two plays possessed in common the same "incomplete skeleton," but observed, carrying out the simile suggested, that it was with "real difficulty that the flesh and blood, the incidental, yet essential adornment and trimming of the plays can be cut away to show similarity between a few bones."

No Exclusive Right to a Plot.

The law extends protection to authors, mainly with a view to inducing them to give their ideas to the public, so that they may be added to the intellectual store of mankind, accessible to all the people to be used for the intellectual advancement of the world. As was said by Lord Mansfield in an English case, "We must take care to guard against two extremes equally prejudicial: The one that men of ability, who have employed their time for the service of the community, may not be deprived of their just merits and the reward of their ingenuity and labor; the other, that the world may not be deprived of improvements, nor the progress of the arts be retarded. The act that secures copyright to authors guards against the piracy of the words and sentiments, but it does not prohibit writing on the same subject."

It has accordingly been emphasized by the courts that no one has an exclusive right to a conception or a plot. "If an author," said Circuit Judge Manton of New York—in a case in which the originality of the successful play "Cheating Cheaters" was challenged by the authors of a drama known as "Wedding Presents"—"by originating a new arrangement or form of expression of certain ideas or conceptions," could withdraw these ideas or conceptions from the stock of materials to be used by other authors, each copyright would narrow the field of thought open for development and exploitation. * * * Other authors have a right to exploit the facts, experiences, field of thought and general ideas, provided that they do not substantially copy a concrete form in which the circumstances and ideas have been developed, arranged and put into shape." In other words, it is not the substance of a literary work or artistic production which is the subject of copyright, but the treatment or manner of presenting or illustrating the theme. A work is original, as Justice Brandeis of the United States Supreme Court recently has said, if it presents "some new collocation of visible or audible points—of lines, colors, sounds or words" (248 U. S. 215).

The central theme of "Abie's Irish Rose," for example—intermarriage between Jews and Catholics, family opposition, reconciliation between the families after the birth of a child—was found by the court to be "common property in the public domain." It had been used in a number of plays before Miss Anne Nichols turned it to profit in "Abie's Irish Rose." The court found that Miss Nichols' success was not due to the mere idea or plot, but to her "genius in the manner in which she has presented the plot." Having paid her this compliment, the court proceeded to dismiss her suit.

CLOCK LACKING WORKS WILL RUN BY OWN TICKS

Electric Device Will "Kick" Pendulum of New Timepiece for the Bureau of Standards.

WASHINGTON (AP).—A clock which will run itself from its own "ticks" is to be added to the science of time measurement.

The device, which will tick off almost perfect seconds, is being built by R. E. Gould, chief of the time section of the Bureau of Standards.

It is a clock without works, an odd contrivance which will register time signals accurate to a ten-thousandth of a second. It will be used for timing research work where correct, short intervals are necessary.

The only link in common with ordinary time-measuring devices is its pendulum, which differs in that it has a concave mirror on the pendulum rod and a metal arm projecting from one side.

A beam of light, played on the mirror, is reflected to a small photoelectric cell. A hood shrouds the cell, with only a narrow slot to admit the beam of light once for each to-and-fro motion of the pendulum.

The cell, sensitive to light, is activated by the flashes and the impulse is sent through an amplifier to a telegraph relay which clicks off the passing seconds.

The pendulum, dying down in its swinging motion, becomes less and less accurate and Mr. Gould has added the metallic sidearm as part of the scheme to keep it constant in its period.

The rod, as the pendulum swings to one side, enters a small coil. As the "ticks" are registered by the relay, current is fed to a contact device which is patterned to allow electricity to flow into the coil often enough to maintain the steady swing of the pendulum.

The current magnetizes the coil, which transmits a magnetic impulse to the bar and "kicks" the pendulum enough to make the swing constant.

The clock, when completed, will be equipped to send accurate signals throughout the laboratories of the Bureau of Standards.

CLEVELAND STIRRED BY HOPKINS OUSTER

By N. R. HOWARD.

the caucus had forecast, the motion to oust the manager was passed, 14 to 11. This vote was taken before the greatest crowd that ever packed the Council hall, and several thousands of citizens, most of them aroused by the protest mass meeting, were turned away by the police.

Mr. Hopkins entered a formal demand for the charges against him and for a hearing, and the last chapter of the ouster was written this week when the Council, after preferring the charges, held a so-called hearing at which Mr. Hopkins replied. More than 1,000 persons attended this hearing, and gave Mr. Hopkins's valedictory an ovation.

Charges Mysteriously Appear.

There was a certain amount of horseplay and cynicism about the formal charges. The coalition majority appointed a special committee to frame them and this committee held two highly informal meetings and adjourned with the charges unformulated. At a special Council session to hear the report of the committee, a long indictment was mysteriously materialized, the authorship of which could not be discovered. It was said to have been traced by minority Council members to offices of lawyer friends of the Maschke organization. Briefly, the charges were:

1. That Hopkins, as city manager, failed to detect rascality and graft in the notorious $83,000 playground land purchase of December, 1928, for whose $30,000 graft former Councilman L. G. Schooley went to the Ohio Penitentiary and in connection with which former Councilman William E. Potter and City Clerk Fred W. Thomas were placed on trial and committed. All three were Republicans.

2. That the manager had pursued a policy of allowing the municipal light plant to lag, physically and in policies.

3. That Manager Hopkins demonstrated "incapacity" for harmonious cooperation with the Council.

4. That he made too many speeches before civic organizations, and advocated giving the city manager veto power over Council legislation.

5. That Mr. Hopkins said of a rival politician, "My ancestors were helping to found the Republican party in this country when his were still roaming the plains of Bohemia," and that this proved Hopkins to be "un-American."

6. That Mr. Hopkins "permitted city officials" to violate the civil service requirements by indulging in political campaigning.

Two of the three Cleveland newspapers which helped to fight the Maschke ouster movement devoted columns of news and editorial space to dissecting the absurdity of these charges, but it remained for the deposed manager, in his valedictory at this week's hearing, to dispose of them.

Hopkins Answers Charges.

Mr. Hopkins's statement, which was broadcast, took him nearly an hour and a half to read. Its theme was that the gas franchise fight he had made was the known source of his whole difficulty; that he had been told by City Clerk Thomas in 1928 that the Council was ready to pass the higher rates, and was advised to ratify them, and that all his disagreements with the Council dated from his stand on the gas case. That the new Council would never dare to lose the gas fight he had started was almost the last sentence of his statement.

As to the specified "charges," Mr. Hopkins, in summary, said:

1. That, in the playground deal, he had subscribed to the judgment of former Councilman Potter that the $83,000 price was sound. "Certainly," he said, "the city charter does not impose upon the city manager the obligation to consider all councilmen as potential thieves."

2. That requests for policy as to the city light plant had lain idle before Council committees for nearly two years; and that the plant's record of increased business, capacity, and extension spoke the absurdity of the committee's charge.

3. That, as to "incapacity" for cooperation with the City Council, the Republican Council slate had gone to the voters successfully for re-election in 1925 and 1927 with the appeal, "We gave you Hopkins, and he has demonstrated performance," that his forcing the Council to go his way on the gas issue had met with success in the courts and would save the consumers of Cleveland $2,000,000.

Mr. Hopkins disdained to answer Charge No. 4 specifically.

5. That his remark about the rival politician had been distorted from a "purely personal remark about an individual who was undertaking to make political capital by personal abuse and slander of a man whose official position precluded him from defending himself."

6. That if any campaigning not inspired by the leaders of the Maschke majority was done by civil service officials it was done to save the city manager charter from attacks finally joined in by the Republican city organization.

Mr. Hopkins's final words might almost be incorporated into standard texts on American politics as a view by a practical, party-subscribing optimist. He said:

"I have spoken in the hope of fixing your attention and that of the community on something more important, and that is the right of the people who elected you to have their business transacted openly and wholly in their interest; their right to insist that no one in the city service shall have any master save the people who pay him. The secret caucus is a menace to the city and a menace most of all to those who participate in it. Public business is always badly done in the dark. Good government cannot live in private offices and hotel rooms.

"History teaches that assassination has always been the instinctive recourse of reaction. It also teaches that no real movement was ever stopped by the removal of a man. In many cases, assassination has been the accelerator of progress and the man removed has served his cause best by being sacrificed for it. In this case it ought to be clear now that you have not by my removal killed the movement to get politics out of the City Hall. You have not destroyed this form of government. You have only aroused its old friends and made new friends for it."

RUSSIA KEEPS BAN ON EXPORTING GRAIN

Soviet Plans to Feed Own People Better Before Boosting Balance of Trade.

Despite the remarkably favorable result of the grain collections in 1929, which enabled the Soviet Government to pay back some 1,500,000 metric tons of wheat and rye it had been compelled to borrow from the army's "iron reserves" last Spring and Summer and to build up a big stock for the ordinary provisioning of the cities and industrial centres, the decision made earlier in the business year of 1929-30 against exporting grain still stands, says the Moskauer Rundschau of Jan. 5. In reporting that the Soviet authorities had decided to increase the bread ration of the industrial workers by 12 per cent for the second half of the business year—that is, on April 1—the government's German-language organ emphasized the State's determination to look after the needs of the masses of the people before exporting foodstuffs.

The rations of the workers in a number of cities are to be brought up to the level obtaining in Moscow and Leningrad, and the local authorities in the villages are instructed to see to it that the poorer peasants and rural proletarians in general get more food. To compensate for the reduction of grain acreage in the Central Asian district due to the efforts of the Soviet Government to speed up the production of cotton, the State is to increase the grain allowance there by 80,000 tons—about 25 per cent.

An idea of the food situation in Russia may be obtained from the October decree by the Trade Commissariat of the Soviet Union laying down the official rations purchasable in Leningrad by the presentation of food cards. The working population is divided into four classes, the first embracing manual workers and allied groups belonging to cooperatives; the second, manual workers not belonging to cooperatives; the third, non-manual workers belonging to cooperatives, and the fourth, non-manual workers not belonging to cooperatives and members of workers' families. The following table gives the daily bread and meat ration for each class of workers and the monthly ration of other staples in grams (a kilogram of 2 1-5 pounds contains 1,000 grams), except for vegetable oils and eggs, which are reckoned by litres and by the piece, respectively.

	Class 1.	Class 2.	Class 3.	Class 4.
Bread	800	800	400	400
Meat	200	200	100	100
Butter and fat	600	500	500	300
Vegetable oils	¾	½	½	½
Porridge, &c	3,000	2,000	1,500	750
Macaroni	600	300	300	150
Herrings	800	800	500	250
Sugar	1,500	1,500	1,500	1,000
Tea	60	50	50	25
Eggs	10	10	10	—

The supplementary monthly allowances for children under 12 years of age are 400 grams of butter and fat, 750 of porridge, 500 of sugar and 20 eggs.

To be interesting—keep up-to-date

FOR those who would be abreast of modern subjects—who would discuss them intelligently and understandingly—the Extension School of Adult Education offers courses in the Psychology of Art—Governmental Steps towards World Peace—Oriental Civilization—Landmarks in European Philosophy—What the Modern Writers Are Doing—The American Scene in Poetry—How to Enjoy the Theater—The Modern Novel—A Survey of Symphonic Music—France and Its Literature—Problems of Child Welfare—Spain and Its Literature.

In addition to this group, and of especial importance, these courses will be given:

Literature of Northern Europe (Scandinavian—Russian—German).

The Intellectual Life of Germany as A World Influence; with especial reference to the contemporary period. Lecturer—Professor Camillo von Klenze.

Introduction to Modern Art A consideration of its significance and principles. Lecturer—Leo Katz.

Population The population problem of the world and of the United States in particular. Lecturer—Professor Henry Pratt Fairchild.

Just one hour and twenty minutes each week, from February 10th to May 17th, will be devoted to lectures in these important fields. Registration will be from February 3d to February 10th in the main building, 32 Waverly Place. Lectures begin February 10th. Send to the Extension School of Adult Education for new bulletin fully describing all the interesting once-a-week lecture courses, and where they will be given.

BUSINESS

So long as busy men want to save time, so long as intelligent personal assistance commands respect and salary—just so long there will be vocational opportunity in secretarial practise—in the taking of dictation, the typing of documents, in the filing of business papers, and in the handling of appointments and other personal detail.

Competent secretaries and stenographers are hard to find—the vocational market is under-supplied. There is ample vocational opportunity in this work for both men and women.

Pace Institute provides stenographic and secretarial instruction of an intensive and distinctive type. The work is progressively arranged by semesters, each of which is a complete unit. Each class is limited as to number of students.

Early 1930 classes in the School of Secretarial Practise of the Institute open as follows:

Day School
- Beginners—Monday, Feb. 17, at 9:30 A. M.

Evening School
- Beginners—Monday, Jan. 27, at 6 P. M.
- Continuation Studies—Monday, Feb. 17, at 6 P. M.
- Shorthand Speed Class—Wednesday, Feb. 5, at 6 P. M.
- Advanced Secretarial Duties—Tuesday, Feb. 11, at 6 P. M.

Bulletin outlining courses will be cheerfully supplied on request. Telephone Barclay 8200. Pace Institute, 225 Broadway, New York.

'WHAT,' SPAIN ASKS, 'ARE WE TO DO NOW?'

De Rivera's Announcement That He Will Retire Rouses Questions as to Future.

ALFONSO A LEADING FACTOR

King Would Supplant Dictator if He Could Find a Safe Man to Take the Place.

By FRANK L. KLUCKHOHN.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Jan. 13.—Now that General Miguel Primo de Rivera has announced that he plans to abandon his dictatorship in something more than six months and less than a year, leaving behind him not the permanent government by a King's Council as he planned in 1929 by attempting to frame a constitution frankly foreign to the tempo of the times even in Spain, but with some unannounced plan of government, the question "Where is this ultimately going to lead us?" is being asked with insistence in political circles.

In order to understand the reasons for this query, momentous because it is potent with possibilities, it is necessary to go back something over six years.

It is September, 1923. The Moroccan War has been a fiasco. Since 1912, when a Franco-Spanish treaty gave this land to Spain, millions of men have been poured into a rocky, unfertile country. Spain is full of men out of work, men who want bread. Therefore they are ugly and up to anything. Murder is rife in Barcelona. Parliament has deteriorated to an animated debating society filled with powerful and corrupt men, who care more about plunder than the fate of a nation.

Communists in Ascendency.

Communists have won the elections in the important manufacturing centre of Bilbao and throughout the three Basque provinces. Syndicalism is growing like a night fungus in the North, involving workers and miners. The Red flag is not entirely hidden. In Madrid Communists throw moderate Socialists out of control of the important General Federation of Workers.

The country is ill from Parliamentary graft and mismanagement, and the murmuring of dissatisfaction grows audible louder and swells into a roar of danger. "Why," it is asked, "are we out of food? Merely because out of vanity our country wants to maintain its hold on a barren land of mountains. Thousands of our sons are in danger, are being wounded and murdered. Twenty thousand under General Silvestre alone were cut to pieces by the Arabs in one battle in 1921. Who is responsible for this carnage, by the way?"

A Parliamentary investigation is begun. There is no doubt at whom the investigation is aimed. King Alfonso has disregarded the military command consistently and given orders directly to the Generals at the front.

Letters reached the Ambassadors in Rome, Paris and London signed with a comparatively unimportant name, that of the Governor of Barcelona, who with the assistance of the Industrialists, has smashed communism in that city. The signature is that of Primo de Rivera. "If you hear of a military revolt in Spain soon and there is no news for several days, do not be alarmed. It is a revolt from above."

Then the Coup d'Etat.

The Ambassadors do not notify the Minister of State in Madrid as they should do. Then on Sept. 13 there is the coup d'état and a new force, the dictatorship, is projected across the political horizon.

Alfonso, just before its start, said: "This is the last card of the monarchy." And this was the beginning of over six years of what in the final unprejudiced analysis must be classified as a successful rule. One, which, while it has lasted, has stabilized affairs. Rivera, who is known in Spain as the Marques de Estella, commented briefly when he took the government's leadership, the army then, as it is today, his leading supporter. "I shall be in power only six weeks to iron out the present troubles."

Now, not only his announcement, but the force of events is leading him toward his exit. It is true that he may be unable to make it gracefully and be forced to stay in power. Nevertheless the questions "How far is this going?" "Have the last few years changed the situation?" are natural ones in view of his statements and past events. They need not necessarily be alarming. The stage has changed a great deal.

One fact, which may or may not be significant, is this, the Cortes were not in session when the coup took place and have not been prorogued since. Their decision on the Morocco affair was never given. Perhaps the strongest thing that has been uttered in Spain in late years was a remark by an ex-Minister of Spain in an Atenae club discussion, a remark, which has since been published along with other speeches, made in the club.

"When the Cortes are reconvened they may say to the King, 'you had no right to dissolve us. We in our turn feel no duty toward you,'" was the remark.

Primo de Rivera has shown himself an opportunist. The people wanted work. "Well and good," he said, "we will build road systems. We will increase the prestige of the country by setting up expositions, which will keep laborers busy."

Today there is probably not another country in the world where one sees such swarms of men and youngsters on the highways making "big ones out of little ones," to use a common expression.

The danger is obvious, however. Stop building these roads which have made the strike curve thin out to a wan shadow on the government's graphs, and will not unemployment again be rife? This is another question generally asked.

Magnificent But Costly.

On the debit side of the ledger are the expositions. They have been magnificent, but Barcelona looks ahead with a sour face to paying for them for fifty years. One hears some ugly remarks in the Catalan capital. Always proud, always, unlike Spain, industrious, speaking her own language, Catalan with her up-to-date outlook may further complicate a twisted situation if the end of the dictatorship is not quietly successful and leaves no frayed ends to be jerked.

Spain's people live in a healthier, better atmosphere today, however, than for many centuries, or perhaps at any time in the past. If the dictatorship could continue indefenitely the country as a whole might benefit.

But it cannot, realizes it cannot, and thinks that this is as good a time as any to go, particularly since Primo's associates say that his decisions are not as clear and vigorous as they once were, and the country at large is beginning to notice that this is true. Primo has swayed with the wind in his policies and personally is regarded generally as a "good fellow." He has no constructive policy like Mussolini and has not attempted to force people to do anything but leave his government alone and lamentably, in their eyes, pay their taxes. There are fewer personal restrictions in Spain than in England.

Fine telephone service, electric lights, all modern conveniences have opened up Spain. Her unhealthy filth has been erased with a fine sanitary program, but the Spaniard has taken these things as gifts. He has failed to work for them. Growth of demand has far outstripped production.

Spain's adverse trade balance, which has increased tremendously within the past two years, has affected the currency seriously and shown that in the long run modernization after all may be a "mala cosa," a bad thing. The people's appetite for automobiles and all the trifling luxuries of life has increased, but the Spanish will to work has not. Useless clerks, a half-dozen porters lounging in front of every office, hordes of useless night watchmen and an army actually larger by 1,000 rank and file than that of the prosperous United States, work to more than offset the nourishing of domestic industries with the highest tariff in Europe.

Graft Charges Made.

The charge that Primo is running an 1890 Tammany Hall graft in the awarding of contracts is often heard; graft in the running of monopolies. Military and economic favorites are supposed to prosper, but then graft is not an unknown thing in other governments, and it is a heritage in Spain. If it exists now, it is certainly no worse than that of the old régimes, and has something to show the country.

It is true that the government has gone five billions of pesetas in debt, but Minister of Finance Calvo Sotelo has announced a surplus for 1929 over all expenditures, including those that used to be shoved into the convenient sink hole of extraordinary debts, and claims this surplus is large enough to pay back the debt contracted over a fairly short period of years.

Reformers who insist the government should provide more schools for poor children, now over 50 per cent illiterate, failed to gauge the situation in Spain. Spanish children are not crying in the streets for education. No sad stories are told about them. In the industrial North, in fact, where the schools are excellent, they are by no means full.

But if the greedy politicians get into power again and allow the country to go to pot, as history shows they always have in the past, hunger is likely to appear again. And hunger is a sharp enemy of many reactionary things.

It is understood that Marques de Estella would like to leave the country with a body elected in some safely representative way but with a stricter check from above than was allowed under the Constitution of 1876, thus assuring greater stability. If he cannot put this across, the dictatorship may continue temporarily, or it may not.

The keynote to this is Alfonso, himself, who does not like all responsibility but refuses to remain in the position occupied by the King of Italy. He likes to put in his oar when he wants to do so. He can and probably would supplant Rivera if he could find some one to take his place and insure the crown's solidarity.

The events of the next few months may give an indication of where the road is going to lead.

Runs 300 Years Without Strike.

STOCKHOLM, (AP).—Three hundred years of production without a day lost through labor trouble is the record claimed by the Overum works, manufacturers of farm implements at several plants on the east coast.

The Kaiser Writes a Letter

February Current History contains facsimile of a letter just written in English in longhand by the former Kaiser in which he denounces the Potsdam Council story as "an abominable lie" and gives circumstantial denial to the entire "legend." His letter was evoked by an article which appeared in December issue. It is the most definite statement on the question yet made.

CANAL CAN CARE FOR MUCH MORE TRAFFIC

Panama Statistics Do Not Bear Out Statements That Limit Is Being Reached.

CAPACITY ESTIMATES VARY

But Waterway Is Good for at Least Thirty-three Years—More Locks Would Extend Life.

By C. H. CALHOUN.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BALBOA HEIGHTS, Canal Zone, Jan. 14.—Statements during the past year that the Panama Canal is crowded and that traffic will exceed the capacity of the canal at an early date are not borne out by figures showing the increase in cargoes handled during the last five years, and the estimates made here of future increases in traffic as related to the ultimate capacity of the waterway.

Taking as a basis the low estimate of traffic increase, the canal with its present capacity can take care of commerce for the next forty-eight years. Using the high estimate, it will be thirty-three years before capacity is reached. With the enlargement of the canal by the construction of an additional set of locks, the time when the ultimate capacity may be reached must be postponed until the end of the present century on a conservative estimate, and it may be extended well into the next.

Although there was an increase in 1929 of 2,048,912 tons in the quantity of cargo passing through the canal as compared to 1928, the average annual increase for the last five years has been 1,111,631 tons. Since 1926 the increase has been constant, 1925 having shown a decrease of 2,190,857 tons over 1924 due to unusually heavy oil shipments in the latter year. Following the low mark for the five-year period of 23,701,277 tons in 1925 there was an increase of 3,884,774 tons, with a total of 27,586,051 tons in 1926. An increase of 1,516,487 tons was recorded in 1927 with a total of 29,102,538 tons for the year. The increase in 1928 was only 299,043 tons, with a total of 29,401,581 tons. The increase of 2,048,912 tons in 1929 set a new high record of 31,450,493 tons.

Nowhere Near Capacity.

It is estimated that the present capacity of the canal is between sixty and sixty-five million tons a year. That tonnage could be handled without expensive delay to shipping and without any addition to the present plant other than some additional equipment and the increased water supply that will be provided by the Madden Dam and reservoir now being constructed.

A careful study made in 1927, using Panama and Suez traffic records and the growth of world commerce as a basis led to the conclusion that the probable growth of traffic through the Panama Canal would be about 7,000,000 tons per decade. If that estimate proves correct then it will be forty-eight years before traffic will reach the present maximum capacity. Assume that this estimated increase is too low and place the figure at the fairly safe estimate of a million tons a year and it will be more than thirty-three years before the present capacity is reached.

By the construction of a third set of locks, which is entirely feasible, the capacity of the canal can be increased to at least 112,000,000 tons a year at an average of 6,400 tons per lockage, and to 122,000,000 tons at an average of 7,000 tons per lockage, according to Colonel Harry Burgess, present Governor of the Canal.

Writing in the Military Engineer, Colonel Burgess pointed out that for the last five fiscal years the average number of tons per lockage, Panama Canal measurement, was 5,000, but this average could have been greatly increased, had traffic conditions demanded, by the method of tandem lockages.

"Heretofore," he continued, "tandem lockages have been limited to ships whose aggregate length is 750 feet, but it is practical to increase this limiting figure to 800 feet or more, although the equipment of towing locomotives would have to be increased. Even with the present equipment the limiting aggregate length can be increased to 770 feet.

"A study of the traffic for the calendar year 1928 shows that 6,519 commercial ships passed through Gatun locks with 5,990 lockages, and that there would have been required only 4,594 lockages with a limiting aggregate length of 800 feet—no ship being held over more than a few hours. This would have increased the average Panama Canal tons per lockage to about 6,400 tons."

The cost of a third set of locks has been estimated roughly at from $75,000,000 to $100,000,000. No estimate has been made in detail, the investigations so far having been limited merely to the determination of the practicability of constructing a third set of locks alongside the existing double flight. Colonel Burgess considers that in the interests of economy the construction should be spread over a period of ten years, building first the new lock at Gatun, which is the neck of the bottle through which canal traffic is controlled. Then the machinery and working force could be transferred to Miraflores and finally to Pedro Miguel.

Taking a $100,000,000 cost as a basis, Colonel Burgess estimates that the cost for interest on the investment, depreciation and maintenance would be approximately $5,000,000 a year. "It seems clear, therefore," he writes, "that it will be inadvisable to construct the third set of locks very far in advance of the time when commercial traffic makes such construction necessary to eliminate long delays during the overhaul period." He points out that it will be an important duty of the Canal administration to give Congress ten or twelve years' notice of the probable year the additional locks will be needed.

"This," he states, "will involve revision of the prediction as to the rate of growth of traffic from time to time as additional commercial statistics become available. It is unsafe to use the predicted increase of 10,000,000 tons per decade for an indefinite extension into the future, but, since the ultimate capacity of the canal is over 112,000,000 tons per year, it seems entirely safe to say that it can take care of all the demands of commerce to the end of this century."

That is a matter of seventy years. It figures out practically the same, if the expected increase is estimated at a million tons a year, which is more than likely too high. Take the lower estimate of 700,000 tons a year and the canal can take care of commerce well into the next century. This brings the question into the realm which, Colonel Burgess says, holds "problems for engineers not yet born."

It is impossible to foresee what effect the development of aviation may have on traffic through the Panama Canal and ocean commerce in general. It is not unlikely that the result will be a retardation of the increase, as it has been estimated. When passenger and mail rates by airplane are reduced to approach the rates by ship and the public becomes more accustomed to air travel, it is certain that the air lines will get much of the business that now goes to ships. More information on this question will be available within the next decade or two and it may indicate a further extension of the time when the capacity of the Panama Canal may be reached—if, indeed, ocean commerce ever reaches that point.

HUNGARY LANDOWNERS HEADED BY ESTERHAZYS

Almanach de Gotha Places the Duke's Estate Second Only to That of the Sutherlands.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 12.—The Almanach de Gotha publishes this year a list of the ducal families of Hungary, giving details of their vast properties. At the top of the list stands the Esterhazy family. The present head of the family is Duke Paul, born in 1901, Doctor of Law and Political Science. His present estates comprise 159 villages and smaller towns with a territory of 222,241 acres. He is therefore owner of the greatest estate in Europe after that of the Duke of Sutherland. The family's pedigree goes back to 1583, but only in 1783 were they raised to their present rank.

Next come the Windisch-Graetz, originally a Styrian family from the early fourteenth century. The present head is Duke Louis, former Hungarian Minister and Privy Councilor to the late Emperor and King Charles who was involved in the Franco forgery affair. This family is not exclusively Hungarian, for the bulk of their estates are in Austria and Czechoslovakia.

There are only three purely Hungarian ducal families, according to the Almanach. Duke Ladislas Bathyany-Strattmann with a property of 22,844 acres, mostly in the western part of Hungary, is one of them. After him in rank comes Duke Festetich de Tolna, who owns [illegible] villages with an extent of 96,123 acres. His wife, who died in 1923, was the daughter of the late Duke of Hamilton.

The last family to receive ducal rank were the Lonyays, upon whom the ill-fated King Charles conferred their present dignity. The head of the family is Duke Elemer who was born in 1863, and married [illegible] the dowager of the late Crown Prince Rodolph.

The disproportion between estates of Dukes and other large property owners is striking. There are [illegible] acres in the hands of [illegible] Dukes, whereas 1,112 other great landowners own only 4,808,526 acres, not quite eight times as much as the ducal properties.

Thus ten years after the war and revolution, Hungarian noble families still enjoy their former wealth, and in spite of the growth of democracy in Europe a noble title is just as much respected here as it ever was.

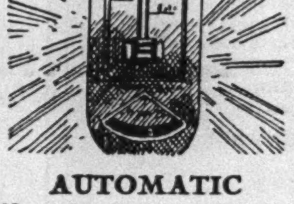
Face frigid February with an easy mind by putting a reliable Timken Oil Burner in charge of your heating—NOW . . .

Priceless Peace o' Mind. How wonderful to have winter comfort in the home assured—requiring no more concern than your electric light or your water supply. Thousands of Timken owners know this.



AUTOMATIC
No work. No worry. Heat as you want it, when you want it.

Forgetting to fix the fire or to shake down the ashes may mean just a little extra, distasteful work, nine times out of ten. But the tenth time it may mean suddenly cooled rooms, chilled bodies, colds and even more serious sickness—especially if it occurs during the menacing weather of February and March.

With a reliable Timken in your home, no one can forget. Its quiet operation is reliable for three reasons. First, because it is amazingly simple in design—evidence of advanced engineering. Second, because every part is finished and fitted with exacting precision. Third, because it is installed with utmost skill by trained Timken experts only.

This simplified Timken has only one moving part. There is no complicated mechanism. There is nothing to get out of order. Nothing to require attention. Nothing to interfere with complete reliability.

Furthermore, due to this extremely simple design and the Timken system of oil burning, there is nothing to cause noise. That is why the modern rotary-type Timken Oil Burner operates so quietly.

The faithful, quiet-running Timken never forgets. On sub-zero days or in temperamental early spring weather, it will provide just the degree of warmth you desire—automatically.

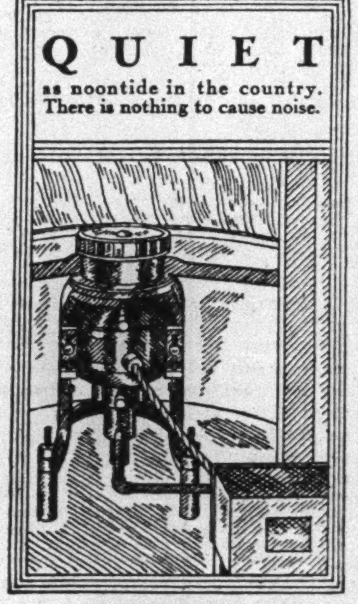
And, too, it will bring you a priceless peace of mind when you leave home on a frigid day—knowing that your women-folks will have no responsibility—that there is nothing for them to remember—that their healthful comfort is assured—day and night—by this oil heating device that can't forget.

CLEAN
Make another livable room where the coal bin now is.

QUIET
as noontide in the country.
There is nothing to cause noise.



A Timken can be installed on the coldest day —without inconvenience to your household

There is February's cold weather yet to come. And there is the damp, penetrating air of March to be faced—when the sickness curve goes way up.

Why not have uniform, dependable, automatic Timken Oil Heat now—and face the balance of the winter with an easy mind?

Our Timken-trained crews can install a Timken Oil Burner on the coldest day without inconvenience to your family. As a matter of fact, your house will hardly have time to cool off.

Nor need financing interfere. If you prefer to pay out of income, only $50 down is needed. Then the balance can be paid in small monthly amounts. Thousands have done it and are doing it this modern way.

Consider this seriously. And remember that the rapidly increasing popularity of the Timken Oil Burner is due to its remarkable simplicity and complete reliability—features that mean everything in oil heating service—and for which the Timken is outstanding.

By EMIL LENGYEL

AFTER the war the Germans were the first nation of Continental Europe to appreciate America's importance as the depository of a new philosophy of life and not merely as the richest country. Their writers depicted America as being driven onward by a daemonic urge to destinations undreamed of before. In their descriptions the United States figured as a genius among the nations, chosen to carry on the main burden of a new civilization. America was a country to be held in terror and yet to be emulated, a world apart, a different planet whose physical substance was accessible to others but whose mental peculiarities could never be assimilated.

Those were the times when German authors rushed into print to tell of strange things in America. The stranger the occurrence the readier was the belief it commanded, and its American origin justified even the most absurd yarn. The United States had become the homeland of unlimited impossibilities.

Recently a reaction has set in against the indiscriminate America-worship. German writers have grown fearful of the spirits they had imported from across the ocean. Youth, satiated with its self-imposed mental complications, had taken only too readily to their simplified system of intuition and recognition. Mechanization had been enthroned as the word and Henry Ford its prophet. They felt as if the robot made with their own hands had gone on a rampage and wanted to run the world. Georg Kaiser, in a characteristically rhapsodic manner which is more eloquent than convincing, diagnoses a strange disease, called American life. He classifies it with famine, pest and war, forcing Europe into a destructively mechanized life and draining it of its spiritual treasures. America's ascendency and her insistence on material salvation is a greater catastrophe than a lost war. Europe has every right to pray: Save our souls! America's inefficient efficiency offers the world an unsurpassable record of accidents as the solution of ineradicable problems. Once more the typically German distinction between a technical civilization and a spirtual culture is revived into belated use. The steel monster commands and flesh and blood obey.

This sudden revulsion of sentiment has influenced not only poets leaning to extremes, such as Georg Kaiser, but also dispassionate scholars. Dr. Luetkens, in a book which, in spite of its seeming bias, is as profound in its speculative parts as it is well documented in the expositive chapters, arraigns America's civilization as a haphazard venture posited merely on materialistic exigencies and not on ethical concepts. One of the author's cardinal ideas is that in America the standards of the middle class have been elevated to national ideas. The cult of the average is the dominant religion and what differs from it is suspicious either as the sign of failure or of snobbery. To get on the band wagon and to vote with the majority are political principles and modes of life. Woe betide the minority trying to assert its right to a distinct individuality. To be "irregular" in certain circles is tantamount to lacking in loyalty to the group or caste to which one belongs. European culture has developed a sense of duality in which spiritual and purely physical elements live apart, and the latter is subordinated to the former when they come into contact. In American civilization—and this is another thesis of Dr. Luetkens—this dualism has been replaced by a monism in which the physical elements assimilate and dominate the purely spiritual aspects of life. In this book, more than in the other volumes under review, the main theme rings out distinctly, namely, that America has not created a different kind of civilization and that it should not be given credit for wisdom, which is the common heritage of all mankind. The United States has achieved success by having followed a line of growth predestined by its history and the ineluctable circumstances of its evolution. In this iconoclastic view the result of America's mis- (Continued on Page 22)

Charles Dickens in the Role Of Humanitarian

A Hitherto Unreprinted Pamphlet, His "Appeal to Fallen Women," and Other Dickensiana

THE CHARITY OF CHARLES DICKENS. By Edward F. Payne and Henry H. Harper. 100 pp. Boston: The Bibliophile Society. Privately printed for members only.

THE ROMANCE OF CHARLES DICKENS AND MARIA BEADNELL WINTER. By Edward F. Payne and Henry H. Harper. 177 pp. Boston: The Bibliophile Society. Privately printed for members only.

By EDWARD WAGENKNECHT

IN the great rush of books that are continually being written about Charles Dickens, it is not often that one encounters a volume based on really important new material. But in "The Charity of Charles Dickens," Messrs. Payne and Harper have given us such a volume.

There is no rarer Dickens item than the great novelist's "Appeal to Fallen Women." It was written in connection with one of the charitable enterprises of his friend, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, a > home established at Shepherd's Bush * * * in the benevolent hope of rescuing fallen women by testing their fitness for emigration, frequently mentioned in his letters, and which largely and regularly occupied his time for several years.

With these words, Forster, in his "Life," dismisses the whole matter, not mentioning the pamphlet at all. In "The Dickens Circle," 1919, Mr. J. W. T. Ley, who knows everything there is to be known about Dickens, asked despairingly, "Has no collector ever yet lighted on a copy of that appeal?" This book contains the answer. For the first time, Dickens's plea is reprinted.

It is written in the form of a letter, addressed, not to any individual, but to > a woman—a very young woman still—who was born to be happy, and has lived miserably; who has no prospect before her but sorrow, or behind her but a wasted youth; who, if she has ever been a mother, has felt shame instead of pride in her own unhappy child.

If you wish to escape from the life you are living, he urges, now is your opportunity to do so.

> And do not think that I write to you as if I felt myself very much above you, or wished to hurt your feelings by reminding you of the situation in which you are placed. God forbid! I mean nothing but kindness to you, and I write as if you were my sister.

He warns the prostitute that if she persists in her evil life, there is nothing but misery ahead for her, perhaps "an early death from terrible disease, or your own maddened hand," and the certainty of a dread judgment after death. From such a fate, the Home can save those who wish to be saved.

> In this home they will be taught all household work that would be useful to them in a home of their own and enable them to make it comfortable and happy. In this home, which stands in a pleasant country lane and where each may have her little flower garden if she pleases, they will be treated with the greatest kindness; will lead an active, cheerful, healthy life; will learn many things it is profitable and good to know; and, being entirely removed from all who have any knowledge of their past career, will begin life afresh and be able to win a good name and character.

Later, "when some time shall have elapsed and their conduct shall have fully proved their earnestness and reformation," they shall be sent abroad, "where in a distant country they may become the faithful wives of honest men and live and die in peace." In conclusion, he urges his reader not to reject this offer lightly, nor, on the other hand, to undertake something which she is not fully resolved to carry out. For those who fail > will occupy, unworthily and uselessly, the place of some other unhappy girl, now wandering and lost; and * * * her ruin, no less than your own, will be upon your head, before Almighty God, who knows the secrets of our breasts; and Christ, who died upon the cross to save us.

The enterprise was not, it need hardly be said, notably successful. Added to all the difficulties inherent in its nature was the fact that, with the exception of Dickens himself, the administration of affairs was largely in the hands of pietistic, narrow people, who had no understanding of either the problem or the women with whom they were called upon to deal. I do not pretend that Dickens himself was terribly "knowing" in these matters. The offer of a little garden plot must have given many a prostitute a hearty laugh, even though she read it in prison; nor can the kind reward of deportation, as the ultimate outcome of virtue, have made any very great appeal. Nevertheless, the fact remains that he personally interviewed each girl who applied for admission and that most of the practical suggestions came from him. Frequently they were vetoed, and nothing shows more conclusively that his heart was deeply enlisted than the fact that, autocrat as he was, he held on in spite of all. It was, by the way, over his protest that the home was absurdly named "Urania College"!

Charles Dickens.

From a Drawing by Charles Martin, Made About the Time Dickens Began His Career as a Writer.

Closely connected with Dickens's work for the "college" was his attempt to assist one Caroline Maynard Thompson, a weak, rather than a vicious woman, who had become a prostitute in an attempt to support those dependent upon her. Her younger brother, encouraged by the humanitarian tone of Dickens's novels, wrote to him, appealing to him to assist his sister to escape from her degraded life. Dickens replied, interviewed both brother and sister many times, and finding drama in the situation, which profoundly increased its already powerful sympathetic appeal, urged the case of Mrs. Thompson upon the attention of Miss Coutts. Before she got through, Caroline found herself all nicely wound round with red tape, Miss Coutts, her advisers, and—to a certain extent—even Dickens himself having, for some mysterious reason, become deeply impressed by the "difficulties" surrounding her case. Her ultimate fate is unknown, but the correspondence relating to her, now first printed, throws an interesting sidelight on Dickens's always unfailing human sympathy.

The other book, "The Romance of Charles Dickens and Maria Beadnell Winter," though it deals with a much more important experience in Dickens's life, is a much less important book, simply because the story has been told before. In 1908, the Bibliophile Society published a volume, edited by George Pierce Baker, called "Charles Dickens and Maria Beadnell: Private Correspondence." In this book, the story of Dickens's youthful, unhappy love affair with Maria Beadnell was first told in detail, its tremendous influence on his development as man and author was described, and it was established, beyond conjecture, that Maria was the original of Dora in "David Copperfield." The letters contained in this volume have now been reprinted with a new commentary. One rather fails to see the need of another limited edition in this field. What should be done with the Beadnell letters is rather that they should be reprinted in an unlimited trade edition and made available to the general public.

In all fairness, it should be stated, however, that this book would probably be more significant than it is if Mr. Payne and Mr. Harper had been able to agree in their in-

Herbert Read Seeks to Rekindle a "Sense of Glory"

THE SENSE OF GLORY. By Herbert Read. 228 pp. New York: Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.

HERBERT READ is a very interesting critic for our day because he is at once dissatisfied with lack of standards and unwilling to violate truth in his search for them. He is sometimes vague—as, for instance, when he talks of "the sense of glory"—because the symbols for what he is trying to convey to us are not immediately visible to our eyes in the modern world. He is sometimes confused and halting, but the confusion is, with one or two exceptions, the sort that springs from honesty of thought, and not from muddled thought. In his method he suggests T. S. Eliot, for he is a critic by subdivision, one who makes a point and then proceeds to split it up into its components. He is not as primly precise as Eliot, but that may mean only that he is unable to cut his way through modern multiplicity to anything so simple and untenable as Eliot's clearly formulated basic assumptions. Eliot has said of him that he has been in a state of transition from psychology to metaphysics; and the transition, to judge from "The Sense of Glory," is not yet complete. Nor is it to be hoped that it ever will be complete if the psychology is to be left out of the metaphysics.

The contents of "The Sense of Glory" range from discussions of Froissart nad Malory, through Descartes, Swift, Vauvenargues and Sterne, and down into relatively modern times with papers on Hawthorne, Bagehot and Henry James. The choice of subjects implies a method: like Henry Adams, like Eliot, Mr. Read wishes to contrast the age of the dynamo with the age of the Virgin. He is haunted by certain inconsistencies that lurk beneath our vaunted respect for the individual human being. In the chronicles of Froissart, he says, > we cannot ignore * * * the presence of what we should call a certain inhumanity. Human life was not valued highly; it was not respected as a sacred possession of the individual, coming before all other values.

The Middle Ages have long been criticized for that very inhumanity, but Mr. Read says, along with Robert Graves, Siegfried Sassoon and other young Englishmen, > how firmly have we eradicated man's inhumanity to man? With ten million dead still fresh in the soil of our battlefields, we can have no confident answer to that question; "they died horribly."

But of one thing Mr. Read is confident, and that is:

> We have lost the sense of glory because we have lost the habit of faith. We neither love deeply enough, nor feel deeply enough, nor think deeply enough, to enjoy life's most impressive sanction.

The foregoing passage appears at the close of the first essay in the book, that on Froissart, and the rest of "The Sense of Glory" is an effort to discover how much of the habit of faith may be recovered, and in what we may repose our faith. If Mr. Read is going back to any formal religion, or if he has gone back already, it does not show in this book, but he has quite evidently recovered faith—of a sort—for himself. In his second essay, the one on Malory, he reaffirms what has become known as the tragic sense of life.

> * * * when virtue has degenerated [he says], when talent or strength is lacking; when levity and ease govern all other passions—then glory seems a long way off; you cannot count on it, or cultivate it, so finally men come to regard it as a dream, and ignore it. It is much better that we should be led astray by this sentiment [of glory]. What does it matter if we are deceived, since in the process we gain talent, feeling, sensibility.

In his essay on Descartes Mr. Read attacks "Cartesianism in its dual aspect of idealism and mechanism," for he realizes that this duality leads to a "denial of esthetic values." In a world that believes in mechanistic determination, which is the world we have inherited from nineteenth century science, there can be only a beauty of "mechanical harmony," a harmony that is, according to Mr. Read, "devoid of spiritual animation, deficient in the sense of glory." No poet could be satisfied with such an idea of harmony; and Mr. Read, as a poet, is quite naturally looking for his way out of the dilemma. He finds it, as others have, in opposing A. N. Whitehead's philosophy of organic realism to the Cartesian idea of mechanical determination in the world of matter; and, if we are to take the physicists seriously, has the sanction of modern science for his stand.

From Descartes, once he has straightened out his ideas on this scientific sanction for his "sense of glory," Mr. Read passes on to the contrasted figures of Swift and Vauvenargues. Both men led unhappy lives ("Vauvenargues * * * suffered disappointments quite comparable with Swift's"), but from the Frenchman's state "there issued one of the most equable and courageous views of life that has ever found expression." The philosophy of Vauvenargues, in Mr. Read's opinion, is to be found in one maxim: That to accomplish anything worth while a man must always live as if he were never going to die. To Vauvenargues, man was "stretched between the polarity of good and evil, and not the gift of grace, but the practice of courage, was necessary for salvation."

The drift of "The Sense of Glory" makes it plain that Mr. Read has further reconsidered a statement that appeared in his lucid "Phases of English Poetry." In that volume he has said, in effect, that art transcends the conditions which give it rise, and therefore cannot be explained by them. The statement was too pat, and Mr. Read hastened to qualify it by treating modern poetry in terms of its relations to the modern world. He qualifies it again by "The Sense of Glory."

By the Author of "GALLIONS REACH"
H. M. TOMLINSON'S
Great Novel of War and Peace
ALL OUR YESTERDAYS
"This book without question is the nearest approach to a permanent contribution to English literature published within recent months. It is a deeply imaginative study of the soul of England, of the soul of civilized man, under the stress of those forces which finally met in world war . . . It certainly is one of those rare volumes of which one says: 'This could only have been written by one man, and by him only once.' "—Book-of-the-Month Club News.
"Such a distinguished novel deserves many readers. Tomlinson's is a rare mind in this day and time. You discover yourself saying 'why there it is, thank goodness, what I've believed all this time!' Shakespeare does the same thing to a reader; poets, worthy of the name, always do. ALL OUR YESTERDAYS is the chronicle of the human heart universal, and its unhappy, bitter, habit of fashioning its own doom . . . History will remember this novel."—Walter Yust, in Philadelphia Ledger.

Lincoln's Road to the Capitol Traced in the Cartoon

Albert Shaw's Collection Makes a Most Effective Review of Pre-Civil War Political Issues

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. His Path to the Presidency, 263 pp. The Year of His Election. 277 pp. By Albert Shaw. New York: Review of Reviews Corporation. $8.

By CHARLES WILLIS THOMPSON

ON the jacket this is entitled "A Cartoon History," which is what it is. There is at least one cartoon on every page, most of them rare and unknown and often derived from the most remote sources. The idea is so novel that this review will be devoted entirely to the cartoon motif and will pass by the text with the statement that it is a careful, impartial and well-written history. It centres around Lincoln, but is only incidentally a biography of him; it is a history of the times, beginning back in the days of Jackson and Van Buren. It even makes excursions into European politics, so far as they help to explain what happened in America, with cartoons to illustrate the excursions. These are the first two volumes in the work, and carry Lincoln only up to his first inauguration.

Two things strike the reader as he inevitably compares these cartoons with the cartooning of today. One is that we cannot affect a superior attitude and regard the work of the old caricaturists as merely "quaint" or "curious." There is the same punch in it that we find today. Another, and this is a qualification of the first, is that for a long time there were certain peculiarities about their work which made it cumbersome, but which were discarded as the Civil War approached and snappier and quicker stuff was demanded. But this cumbersomeness is hardly a matter for adverse criticism; for it proceeded from the excessive care and the leisurely study with which a cartoonist went about his work.

In the days preceding 1860 it is evident that the enjoyment of a cartoon was a thing requiring time, and the cartoonist obliged his customers by making his picture cover a large variety of subjects instead of being concentrated on one, as in 1860 and today. Around the main idea clustered as many sub-ideas as the cartoonist could possibly get in. The difference between a cartoon of Jackson's time and one of Buchanan's—or Hoover's, for that matter—was the difference between chess and poker. You had to study a cartoon in the Tippecanoe campaign, for instance, if you wanted to get the full fruits; now, and in the days immediately preceding secession, the whole effect of it strikes you the moment you open your paper, and there is nothing more to tell.

This collection of cartoons is so complete that it is easy to trace the change and how it began. The most potent influence in the transformation was Vanity Fair, a paper made up like Punch, which was first issued in 1859, of which the main cartoonist was Henry Louis Stephens, a brilliant man, whose work is no more "old-fashioned" today than it was when he brought it out. He led the way, but the time was ripe for change. In 1860 Frank Bellew, who was to be famous for twenty years, came over from England and began drawing pointed one-idea cartoons, and unnamed artists in plenty followed in Stephens's steps. But Stephens remained the great cartoonist of America until Thomas Nast began drawing his powerful pictorial broadsides for Harper's Weekly, the first of which appeared in 1861.

The long elaborations were English imitations, but an imitation not of the prevailing English style, which, influenced by Punch, was short and crisp. They followed, rather, the style of Gillray, Rowlandson and the caricaturists of the Napoleonic Wars. To give an idea of what is meant by elaboration, a cartoon of the campaign of 1852 will serve. The Democrats had nominated Pierce and the Whigs were in a deadlock; it took fifty-three ballots to nominate Scott. The cartoonist wanted to get everything in, and this is how he did it.

In the background is Pierce on a fleet horse, galloping unopposed to the White House and waving derisively at the warring Whigs. In a modern cartoon that would be all of the picture. But Scott was being hampered by Southern opposition, so the cartoonist depicted him riding on the shoulders of Horace Greeley while a Southern voter tugged at his arm and demanded to know where he stood on slavery. Scott was giving him equivocal promises. Incidentally, Scott was eating his famous "hasty plate of soup," but the interruption of the Southerner was spilling it out of the plate down Greeley's neck and Horace was protesting. Off to the right is another candidate, Daniel Webster, mounted on the shoulders of Webb, editor of The New York Courier and Enquirer, and eating chowder, his favorite dish. To the left is President Fillmore, on the shoulders of the editor of The New York Mirror, eating government pap and expressing his disappointment that he does not seem likely to eat any more for four years. Webster is telling Fillmore of the handicap he suffers in not having any pap (patronage) to get votes with himself. If it was possible to get any more ideas in one cartoon the cartoonist would have got them in; but as a matter of fact he exhausted the whole situation as it then was.

This Campaign Poster of 1860 Puts in the Mouth of the Diminutive Douglas the Plaintive Question, "How Can I Get Over This Rail Fence?" Lincoln Declares With Assurance, "It Can't Stop Me, for I Built It." From the Black Figure Between the Rails Comes the Unwelcome Message, "You Find Me in Dis Yer Fence, Massa Duglis."

In this matter of elaboration, requiring thorough study by the reader, a necessary concomitant was the issuance from the mouths of the characters of speeches in balloon shape, some of them very long. To what extreme lengths this was carried may be seen from a cartoon of 1836 showing Henry Clay and Van Buren in a duel. Clay has run Van Buren through with a sword marked "Tariff." Van Buren was the Democratic candidate, but the Whig candidate was General Harrison. Clay, however, so far overshadowed the voiceless Tippecanoe that Harrison is represented as a mere onlooker. Behind Van Buren stands his backer, Andrew Jackson, dismayed to see that Clay's sword has gone through Van Buren and come out at his back.

It is a strong, vigorous cartoon, brilliantly executed and worthy of any artist of today. The incongruity lies in the fact that at the moment of Van Buren's death all the characters are engaging in long speeches in balloon shape; and the incongruity reaches absurdity when Van Buren himself, as Clay's sword dispatches him, makes as long a speech as anybody else.

This Cartoon of the Campaign of 1836 Shows Henry Clay Piercing Martin Van Buren, the Democratic Nominee, With a Sword Labeled "Tariff." Clay, Though the Most Promising Whig, Was Not the Nominee of His Party That Year. The Choice Had Fallen to General William Henry Harrison, Who Stands at the Left. At the Extreme Right Is Andrew Jackson, Then President, Encouraging His Protégé, Martin Van Buren.

The pre-war cartoons, though usually not bitter, were always satirical rather than humorous. The only really vindictive cartoon in the two volumes is one of 1852, representing Pierce as a drunkard leaning against a tree and helplessly waving a whisky bottle. It is a fact that Pierce's fault was drink, so much so that his wife was in despair when she learned he had been nominated for President, knowing he could not withstand the temptations of that position. As for pure humor, the first glimmerings of it concern John Brown's raid. The fact that he went to Harper's Ferry to start a slave insurrection and that the slaves paid no attention to him aroused the risibles of the cartoonists, and that anti-climax was comically depicted. One of the pictures, for example, shows a happy negro carrying off one of the pikes Brown brought down to distribute and saying joyfully, "Much obliged to Possum Wattomie for dese pikes he gin us—dey's turribly handy to dig taters wid." It is entitled "Effect of John Brown's raid."

Even in 1860 hidebound cartoonists occasionally followed the old fashion of elaboration, but the approach of disunion and war had caused most to discard it for quick, telling hits, and the balloons had generally died out. This was especially the case after Lincoln's election, when Buchanan's indecision over what to do with the South was the favorite target. One cartoon showed him wandering helplessly around and asking a small boy, "Is it north or south I'm going?" But the strongest and most biting was a cartoon in Vanity Fair. It was nothing but a medal, with the caption, "This medal is presented by Vanity Fair to James Buchanan, President of the United States, as a testimonial of respect for his MANLY and PATRIOTIC stand in defense of the rights of the Union." The sting lay in the fact that the medal contained nothing but an alto-relief of Andrew Jackson, who nearly thirty years before had summarily crushed South Carolina's threat of secession and prepared to hang the ringleaders.

The cartoons were not only livelier and snappier, but they now reflected real current history instead of carping at the political leaders. In 1860, for instance, Lincoln is pictured as carrying on one of his celebrated rails two fighting possums, Douglas and Breckinridge, who are trying to tear each other's fur out. He has them securely, their tails caught in a cleft in the rail; and underneath is the caption:

The deed is done, their day is o'er;
Two possums fought at Baltimore;
Now let them scratch, now let them wail,
Old Abr'm has them "in a rail."

Which depicts exactly what happened.

General Scott, commanding the army, recommended to Buchanan a course of action to be followed in case the South seceded after Lincoln's election. One of the most historically pat cartoons of that time appeared in Vanity Fair. Stephens inaugurated the fashion of using scenes from Shakespeare, which Nast adopted and always followed, and which was in turn followed by Puck and Judge up to 1886. But in this case he departed from Shakespeare and used a scene from "Richelieu," showing Scott, stern and commanding, as Richelieu, and the dubious Buchanan as King Louis. The tremendously effective lines which Stephens quoted were:

Richelieu—Remember my grand maxims! First employ all methods to conciliate.
Louis—Failing these?
Richelieu—All means to crush!

Even when the war was at hand.

Hunting for Lost Explorers in The Jungles of Brazil

G. M. Dyott Writes the Thrilling Story of His Search for the Expedition Of the Missing Colonel Fawcett

MAN-HUNTING IN THE JUNGLE. Being the Story of a Search for Three Explorers Lost in the Brazilian Wilds. By G. M. Dyott, F. R. G. S. 323 pp. Illustrated. Indianapolis: Bobbs-Merrill Company. $5.*

By PERCY HUTCHISON

IN the Spring of the year 1925 an English explorer, Colonel P. H. Fawcett, with two companions, one of them his son, Jack Fawcett; the other Raleigh Rimell, set out on an expedition into the wilds of Brazil. Word came back from them from time to time; and then all news ceased. But long silences on the part of explorers is something to be expected. Next week, next month, something would surely be heard of the Colonel. But no word came. And gradually it became clear that the party either had been lost or that those who composed it had been killed. In 1828 a man went to look for Colonel Fawcett. This man was Commander G. M. Dyott, also an Englishman, but at this time living in the United States. Commander Dyott came upon conclusive proof that Fawcett and his companions had been killed by hostile Indians in the Brazilian jungle. By a miracle, as one so often designates the lucky turn of chance, he escaped a similar fate. And it is all told in a breathless narrative bearing the title "Man-Hunting in the Jungle."

A Civilized Indian of Matto Grosso.

It was in February of 1928 that Commander Dyott set out for Rio. He had no illusions as to what lay before him. The region Fawcett had sought to penetrate was in evil repute. "From the Xingu (pronounced Shing-gu) country no one ever comes back," was a common saying. And Colonel Fawcett had shown certain peculiarities which rendered him, although a veteran explorer, more than ordinarily open to danger. He had, as Dyott states, "a pronounced leaning toward mysticism," and "the idea of finding a lost civilization somewhere in the heart of the continent seemed to be an obsession with him." In other words, he was impelled into the wilderness by a fixed motive, and, if we draw the right conclusion from the words of the man who went in search of Fawcett, that is something that can easily prove fatal, for it prevents the explorer from making correct deductions from the conditions of the moment, and from preserving to himself flexibility of judgment and movement. This is borne out by Dyott's narrative, for it was only by making an instantaneous decision that he and those with him came out alive.

This summary will pass over hurriedly the first part of the tale. From Rio the expedition went on to Carumba. There Dyott met the bandit chieftain Miranda, who told him that Fawcett had been murdered by bandits, who had robbed him. This was not so. The next stop was at Cuyaba, up the Paraguay River. At this town Commander Dyott set about collecting the men he would take with him in addition to the four who had accompanied him from the States—Samuel Martin, Jack Whitehead, Gerald Martin and William de Mello. He wanted seven men, "camaradas" in Portuguese. He managed to persuade five to go with him.

The first part of the journey into the interior was made on bullocks and mules, with others of these pack animals to carry stores. It was a well-conditioned outfit that made its departure from Cuyaba, with portable wireless apparatus, and cameras for moving pictures. And it came through with more of its impedimenta intact than might have been predicted. True, the wireless apparatus was eventually abandoned, but not until civilization had very nearly been regained. Films were more than once lost overboard in river rapids, but they had been packed water-tight, and in consequence were rescued undamaged.

Building a Bark Canoe in the Jungle.

The last outpost for Dyott, as it had been for Fawcett, was Bakari, so that it is from this point the expedition may be considered as making its actual departure. And it was here, too, that difficulty began, for Colonel Fawcett, having once experienced trouble by being followed on the trail by those who thought he was hunting for gold, had purposely thrown every one off the scent. Fortunately, Dyott ran across a Bakari Indian who had guided Fawcett part of his way, and who consented to accompany the search party. The expedition still had its pack animals, but at a point up the Kuluseu River they were unloaded and sent back with their drivers, and the party took to native canoes, and to the canvas boats which had been brought from the States. In the long run these latter, although more susceptible to injury, proved the more satisfactory conveyance, both for men and stores.

Crossing the Paranatinga River.

The expedition was now on the edge of the jungle, if not in the heart of it. Insects made life a perpetual torture. In the waters swam strange, sharp-toothed fish, anacondas coiled in the pools, and jaguars skulked among the trees. Presently they would come upon the Indians, and although these might prove "friendly," the term, as Commander Dyott succinctly points out, is strictly relative. An Indian, however "friendly," was capable of becoming hostile without a moment's warning. There were hardships, too, in merely navigating the rivers, for rapids succeeded shallows, and often fallen trees barred the way until a passage had been laboriously cleared by the use of the axe. And if the party went ashore, swarms of bees and colonies of ants made it advisable to take immediately to the river again.

The first Indians encountered (we are excepting the semi-civilized Bakaris that lived in proximity to the white settlements) were those of the Anauquan tribe. As it presently appears, no Indian is a good Indian, at least in South America, in the eyes of his immediate neighbors. Thus the Anauquas, who were actually both peaceful and friendly while Dyott was among them, called the Suyas very bad people. But then, the Suyas reciprocated in kind. The Bakari guide, whose name was Bernardino, was still with Commander Dyott. But although he was a very useful man, arrived at this point he could not aid further in following the Fawcett trail for the simple reason that Fawcett had parted company with him after they had reached the land of the Anauquas. However, Dyott picked up an Indian chief, or headman, of the tribe from whom he learned the fate of Fawcett, his son and Rimell. This chief's name was Aloique, and he appears to have been a very shifty individual. If he had not himself participated in the massacre of the first expedition (and Aloique pinned the murder on the Suyas) the chief had, at best, profited by the extermination of the white men. Of this Dyott was convinced, first, by coming upon some brass tags worn by an Anaqua woman as ornament which had clearly been attached to some of Fawcett's luggage; and, second, by discovering in Aloique's hut a small brass-bound trunk or box that could have belonged to no one but Colonel Fawcett. But being skilled in the diplomacy that must necessarily be practiced in dealing with savages, Dyott refrained from asking about the trunk, and as no opportunity offered for a glimpse of its contents he had to depart in ignorance as to what it contained. Instead, therefore, of arousing in Aloique the suspicion that he was himself suspected of the crime, Dyott used all his diplomacy in persuading the chief to lead him to the site of Fawcett's last camping place; that is to say, the spot where he was murdered. In this he was partially successful; moreover, from Aloique he also obtained the story of the murder.

When, however, we say "the story of the murder," it must not be supposed that this was verbally narrated. A few words and pantomime conveyed the gruesome tale. In his book Commander Dyott reproduces the scene with all its dramatic flavor, but it is too long for present purposes. However, after uttering the word "Suyas" several times, swinging his arms five times to denote the passing of five days, or "suns," and pretending to offer Dyott food, indicating the proffers of friendship made by the Suyas to Fawcett, Aloique reached a dramatic finale, described by Dyott as follows:

> He [Aloique] yelled at the top of his lungs, "Suyas! Bung—bung—bung!" At the same time hitting himself three violent blows on the back of his neck with the edge of his flattened hand, he gasped, and collapsed on the ground.

Dyott, however, did not get anything further from Aloique, for, apparently, that gentleman suddenly bethought himself, as other culprits before him, that he had said too much, and decamped. Through no fault of his own, Commander Dyott soon after found it would be the point of wisdom to decamp also.

Criticism of a purely literary sort is not in order in discussing such a book as "Man-Hunting in the Jungle." One reads such a book for the actual, red-blooded narrative that it is, or does not read it at all. One might wish there were more description in the book. But it may very well be that an explorer, with his mind constantly on the job of preserving his own life, to say nothing of the lives of his companions, does not observe with the artist's reproducing eye. One would like more of the color and variety of the jungle; especially would one like to get more of the "feel" of the exotic country he passes through than Dyott is able to convey. And it seems an oversight that such a book should not have been more generously supplied with adequate maps. There is an unnecessary vagueness in the narrative. But the tale is real, human, and, to use an overworked word, thrilling. One has no right to ask more.

Queries and Answers

piled your rocks and snow-capped summits among the clouds?"

H. H. Kingsley, Winnetka, Ill., also sent this information and tells us it may be found in Sander's "Union Fifth Reader" published in 1867.

"A Voice From Afar"

Miss KATHERINE C. FARNAN, Albany, N. Y.—In your issue of Jan. 5 R. M. A. requested a poem by John Henry Newman entitled, as above, to be found in a book of his entitled "Verses on Various Occasions," published by Longmans, Green & Co. I enclose the complete poem herewith:

A VOICE FROM AFAR

By Cardinal John Henry Newman

Weep not for me;
Be blithe as wont, nor tinge with gloom
The stream of love that circles home,
Light hearts and free!
Joy in the gifts Heaven's bounty lends,
Nor miss my face, dear friends!
I still am near,

Watching the smiles I prized on earth,
Your converse mild, your blameless mirth;
Now, too, I hear
Of whisper'd sounds the tale complete—
Low prayers and musings sweet.

A sea before
The throne is spread; its pure still glass
Pictures all earth scenes as they pass;
We on its shore
Share in the bosom of our rest
God's knowledge, and are blest!

Miss Mary E. Burt, Fall River, Mass., sent the poem and tells us it is known also by the title "Knowledge." Cardinal Newman is the author of the words of the hymn "Lead Kindly Light." George D. Chesson, Springfield, Mass., sent the poem by John Henry Newman entitled "The Golden Prison," which is a different poem than the one quoted above. Lillian Dichter, New York, and Mrs. M. Fortinash, Tarrytown, N. Y., answered this request.

"Carol and Heaven"

Miss MARY E. BURT, Fall River, Mass.—The lines E. A. L. quotes in your issue of Jan. 5 are possibly an adaptation from the epilogue to Alfred Noyes's poem "The Flower of Old Japan." They are as follows, and the lines wanted occur at the beginning of the poem. It is included in Volume I of Noyes's collected poems (Frederick A. Stokes, New York, 1920).

THE FLOWER OF OLD JAPAN

By Alfred Noyes

Carol, every violet has Heaven for a looking glass.

Every little valley lies
Under many-clouded skies;
Every little cottage stands
Girt about with boundless lands.
Every little glimmering pond
Claims the mighty shores beyond—
Shores no seaman ever hailed,
Seas no ship has ever sailed.

All the shores when day is done
Fade into the setting sun,
So the story tries to teach
More than can be told in speech.

Beauty is a fading flower,
Truth is but a wizard's tower,
Where a solemn death-bell tolls,
And a forest round it rolls.

We have come by curious ways
To the light that holds the days;
We have sought in haunts of fear
For that all-enfolding sphere;
And lo! it was not far, but near.

We have found, O foolish fond,
The shore that has no shore beyond.

Deep in every heart it lies
With its untranscended skies;
For what heaven should bend above
Hearts that own the heaven of love?

Carol, carol, we have come
Back to heaven, back to home.

Mrs. Arthur L. Carnahan, Denver, Col., answered this request.

"The Plantagenet Family"

MRS. MERTON M. WILNER, Buffalo, N. Y.—In your issue of Jan. 12, E. C. inquires concerning the title and author of a story of the Plantagenet family. In 1881 I was given a file of old magazines to read, I believe Petersen's Magazine of about the vintage of 1872. They contained a continued story entitled, "The Last of the Plantagenets." I read it in part only as I was little more than a child, but I remember distinctly the character of a young boy of noble birth. The author is not remembered, but there was an atmosphere to the story which I have sometimes recalled. I am afraid this information will not be very helpful.

Arthur T. Vance, New York—Editor of the Pictorial Review informs us that the title of the story is "The Gentleman King" and appeared in that publication.

"Spring"

MRS. WILLIAM ALLEN WILBUR, Chevy Chase, D. C.—The poem C. P. K. quoted in your issue of Jan. 12 is "The Débutante," by Charles Hanson Towne and is complete as follows:

THE DEBUTANTE,

By Charles Hanson Towne.

Behind the door of Winter
The Spring, on tiptoe stands,
With daffodils and crocuses
And tulips in her hand.

She trembles on the threshold;
Then bravely lifts her chin
As if to say, "I'm not afraid,"
And, laughing, rushes in.

"The Swan Floats Away to Die"

TALLMADGE SWIFT, New Britain, Conn.—In reply to R. D. in your issue of Jan. 12, the poem wanted is enclosed and the lines quoted by your correspondent are to be found in the last stanza.

"WHAT IS THAT, MOTHER?"

By George Washington Doane

"What is that, mother?"
"The lark, my child;
The morning has just looked out and smiled
When he starts from his humble grassy nest,
And is up and away with the dew on his breast
And a hymn in his heart, to yon pure bright sphere,
To warble it into his Maker's ear.
Ever, my child, be thy morn's first lays Tuned, like the lark's, to thy Maker's praise."

"What is that, mother?"
"The dove, my son;
And that low, sweet voice, like a widow's moan,
Is flowing out from her gentle breast,
Constant and pure by that lowly nest,
As the wave is poured from some crystal urn
For her distant dear one's quick return.
Ever, my son, be like the dove—
In friendship as faithful, as constant in love."

"What is that, mother?"
"The eagle, boy,
Proudly careering his course with joy,
Firm on his own mountain vigor relying,
Breasting the dark stream, the red bolt defying,
His wing on the wind, and his eye on the sun,
He swerves not a hair, but bears onward, right on.
Boy, may the eagle's flight ever be thine—
Onward and upward, and true to the line."

"What is that, mother?"
"The swan, my love?
He is floating down from his native grove;
No loved one now, no nestling nigh,
He is floating down by himself to die:
Death darkens his eye and unplumes his wings,
Yet, the sweetest song is the last he sings.
Live so, my child, that when death shall come,
Swan-like and sweet it may waft thee home."

Miss Mary E. Burt, Fall River, Mass.; George D. Chesson, Springfield, Mass.; Mrs. Sarah M. Searing, Auburn, N. Y.; Mrs. Belle Boynton Welsh, Elgin, Minn., and Miss Louella D. Everett, Boston, Mass., sent copies. The latter writes that the Right Rev. George Washington Doane was born in Trenton, N. J., May, 1799, and died at Burlington, N. J., April, 1859. M. I. Smithson, Westport, Conn.; F. A. Allis, New York, also answered this request.

"The Marquise of Carabas"

KATHLEEN A. FISHER, Chatham, Va.—The poem that told about the Marquise of Carabas, a woman and the jasmin flower requested by A. C. K. in your issue of Jan. 12 is "Aux Italiens" by Owen Meredith (Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton) (1831-1891). It is a long poem of twenty-eight stanzas of four lines each and is included in Stevenson's "Home Book of Verse," Stedman's "Victorian Anthology," Coates's "Fireside Encyclopedia of Poetry." The poem begins: "At Paris it was, at the opera there—and she looked like a queen in a book that night with the wreath of pearl in her raven hair and the brooch on her breast, so bright."

A number of readers answered this request, a few of whom sent the poem.

A Drama of Family Fortunes In France Before the War

Jean-Richard Bloch's Story of a Jewish House Is a Social Document That Is Rich in Irony

& CO. By Jean-Richard Bloch. 401 pp. New York: Simon & Schuster. $3.

By HERBERT GORMAN

IT is, possibly, the completeness of "— & Co." that disarms and conquers the reader first of all. Here is a novel written in that older full-blooded tradition of French literature that produced "César Birotteau," "Madame Bovary" and "L'Assommoir." A formidable conception, an unhurried and meticulous development, an imposing gallery of carefully delineated characters, and impressive philosophical implications have been welded into a book that has all the earmarks of a major work. That it is a major work in the full sense of the phrase is debatable. In spite of its documented sobriety and earnest richness there are certain limitations that would seem to remove it from that high classification. Possibly it takes some courage to say this in the face of Romain Rolland's "I make bold to say, without any reservations, that here is the only French novel I know which is worthy to take its place among the masterpieces of Balzac's 'Comédie Humaine.'" But, then, the suspicion arises that M. Rolland's admiration is (unknown to himself, perhaps,) strengthened by his sympathetic concern with the status and activities of the Jew in France." "— & Co." is, first of all, a Jewish novel, the story of a family and its difficult and courageous struggle in an alien environment. It is safest, it seems, to assert that "— & Co." is a finely conceived novel built on the old fully documented plan and let posterity decide whether or not it is a major work.

Let us take up in turn the conception, development, characterization and philosophical implications of this book by Jean-Richard Bloch. Here is the odyssey of an Alsatian Jewish family, the Simlers, who, forced out of Alsace by patriotic motives after 1870, settle in a small French town, Vendeuvre, and there build up from nothing their cloth factory. At first their French compatriots are antagonistic to them, but the fierce urge of the Simlers, their unified onslaught on fortune, wins through; Simler & Co. becomes powerful and successful. The tragedy of it all is that the company devours and destroys the individuals. They who were Simlers cease to exist; there is nothing but — & Co. Obviously, there was great scope in this theme, the opportunity to delineate varying types who must sacrifice all the calls of life if they interfere in the slightest with the progression of the company. Though love calls to one of the Simler sons, he must let it pass by because he is an important cog in the company, and marriage with a Christian would interfere with the unity of the family. In other words, the Simlers make a huge god out of material success, the building up and consolidation of the factory. This god becomes a Moloch who devours them; they are in the belly of this barbaric divinity and there to stay, for the fidelity of the clan is unbreakable.

Yet the factory means more to them than materialistic success. It would be necessary to take into consideration the status of the Jew in France between the years 1870 and 1890 to make plain the fact that only through this materialistic success, this commercial triumph, could he take his place in the sun beside the Frenchman in some sort of equality. The old problem of the rapaciousness of the Jew for money and commercial power is adumbrated here. What could the Jew do but fight for his deliverance with the only weapons at his disposal, commercial slyness, business ability, and dogged and self-sacrificing application? A Christian civilization forced this powerful defensive mechanism on the Jew. The spectacle of the Simlers, then, selling all their hard-won properties in Alsace and starting anew in Vendeuvre, starting in debt and with antagonistic rivals all about them, is both impressive and touching. Most touching of all is the spectacle of them becoming the victims of their own defensive mechanism until nothing remains but that mechanism. They merge into it and became a part of it and cease to exist except for it. Paradoxically enough, it is really an abnegation of life in order to live. And that is the danger of all fanatical obsessions, from the obsession of the Emperor Napoleon to the obsession of Hippolyte Simler.

In point of development Jean-Richard Bloch has handled his conception with great ability. The book moves slowly but inevitably. Nothing is hurried. Time is always taken to completely circumscribe each link in the chain of progress. This leisureliness and completeness of handling place "— & Co." back in the older tradition. The reader will find no tricks here, no attempts to achieve sudden climaxes. A social fabric is placed before the reader and the slow and careful finger of the author traces each strand in it. This might have proved tiresome had it not been for the sly and almost continuous irony of Jean-Richard Bloch. To properly indicate this irony it is necessary to move on to a consideration of the characterizations that crowd the book. M. Rolland found the proper phrase for them in his introduction: "He [Bloch] reminds me of Daumier. There is the same firm touch, the well-rounded flesh and muscles, the Michelangelesque ardor in the bourgeois buffoonery, the vis comica (tragica?), the irresistible scenic movement, the genius not only of the individual portraiture (Hippolyte Simler is a world in himself!), but of the ensembles." Allowing for M. Rolland's excessive admiration there is much truth in these words. The portraiture of the Simlers do remind the reader of the slightly exaggerated line and gusty cunning of Daumier. What could be finer and more characteristic than old Hippolyte Simler's immediate reaction when he hears that his sons (to whom he had given a power of attorney) have purchased a factory in Vendeuvre for 210,000 francs?

Gazing at his brothers with protruding eyes, in which there was no trace left of humanity, the weaver repeated:

"Zwei hundert, * * * Gott im Himmel. * * * Myrtil * * * alles, alles * * *" then, his legs giving way, he stepped backward, tried to sit down, collided with one of the legs of the overturned chair, and fell in the gap between it and the table, emitting the long roar of the bull that has received its deathblow.

It is really these characterizations that are the strength of the book. Knowing these Simlers so well, we understand the conception and the development of "— & Co." very clearly indeed. We may not always be quite sympathetic with them, and the sacrifice of Joseph Simler may disturb our faith in the free passion of man, but we can understand the springs that move them and see that something more than self-determination builds them up and then destroys them. It is no small feat for a novelist to create such characterizations that we would be sure to recognize them should we meet them on the street. That is what M. Bloch has done.

The philosophic implications of the book are more difficult to discuss. One of them is the question of salvation from this materialistic obsession that is so pronounced in the Jew. M. Bloch's only answer seems to be flight. An apostacy would seem to be a cowardly way until we realize how fierce and strong is the psychology of the herd among the Jews and how freedom of gesture and will is stemmed by the family itself. Escape, then, is the only way, but it is a bitter and lonely way. There are aspects to this solution that M. Bloch does not touch at all, and because of this it is dangerous to attribute too much to him; he is not clear and complete enough on the problem. But if we assume that the utterances of Ben Stern, the Simler who fled to America and became a millionaire, express M. Bloch's opinions (and they seem to do so), then he must mean that the son with talent or a desire to be himself must not be held in the clan. He must break away. The implication of the machine devouring the man is plain enough and needs no comment. Another problem (it is considered also by M. Rolland in his introduction) is that of the conquering Jew (in a business sense) in the country that had formerly conquered him. What is the attitude to be taken? M. Bloch gives no real answer, for the main reason that he has not properly pictured the other side. In "— & Co." we are always too close to the Simlers, the book is written almost from their attitude and the French associates of Vendeuvre are seen only from the outside. We do not go into their homes, except that of M. Le Pleynier. When they are presented there is always a slight but disturbing sense of caricature in their characterizations. The only sympathetically drawn Christian is Mademoiselle Le Pleynier (whom Joseph Simler loves and would marry until at a word from the family he silently destroys this passion), and she is idealized. No, this question of the successful Jew in the foreign environment that once dominated him is not answered at all. However, it is a tribute to "— & Co." to indicate how much discussion it may arouse. It may not be a major work, because of onesidedness or a final begging of important questions, but it is an important work and it is always interesting.

A Historical View of Religion's Leaders

THE SAVIORS OF MANKIND. By W. R. Van Buskirk. 531 pp. New York: The Macmillan Company. $3.

DR. VAN BUSKIRK'S view of religion is not limited by the exigencies of orthodox faith and theological systems. To him true religion is that spiritual strength which enables man to face any given necessity in life and rise above it. It is only natural, therefore, that in his "Saviors of Mankind" he should include philosopher as well as mystic—Lao-Tze as well as Buddha, Confucius as well as Mohammed, Aakhnaton as well as Zoroaster, Moses as well as Isaiah of Babylon and Socrates as well as Jesus of Nazareth and Saul of Tarsus.

In his sympathetic treatment of these great spiritual leaders Dr. Van Buskirk, who is a clergyman, proceeds from the naturalistic and historical point of view. He contends that actual social forces have always supplied the chief reason for the prophetic voice:

> Religions have always appeared in times of national crisis and are to be regarded as the highest answer of an aspiring soul to the perils and needs of the hour. Aside from the abiding problems which arise from our common humanity, nearly all questions affecting our lot on earth grow out of the social conditions in which we find ourselves. Almost any faith will serve to minister to universal needs, and reformations of the faiths are infrequent when society is undisturbed. But when a social order meets with disaster, when the tempo of life increases the centripetal strain, compensation must be found. The prophets of the race have always appeared at such times and have gone about the very practical business of saving the situation.

Dr. Van Buskirk supports his contention ably, with a wealth of historical material and with a comprehensive study of the lives of these reformers of mankind. Not all of the great spiritual reforms were primarily religious in their inception. Many, notably those of Moses, Aakhnaton, Lao-Tze, Confucius and Socrates, were directed against corruptions of government, political oppression and outworn and antiquated social institutions.

In Aakhnaton of Egypt, who all but established a new order of priesthood, a new form of worship, even a new god—Aton—it was the sheer, rebellious spirit of youth which dared to challenge the powerful Amonite hierarchy and attempt to break the yoke of its political and social supremacy. Lao-Tze and Confucius revolted against the political oppression imposed on their people by the Chinese conquerors of Central Asia and against the moral degradations of the native princes. Moses met social and economic necessity, existent in a downtrodden and disorganized race after its expulsion from Egypt, with the dictums which, today, are embraced in Christianity itself as the Ten Commandments. And it was Socrates's intense patriotism, his fear for the fall of Athenian supremacy, that played a large part in formulating those Socratic principles of conduct which have served since as spiritual guidance to the entire Western World. Similarly, not spiritual inspiration alone, but social and economic conditions as well, were instrumental in giving us the fathers of the great faiths—Buddha, Mohammed, Zoroaster and Jesus.

His cognizance of the importance of historical necessity in the evolution of great religions does not preclude Dr. Van Buskirk from placing due emphasis on the spiritual essence of man. All religions, in their spiritual values, can be reduced to faith—whether of the simple, primitive sort or the more enlightened faith which, for example, one may have in one's own moral strength or which the true artist has in his work. When religions, and this is one of Dr. Van Buskirk's contentions, become heavy with scholastic or theological impedimenta, they lose their spiritual values in a maze of metaphysical terminology. This is perhaps one of the chief reasons why so many intelligent and essentially spiritual people turn from the dogmas imposed by orthodox religion to their inner selves for spiritual strength and guidance.

Dr. Van Buskirk writes with clarity and simplicity. His interpretation of these men whom he has grouped together as the outstanding figures in the spiritual history of the world is very human and understanding. He sheds no new light on their personal lives or teachings, but he brings to his work a freshness of outlook, a maturity of judgment, which make it a distinctly worthwhile contribution to the religious and ethical literature of today.

QUERIES

"Prince Charlie, Flora and Jane"

K. C. S.—Wish to know the titles of two novels written just before the Restoration of Charles II of England. One tells of Prince Charlie and Flora MacDonald and the other of Prince Charlie and Jane Grey.

"A Road in Spain"
"Where the Ships Swing"

M. D. S.—Requested, the sources of the following quotations:

1. A straggling road in Spain
   Up which a lean and foolish Knight
   Forever rides in vain.

2. Dawn lands for youth to reap
   Dim lands where empires sleep,
   And all that dolphined deep,
   Where the ships swing?

"Three Men in the Desert"

R. C. V.—Wanted, the poem which begins: "Three men went into the desert alone and one slept like a sack of stone." This poem was one of the most popular ever read to the English classes.

"On That Lone Shore Moans the Sea"

J. H.—Desired, information about the author and the poem referred to in the following quotations from Marsh's "Lectures on the English Language" (Scribner's, 1859): I know, however, in the wide range of imitative verse, no line superior, perhaps I should say none equal, to that in Wild's celebrated nameless poem:

Yet as if grieving to efface
All vestige of the human race,
On that lone shore loud moans the sea.

"Despair Sits Brooding"

W. M.—Wish the source of this quotation: "Despair sits brooding on the petrid eggs of hope."

"A Line Before My Passing"

V. C.—Requested, the poem in which these lines occur: "If I could write a line before my passing to make the world a better place to live," &c.

"Horses of the Sun"

M. A. D.—Wanted, the name of the author and the poem in which these lines occur:

He who rides the horses of the sun shall lord it but a day;
The happiest heart e'er beat was in some quiet breast
That found the common daylight sweet
And left to God the rest.

"A Poem on Bismarck"

G. E. M.—Desired, a short poem on Bismark that appeared in one of the leading magazines (probably The Literary Digest) during the early part of the great war. The gist of it was that the great Bismarck, lying in his tomb, was disturbed by the sounds of war and returned to earth to see if the Germans were well prepared. He found all as it should be and went back to his grave satisfied.

"A Street in Gallilee"

H. M. B.—Wish the name of the author and the poem containing these lines:

The dying sun shone softly o'er a street in Gallilee,
It turned to gold the houses old
Till they were fair to see;
And women, resting from their toil, called greetings cheerily
From door-step unto door-step, in far off Gallilee.

"Bouncing Bet"

J. H. W. A.—Desired, a poem entitled, I think, as above, the first line of which reads: "Bouncing Bet's a hussy."

"The Year and Her Children"

P. M.—Wish the poem and its author that tells of the old year about to die and attributes the months as its twelve children. Part of it reads: "June came crowned with roses."

"Spring"

K. D. C.—Requested, the name of the author and the poem containing these lines: "Today I met her, Spring! Tender, flower-eyed, laughing thing. She walked with me all this wondrous day, whispering secrets. * * *"

"To a Young Physician"

M. V. N.—Wanted, the poem entitled as above, part of which reads:

Beside the unveiled mysteries
  Of life and death, go stand
With guarded lips and reverent eye
  And pure of heart and hand.

"The Old Musician and His Harp"

H. C.—Requested, the poem entitled as above, the first lines of which are: "Years have come and passed away, golden locks have changed to gray."

"The Exile's Return"

M. C. C.—Wanted, the poem entitled as above, from which I remember these lines:

My heart! And there she is!
The dawn on the hills of Ireland!
God's angels lifting the night's dark veil
From the fair green face of my sireland.

"In Nature's Book"

E. R.—Desired, the author's name of this short poem which I wish to include in a book I am writing:

In Nature's book hath music writ
Closely, on each page of it;
Breaking wave, and breeze, and tune
Of the oriole in June.

Bugle call, great organ swell,
Flute and harp, and chiming bell:
Yet, there be who cannot hear;
Grant us, Lord, the listening ear.

"Seeking the Christ Child"

A. R. D.—Wanted, a poem which describes the modern search for the Christ child. It tells how the seeker goes to the inn in Bethlehem and the innkeeper sends him back telling him he will find the Christ in the flame of the sunset, the fragrance of the rose, the laugh of a child and in the heart of youth.

"A Frog Hops Through the Field"

W. H. W.—Wish the source and remaining lines of the following version of the fable of the ox and the bullfrog, quoted over fifty years ago, as follows:

A frog with frogling by his side
Came hopping through the field
  one day
Where he a grazing ox did spy;
Much angered was the frog thereby.
Good Lord, he cried, what was my sin
Thou madest me so small and thin.

ANSWERS

"Her Other Name Is Fate"

THE REV. A. B. PATTEN, Madison, Conn.—Edwin Markham's love poem, "Virgilia," of twenty-eight stanzas that appeared about 1905 is the one that R. R. quotes in your issue of Jan. 12. The lines, "She knows all sighs and she knows all sinning and they whisper out in her breaking wave" occur near the end of Section 2. The poem begins:

Had we two gone down the world together,
  I had made fair ways for the feet of Song,
And the world's fang been but a foam-soft feather,
  The world that works us wrong, and may be found in Volume 1 of Markham's two-volume work, "The Book of Poetry," published by William H. Wise & Co., New York (1926).

"Death Is a Door"

NANCY BYRD TURNER, Boston, Mass.—With regard to the inquiry of M. D. (Dec. 22) for my poem, entitled above, I am sorry I cannot supply you with the lines as the poem has been sold and will appear before long in a well-known magazine.

"More Nyack Bells"

CHARLES HENRY PHELPS, New York—In your issue of Jan. 5 Paul F. Snead, answering an inquiry of G. H. B. (Nov. 17), gives a portion of a poem by Stephen Henry Thayer and states that he does not know where the entire poem can be found. Mr. Thayer was for many years a member of the New York Stock Exchange and later the curator of the Authors' Club of this city until shortly before his death. I have before me his "Songs of Sleepy Hollow and Other Poems," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons (1886), and the full poem referred to is given at page 3 of that book. I enclose copy herewith for your correspondent.

Edgar Mayhew Bacon, Tarrytown, N. Y., writes as follows: "Mr. Snead quotes several stanzas of the poem as given in my book 'The Hudson River From Ocean to Source' in 1903. 'Nyack Bells,' first appearing in a periodical, was included in a volume of Mr. Thayer's verse that was brought out by G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1883, under the title 'Songs of Sleepy Hollow.'

"To the collector of American verse it may be of interest to remember that Thayer, like his friend, Edmund Clarence Stedman, was a banker and member of the New York Stock Exchange. I recall no other instances where Wall Street has nourished a poet of recognized standing.

"Mr. Thayer's chosen associates were men of letters. His writing included a second volume of poems, a number of essays and at least one novel. He belonged to the Century and Authors' Clubs, being librarian of the latter in the later years of his life."

Miss Mildred A. Monahan, North Tarrytown, N. Y., sent a complete copy of the poem of thirteen stanzas and tells us that Mr. Thayer presented, as a wedding gift to her parents, a copy of his book. The stanzas that were published in these columns of Jan. 5, with the answer of Paul F. Snead, were the first, second, fourth, eighth and thirteenth.

"Daintily Love"

CAROLINE HARDING, Brooklyn, N. Y.—I enclose the poem requested by M. D. in your issue of Dec. 22. I have no record of the author's name.

Daintily love, daintily slow
  Let your little feet fall as we go;
  Under the pavements are graves,
    you know.

Tenderly love, tenderly low
  Let your cheery words fall as we go;
  Under the faces are hearts, you know.

Graciously love, graciously sow
  More of your kindly deeds as we go;
  Under our shrouds we shall need them, you know.

"Daughter of Zion"

Miss BESSIE LAY JOHNSON, Salisbury, Md.—In your issue of Jan. 5 E. A. B. asked for the poem entitled "Daughter of Zion." This appears in my hymnal of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which states that the author is unknown. The poem is as follows:

Daughter of Zion, awake from thy sadness;
  Awake, for thy foes shall oppress thee no more;
Bright o'er thy hills dawns the day-
  star of gladness;
  Arise, for the night of thy sorrow is o'er.
Strong were thy foes; but the arm that subdued them
  And scattered their legions was mightier far;
They fled like the chaff from the scourge that pursued them;
  Vain were their steeds and their chariots of war.
Daughter of Zion, the power that hath saved thee
  Extolled with the harp and the timbrel should be;
Shout, for the foe is destroyed that enslaved thee;
  The oppressor is vanquished, and
    Zion is free!

The name of the tune used is "Hanover," and it is composed by Johann C. W. A. Mozart. A number of readers answered this request, some of whom sent the hymn, which is contained in many hymnals.

"Mountains, Ye Are Growing Old"

Mrs. R. WISNER, Binghamton, N. Y.—I enclose the piece wanted by A. C. in your issue of Jan. 8, which I found in a very old school reader. The title is "Mountains" and the author's name is E. M. Morse. The lines wanted

Mountains! ye are growing old. your ribs of granite are getting weak and rotten; your muscles are losing their fatness; your hoarse voices are heard only at the distant intervals; your volcanic heart throbs feebly, and your lava-blood is thickening, as the Winters of many ages gather their chilling snows around your venerable forms. * * * Old Father Time, that sexton of earth, has dug you a deep, dark tomb; and in silence ye shall sleep after sea and shore shall have been pressed by the feet of the apocalyptic angel through the long watches of an eternal night

A Panorama of the Boer War As a Soldier Saw It

Deneys Reitz Tells a Tragic, Moving, and Glamourous Story of the South African Conflict

COMMANDO. By Deneys Reitz. With a preface by General J. C. Smuts. 313 pp. New York: Charles Boni. (Paper Books) 75 cents.

By R. L. DUFFUS

THIS remarkable book, written by a 21-year-old boy just after the South African war and now published after the boy has grown into middle life, fought side by side with his old enemies in the World War, and served as a Cabinet Minister and Member of Parliament under the British flag, is far more than an adventure story. Yet, considered solely as such, it is unquestionably one of the great personal narratives of our day. "To me," says General Smuts in his introduction, "it is a wonderful book—wonderful in its simplicity and realism, its calm intensity and absorbing human interest." The present reviewer would not strike out a word of this high commendation. Deneys Reitz's story is tragic, glamourous and moving. It is wholly worthy of the heroic episodes which it so powerfully and so unaffectedly records.

Deneys Reitz was one of the five sons of a former President of the Orange Free State. At 17 he obtained leave from President Kruger himself to enlist in the Boer Army, and fought straight through until hostilities were ended three years later. His first campaign was with the army under General Joubert, which invaded Natal in the Fall of 1899. With this force he took part in the advance on Ladysmith and in the desperate fighting when the English attempted to force the passage of the Tugela. When the English General Buller finally got his men across and the siege of Ladysmith was raised, young Reitz, with that free and easy habit of transferring from one commando to another which was common among the Boer soldiery, went back to fight in the Free State. By this time the English had brought so many soldiers into South Africa that it was no longer possible for the Boers to meet their main armies in the open field, and the Boer leaders determined to wear their enemies down by guerrilla tactics. The rest of the story is a breath-taking account of young Reitz's experiences as an irregular, in the course of which he wandered, meeting with desperate perils and bitter hardships, all the way from the Transvaal to the western part of Cape Colony.

If the narrative is accepted as literally true—and it is told in such a way that one does unquestioningly accept it—high courage and patriotic devotion were for once rewarded. Young Reitz went through the most appalling dangers without a serious scratch. While other men were killed or horribly wounded all about him he went unscathed. Again and again he outlasted the comrades with whom he had tented and messed. But this immunity does not stretch coincidence too far. He wrote his book because he survived to do so. Other men who might have had as much to tell are buried in South African soil all the way from the Tugela to the valley of the Orange River. The immense tragedy of a brutal war of aggression, with its sacrifice not only of the flower of South African youth but of thousands of women, children and old men, hangs over every page.

Yet this book, though written so soon after the events it describes, is never bitter. Young Reitz felt no enmity for the men he had to kill, nor they for him. The Boer commandos, with no hospital service of their own, left their wounded to the English, knowing that they would be cared for without distinction of flag or race. "He was," says Reitz of an English officer whom he encountered when he rode under a flag of truce into Concordia in the western side of Cape Colony, "the most disagreeable, in fact the only disagreeable, Englishman whom I met in the war, for with this one exception I had no unpleasant word from officer or private in all the time we were out against them." The farm burning carried out under orders from Lord Roberts, with the indirect result that 25,000 women and children died in the concentration camps, might have merited strong language from any Boer writer. It has earned strong language from English writers. But Reitz confines himself to a statement of facts, the more scathing for its reticence:

> The intention was to undermine the morale of the fighting-men, but the effect was exactly the opposite, from what I saw. Instead of weakening, they became only the more resolved to hold out, and this policy, instead of shortening the war, prolonged it by a year or more.

The interest of the narrative, never lacking from the first pages, in which the old-time life in the Orange Free State is rapidly sketched in, rises to a pitch which literally does not permit the reader willingly to lay the book down. We see the impressive beginning of the Natal invasion, with "the plain alive with horsemen, guns and cattle, all steadily going forward to the frontier." Reitz, though apparently this is his only book, has the eye of the born writer. Thus he tells us of his first sight of the enemy:

From the Cover Design by Rockwell Kent for "Commando."

> Toward midday the weather cleared somewhat, and while it still continued misty, patches of sunshine began to splash the plain behind us, across which we had approached the mountain overnight. And then, far down, into one of these sunlit spaces rode a troop of English horsemen about 300 strong.

Even at the beginning the war was carried on informally, so far as the Boers were concerned, with much independent going and coming and many private exploits. Indeed, as Reitz says, every Boer was his own commander. Nothing could have been less like the greater war which was to come, nor less like anything which could happen today. Airplanes and tanks alone, had they then been in military use, would have made easy the path of the aggressor. It was the absence of such devices that made possible that long, pitiful, heroic warfare into which the Boers entered when their field armies were broken up. Of the nature of that warfare we learn vividly from the pages of this book—its never-ending perils, the hardihood and indomitable resolution which it required of those who undertook it and the Homeric thrills to be found in its rare moments of success.

Reitz never moralizes or sentimentalizes. Indeed, it is as though he had not time—as though he were carried forward with the rush of his own narrative. His final exploit, the long trek from the Orange Free State to Cape Colony, stripped his thoughts, apparently, down to a splendid primitive marrow. Creeping across railway tracks under cover of night, in constant danger of attack by patrols or armored trains; dodging between the English columns which were everywhere on the march and occasionally exchanging shots with their advance guards; beating off an unexpected attack of natives in Basutoland; hemmed in on the mountain ridges of the south by English detachments in overwhelming numbers; escaping time and time again by hidden and dangerous paths; meeting with General Smuts and joining his command of some 300 men; going from sixty to eighty hours without rest or sleep; riding all night, with the English in pursuit and sleet which froze men's rags of clothing to their bodies like coats of mail; emerging from these nerve-racking experiences to capture British camps, burn wagon trains and by a series of daring actions take over nearly 400 miles of Cape Colony, from the Olifants to the Orange River; finally, to have to surrender because "Lord Kitchener's relentless policy of attrition was slowly breaking the hearts of the commandos" and because "every homestead was burned, all crops and live stock destroyed and there was nothing left but to bow to the inevitable"—such were the experiences in which Young Reitz had a part, alone with half a dozen equally resolute companions or as a member of a larger force. It will be an extraordinary pulse which will not quicken with the reading, and an unusual reader who even after the lapse of years will not be inspired to admiration, pity and perhaps indignation. The best analogy an American can have is to imagine Washington's forces driven to the hills after the Winter at Valley Forge and continuing the War of Independence as disorganized but unconquered bands.

It is pleasant to know, however, that the young author lived to see his beloved South Africa united and free in everything but name, and that this "lamentable tale of things done long ago—and ill done" will revive no ancient grudges. From Spion Kop to the day when, scarred with wounds, he marched to the Rhine in command of the First Royal Scots Fusiliers, Colonel Reitz has lived through so much as to be beyond rancor. But though he has doubtless learned much since he wrote the last words of his book, twenty-seven years ago, as an exile in Madagascar, he need not blush for one of them, first or last.

Carl Schurz and His Americanization

THE AMERICANIZATION OF CARL SCHURZ. By Chester Verne Easum. 374 pp. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press. $3.50.

CARL SCHURZ, his brilliant personality and the striking story of his life, have hardly had from writers of biography and history the attention they deserve. He should be much better known because of the outstanding importance and molding influence of his activities in the public service. Mr. Easum has devoted his book to the first decade of Schurz's life in the United States, from 1852 to the beginning of the Civil War, and has produced an intensive study of the process which made of his subject an ardent and militant American patriot. In his preface he "frankly hopes" that at least some of his readers will be disappointed that he stopped at this dramatic moment instead of telling the story to its end. And when he adds that it is "with the greatest regret that the study of the record is temporarily abandoned," he seems to promise the rest of the interesting tale at some future time. But for the present he is absorbed solely in what he describes as "a study in Americanization as interesting as his [Schurz's] phenomenal rise to prominence was romantic," adding that his purpose in this book has been to discover "how 'the brilliant German' was made into a devoted American citizen and his influence upon public affairs even while the process of Americanization was going on."

Mr. Easum very wisely begins his study of this Americanization process with an account of his subject's life in Europe before he came to this country in 1852, "a precociously mature young man who had already developed and revealed many of those peculiar qualities of mind and character which later made him so distinctive and colorful a figure in the history of two generations." There was little to be made over in Carl Schurz in order to make a good American, one of the very best, out of the young man of twenty-three who came here, outlawed from his own country because of his share in the revolutionary activities of 1848, and a good deal discouraged and disillusioned by the failure of his and his companions' efforts to keep burning the embers of desire for political freedom and liberalized government they had risked so much to set on fire. In practically all the intellectual and psychological essentials he was already a good American when he came here. And he lived and died a much better American than are some whose ancestors have all been native to the land for generations. Therefore the process of Americanization in him was neither subtle nor complicated. Nevertheless it was exceedingly interesting and Mr. Easum's narrative shows it in detail. The author has gone to the original sources—Schurz's own "Reminiscences," his speeches, correspondence, political papers, manuscripts, the newspapers and pamphlets of the period and similar material—for most of his matter, and has studied, condensed, quoted, analyzed and commented in a clarifying and illuminating way, keeping always in mind the purpose with which he was working and refusing to be led astray from his chosen path. His aim has been to show how much Carl Schurz influenced the course and policies of this country while he himself was being trained by his environment, activities and interests into the patriotic American he so quickly became. The influences were reciprocal and perhaps the most interesting phase of Mr. Easum's study is that which portrays them as working in complemental fashion.

If Schurz came to this country with open mind and heart and already appreciative of its institutions, purposes and possibilities, no less appreciatively did the country welcome him as soon as it sensed his quality. His rise in public esteem and favor was both meteoric and romantic and the author brings out these qualities as he depicts his subject's career from his arrival, a penniless political refugee, to his very great, possibly decisive, share in the election of Lincoln, his fame as an orator, his mission as American representative in Spain. That is as far as the narrative takes him, with a brief glance at his return within a year, homesick for his adopted land and eager to join the fighting forces in the field.

While Mr. Easum is no iconoclast, he writes in judicial temper, with a tolerant smile for the foibles of temperament which his political opponents had no difficulty in finding in Carl Schurz's character. Now and then he quotes what they said—as, for instance, "a hare-lipped renegade who left his country for his country's good"—and he does not ignore the financial mistakes which through all this period kept the young American-in-the-making in a constant struggle to hold his head above water. At the end of the book he justly summarizes the story as "a record of a phenomenal rise in status, accompanied by corresponding growth in character."

IN THE LAND OF THE LION

By CHERRY KEARTON

One of the greatest wild animal photographers. Cherry Kearton, who accompanied Theodore Roosevelt on his famous African Expedition, now combines his dramatic photographs with his years of exciting adventure in the paradise of the king of beasts, which is Central Africa.

Mr. Kearton has studied lions as an anthropologist might study primitive tribesmen. He has seen them hunting, eating and courting. He has followed the elephant through plain and forest, observing all the moods of this most sagacious of creatures. He has photographed the charging rhino, the terrifying dreadnaught of the jungle. By the marshy banks of equatorial rivers he has seen hippopotami in schools of twenty and thirty tussling, swimming and searching for food. For days he has hidden in papyrus swamps in order to get a picture of the most dangerous of all wild animals, the African buffalo. He has barely escaped being caught and dragged to death by the steel-like jaws of the giant crocodile. He knows the habits of leopards, cheetahs and poisonous reptiles, of giraffes, impalla, zebras and hyenas.

"In the Land of the Lion" tells it all. Here is the haunting, thrilling magic of Central Africa. All booksellers, $3.50

News and Views of Literary London

LONDON.

IF books on art, especially Italian art, don't sell now, they never will. For the marvelous collection of masterpieces at Burlington House has struck the popular imagination, and has quickened an appetite for knowledge among people who are normally indifferent to such things. Pre-eminent among the new publications is "An Introduction to Italian Painting" (Cassell), by Sir Charles Holmes, who from 1909 to 1929 was director of the National Portrait Gallery and the National Gallery, successively. His long experience in these institutions has given him, in addition to his other qualifications, a first-hand acquaintance with the needs of the ordinary visitor to art galleries, and he has sacrificed a good deal of the appearance of erudition in order to keep in touch with the audience he is addressing. He reduces names and dates to a minimum, and he provides a novel means to understanding by including a map to illustrate the chief centres of artistic activity in Italy from A. D. 1300 to the close of the eighteenth century. Among other recent or forthcoming books are "Italian Painting," in Faber's Miscellany Series, by A. C. Clutton-Brock, son of a late distinguished critic; "The Italian Masters" (Low), by Horace Shipp; "Studies in the Italian Renaissance" (Methuen), by Herbert M. Vaughan, and a translation of Paul Muratoff's "Fra Angelico" (Warne), with 296 admirable reproductions in collotype. The Oxford University Press announces the collection in a single volume, entitled "The Italian Painters of the Renaissance," of the four standard works by Bernard Berenson on the subject.

IF one wishes a striking contrast to Italian art one may turn to Oswald Sirén's "History of Early Chinese Art, Vol. I" (Benn), or to A. E. Grantham's "Porcelain Pagodas and Palaces of Jade" (Methuen), or to Ludwig Bachhofer's "Early Indian Sculpture" (Pegasus Press). Those who are interested in tracking art to its remotest origins will welcome Dorothea F. Bleck's "Rock Paintings From South Africa" (Methuen). Various phases of English art are dealt with in H. C. Whaite's "St. Christopher in English Medieval Wall-painting" (Benn), W. S. Sparrow's "George Stubbs and Ben Marshall" (Cassell), R. W. Symonds's "English Furniture From Charles II to George II" (The Connoisseur), and Herbert Read's "Staffordshire Pottery Figures" (Duckworth). The idea of Eric Gill in "Art Nonsense and Other Essays" (Cassell) is to make art intelligible to the ordinary man. "The Scientific Examination of Pictures" (Bell), by Dr. A. Martin de Wild, is not for the amateur. It is an investigation of the pigments used by the Dutch and Flemish masters.

THE annual census of British book production, compiled by the Publishers' Circular, shows that 14,086 books were issued in 1929, as against 14,399 in 1928. Excluding pamphlets, reprints and new editions, there were 9,400 in 1929, as against 9,396 in 1928. An outstanding feature is the increase in translations. . . . According to J. C. Squire, the literature of 1929 was "notable rather for the amount of talk that it caused than for its qualities of intellect or art or its prospects of interesting posterity." Very much the same verdict is reached by Ernest Jeffs, who says that "if the final test of literary excellence is the desire to keep and re-read a book, 1929 was a poor year in literary creation." . . . The success of J. B. Priestley's "The Good Companions" inspires Oliver Way to predict, in The Graphic, that we shall have a crop of picaresque novels in the future.

The only man of letters in the New Year honors list is Arthur Ponsonby, and his peerage is doubtless conferred for political reasons rather than as a recognition of his delightful books on diaries and diarists. By the way, why do American papers and books persist in knighting Professor Gilbert Murray? Even such an accurate book as Mark van Doren's "Anthology of World Poetry" refers to him throughout as Sir Gilbert Murray. . . . Colonel T. E. Lawrence's next book will be a translation of Homer, with illustrations by Bruce Rogers. . . . Nearly 20,000 copies have been sold of "The Legion Book." . . . Some of the booklet's in Faber's Criterion Miscellany Series have been selling at the rate at 1,000 a day.

The New Statesman notes that American novels, e. g., "Main Street," find their point of departure in some special type of society far oftener than English novels do. . . . Robert Graves has publicly retracted a statement in "Good-bye to All That," which cast a slur on Scottish soldiers in the World War. The first 300 copies of the first edition of this book are fetching £8 apiece. They contain references to Siegfried Sassoon that have since been omitted. . . . A. P. Garland's "Says Sergeant Murphy" (Arnold) is, evidently of the school of the Mr. Dooley books. The imaginary mouthpiece through whom the author pungently expresses his views on a number of things is a London commissionaire. . . . Richard Aldington pays Wyndham Lewis the compliment of calling him "the Macaulay of the age," and, as though this were not enough, adds that he is "vastly more intelligent."

HERBERT W. HORWILL.

Ambassador Claudel As a Dramatist

PARIS.

IN addition to being the French Ambassador to the United States M. Paul Claudel also is one of the three or four greatest living French authors. I would even say that he is the one whose "sense of grandeur" is best developed. If one were to attempt to explain the nature of his new drama, "Le Soulier de Satin," by comparison with other works one could mention only such masterpieces as Goethe's "Faust," "The Divine Comedy" and the writings of Lope de Vega and Calderon.

To tell the story of this drama is almost impossible. It is an "action espagnole en quatre journées," laid in the Spain of the close of the sixteenth or the beginning of the seventeenth century. Doña Prouhèze, a beautiful woman with an old husband, is about to accompany him to Africa, where he is to govern the possessions of the King of Spain. But she loves Don Rodrigue, and he, in turn, desires her so passionately that nothing beside her exists for him. Doña Prouhèze, feeling that if she does not have some aid she will throw herself into her lover's arms, puts her satin slipper into the hands of a statue of the Virgin. If she should now attempt to abandon herself to evil she would limp.

In many scenes which show us, in turn, the ocean, America, Spain, Japan and Africa, "that fiery spot on the belly of the earth," we watch Prouhèze and Rodrigue approaching death without yielding to their love. The end of Rodrigue, slave and hero at once, is of a beauty which recalls that of Velasquez's beggars.

In a remarkable American book, "A Preface to Morals," I have read that for many people the world is no longer an intelligible drama in which God and man are the players. But for M. Paul Claudel human life is still a divine drama. For him we are but the symbols with which God writes a history that is beyond our understanding. One feels that he is so sure of this that doubt would seem absurd to him. And hence his view of history is extraordinarily lofty and substantial.

That certainly gives him a love of life which our hesitant generation knows no longer. "Sad? How can one say without impiety that the truth of these things, which are the works of a perfect God, is sad? Is it not absurd to say that the world He has created in His image is smaller than we? I agree that youth is the time of illusions; but this is because youth imagines things to be infinitely less beautiful and varied and desirable than they are."

It is possible not to share M. Paul Claudel's faith. But it is difficult not to be touched by its force, by its sublime and tragic humor and profound humanity.

M. BERNARD GRASSET has published—in a collection called "Pour Mon Plaisir" because only books he likes are included—a curious novel entitled "David Golder." Its author is a hitherto unknown young woman, Mme. Irène Némirovsky. She had sent her novel to Grasset and asked him to mail a notification to "General Delivery" in case the book should be accepted. But the reader to whom it had been assigned was slow in handing in his report, and when he finally did the young woman had grown tired of calling for a reply that never arrived. It was only with great difficulty that the publisher succeeded in finding her.

The book is amazing, for it is of a forcefulness rare in novels written by women. From a certain point of view it recalls Balzac's "Père Goriot"; but it is even more tragic, for the old Jewish banker, David Golder, finally dies for a girl who is not even his daughter, whose father was his wife's lover. Although the book is rather too gloomy and romantic for my taste I recognize its great qualities. Its conversations are lively and true to life. It keeps the reader's interest at a constant high pitch and, somehow, gives him the impression of somberly beautiful biblical poetry, of a never ceasing echo of the "vanity of vanities" of Ecclesiastes.

M. Jean Mistler, who is both an author and a Deputy, has given us a novel, "Ethelka" (published by Calmann-Lévy), which contains his memories of his early career; for he used to be a diplomat and the secretary of the Embassy at Buda-

Two Mystical Novels from Germany

DER WEG NACH ILOK (The Way to Ilok). A novel by Wilhelm von Scholz. Berlin-Grunewald: Horen Verlag.

NATHANAEL MAECHLER. A novel by Hermann Stahr. Berlin-Grunewald: Horen Verlag.

BERLIN.

BOTH these authors call their works novels, and as a matter of fact the construction of the books is that of the novel. But the content is hardly of the nature of idle entertainment. We must read these books very thoughtfully and carefully in order to understand fully the spirit of their authors. These are not novels to read today and forget tomorrow. They remain in our minds; after weeks or months we again become conscious of some thought or another which they contain and we feel that a veil is lifted from our own souls. These works reveal the inner workings of the human soul which are seldom understood by men, whom they concern so very closely. These two books are religious, but in a sense quite other than that in which this adjective commonly is used.

Wilhelm von Scholz is a mystic and student of the occult. Seriously and fervently he seeks out the threads which bind the souls of men to the super-human. Premonitions, dreams, visions, second-sight are familiar to him, full of value and significance. He sees them as the revelation of destinies in which the growth of the human soul approaches its goal of divine perfection. The books of Wilhelm von Scholz are published quite far apart; he feels deeply the gravity and dignity of his task. Stylistically, his work is perfect, saturated with ideas and images. His thoughts are developed in long, artistically arranged periods which alternate with brief, epitomized passages, each carefully put in its proper place. The flow of narrative is rarely interrupted by conversation; the only exceptions to this classic rule are made in the case of conversations that serve to elucidate the action.

Several years ago Wilhelm von Scholz attracted considerable attention with his novel, "Perpetua oder die Schwestern Breitenschnitter," which was discussed in these columns at the time. It was a story of twin sisters whose souls were so deeply bound together that the curious and romantic events of their lives were interchanged in some mystic fashion. Perpetua, the saint, was also Katharina, the witch, and was burned instead of her, while Katharina herself endowed with occult powers, the very opposite of her sister, rose to the highest honors as a bride of the Church. A mystical tale of the duality of the human soul and, at the same time, of its unity.

Scholz likes to lay his stories in the fourteenth century, the age when men were profoundly moved, confused and exalted by magic forces of whose power we can hardly conceive today. The inner life of these people was as colorful and adventurous as the external events of the time. Scholz's skill at describing festivals, church ceremonies, tortures, executions, burnings and the like is given unrestricted play in this book also.

THE road to Ilok is the life's course of a Bernardine monk, Johannes von Lazistrano, a giant in spirit. From a peasant boy in the Abruzzi he rises to the post of Grand Inquisitor, becomes a great political and military leader. With the power of his ascetic will he checks his fierce desire for woman—the extraordinary richness of his nature gives him the power of suggestion, so that he is able to heal the sick and, in the sense of that believing period, to perform miracles. But at the same time he gives vent to his repressed passions in orgies of cruelty. He persecutes the Hussites in Bohemia, consigns innumerable Silesian Jews to the stake, fares forth against the Turks, acts as a great destroyer wherever his unquenchable thirst for power takes him. But his victims appear to him when he is ill, he struggles against them for the concept of justice until he is vanquished and, under the gallows where hang three youths executed by his command, suddenly comes terpretation of the material. Mr. Harper seems to have carried the day, for Mr. Payne's theory peeks out only in a footnote and in the last paragraph of the Preface. In 1855 Maria Beadnell, after a silence of nearly twenty-five years, wrote Dickens a letter in which she sought to renew their acquaintance. For the moment the old flame revived, and he wrote her several unguarded, indecorous letters. Then he saw her again, and there is a decided change in the tone of his correspondence. The Harper theory, which is substantially Professor Baker's theory, is that he was cruelly disillusioned when they met, and that his impressions of the new Maria are contained in his portrait of Flora Finching in "Little Dorrit." Mr. Harper tells us that Mr. Payne has a new theory on both these points, but, maddeningly enough, we are not told what it is. It is to be hoped that Mr. Payne will use another medium—perhaps an article in "The Dickensian"—to convey it to us. He is the president of the Boston branch of the Dickens Fellowship and the author of an excellent book on "Dickens's Days in Boston." Whatever he has to say will be listened to with respect.

The commentary in these luxuriously made books is leisurely and somewhat repetitious. In some cases there is an overabundance of interpretation. Passages from the novels bearing on the subjects under discussion are reprinted at length, and why Dickens's first published sketch, "Mr. Minns and His Cousin," which appears in every copy of "Sketches by Boz" should form an appendix to the Beadnell volume is something of a mystery. The discussion of the prostitute type in "The Charity of Charles Dickens" seems to me somewhat sentimental, almost as if the writers had taken the play of "Camille" seriously. And at one point I think the interpretation open to serious criticism. Our authors evidence considerable perturbation over the attacks that have been made of late on the character of Dickens, but they themselves are guilty of one when, quite gratuitously, they remark of Dickens that "there is no supposition that he was any different from other young men who receive their early education in matters of sex from those best qualified to teach." This is not an assertion which any man should make about another unless he has evidence at hand. In this case, what evidence there is points the other way. David Copperfield tells us that he read "Tom Jones" and "Peregrine Pickle" in his tender years, and he adds, whatever harm was in them "was not there for me; I knew nothing of it." It is perfectly true that Dickens was fascinated by the underworld, but, as I have argued in "The Man Charles Dickens," there is no evidence to show that he ever went there except as a spectator. Squalor and misery and vice awakened sympathy in him—not lust. The evil that he saw was not for him. Dickens wrote the "Sketches by Boz" when he was a young man and all the lust of life was surging in him. The man who can read the last page of "The Pawnbroker's Shop" or the description of the prostitutes in "A Visit to Newgate" and continue to suppose that the man who wrote those pages ever contributed to the degradation of the class he describes must be possessed of an excellent imagination.

But these are caviling criticisms. Messrs. Payne and Harper deserve thanks and congratulations. They have enlarged our understanding of one of the most interesting of men, and one who contributed as much to human happiness as any man who ever lived.

to the realization that all life is nothingness, that it is but illusion and not reality. And all his own horribly savage work for the honor of God was but illusion, error, wretched nothingness. This feeling of complete renunciation of all things earthly finally drives him to the obscure little cloister among the cliffs, Ilok, his last refuge, where he goes to die. As his soul leaves his body his most faithful disciple sees three shadowy figures receive the master and lead him away: Huss, the champion of truth; the Jew Ephraim, who voluntarily endured death at the stake in order to save his aged mother, and the young Turk who had died at the Christian warrior's feet, crying: "Allah is Allah!" This is powerfully symbolic of the divine element in man which triumphs over all differences of dogma. Everything in Scholz's writing bespeaks great vision, powerful construction and bold virility.

HERMANN STAHR'S book may be discussed more briefly, for the life of his hero, the brooding journeyman tanner, Nathanael Maechler, is simple and uncomplicated. Stahr likes to depict the slow-moving figures of the Silesians which Gerhardt Hauptmann described in his early works. A deep spirit, penetrating into the inner recesses of the human soul, is Stahr. We can hardly believe that this tanner, when he is a happy husband and father and the leader of his community, still feels the dishonor of the night in his youth when a demon-like mountain witch seduced him. Still less can we feel that his wife and child also are drawn into this sinister whirlpool of melancholy.

The son of that wild night becomes a criminal. The wife, a vigorous mountain woman, screams shrilly and dies when her husband confesses his sin of long ago. Nathanael feels that he has atoned and dies in peace only after he has gone to confession again after thirty years and has received the holy communion. This, no doubt, can be understood only by a believing Catholic.

The error in the composition of this book lies, I believe, in the fact that Nathanael was passively rather than actively guilty of the sin which torments him so. The strong man he appears to be should have been able to master the situation.

pest. The book has an interesting historic background: It is the story of those few tragic months when Emperor Charles, coming to Budapest in an airplane, sought to win back his kingdom, and of the revolutionary period which followed the failure of this attempt. M. Mistler has combined this historic drama with a fiction plot.

Deviating from my usual rule, I should like to call your attention to a translation. It is a Rumanian book which has just been published in French and which will be more accessible for a large number of American readers in this form than in the original language. M. Rebreanu is one of the best Rumanian novelists. His "Ciuleandra" is the story of the son of a powerful politician; he kills his wife, and his father, in order to save him from prison, has him shut up in an insane asylum, where he really loses his mind. The subject is horrible, but its treatment is marked by vigor and simplicity.

"Spider Web" and Other Recent Works of Fiction

SPIDER WEB. By Marjorie Muir Worthington. 263 pp. New York: Cape & Smith. $2.50.

ALTHOUGH "Spider Web" is an excellent and compelling story, the depiction and development of character have not been neglected, as they sometimes are in novels where the story is paramount. In Hedwig Mendelsohn, Marjorie Worthington has created a personage of Gargantuan proportions, or more than life-size significance, who dominates and overshadows the tale. The other characters move in pale circles through the spider web of which Hedwig is the centre, awed into timidity by her gigantic arrogance vitiated by her enormous vitality.

The scene of the story is white Harlem. The Mendelsohns, a wealthy family of German extraction, lived in a huge, ornate brownstone house fronting Mount Morris Park. Since the death of her husband Hedwig Mendelsohn has ruled autocratically over her house, her children and the millinery business which provided the Mendelsohn wealth. She had become almost a legend in the trade—a fat, shrewd, dishonest and uncomfortably plain-spoken old woman, who employed her sons at small salaries in the business she had built, who ruthlessly married off her daughters to suit her own inclinations, who had never in her life been daunted or defeated by anything. Her daughter Dora was the household drudge, a thin, unattractive girl approaching permanent spinsterhood. Hedwig initiates a social campaign—a very torture to Dora—which finally results in the capture of a weak and rather idealistic young man, Max Bickof, a medical student. Hedwig would have preferred a business man, "a flesh-and-blood man, with money in his pockets," but she knew that Dora could not afford to take chances.

Scornfully, after Max had failed his medical exams., Hedwig married him to Dora and took him into the business as salesman, berating him for softness and bloodlessness, and demanding that he sell flowers and feathers and earn the bread which he ate timidly at the Mendelsohn table. The tragedy of Max and Dora is only beginning when Hedwig is stricken and condemned by a weakened heart to the life of a chronic invalid. She lingers, confined to her bed, a mountain of obese, sardonic flesh, quivering with hate at her inactivity, still controlling the lives of her children and the firm. When Harry, her favorite son, brings the business to bankruptcy, Max and Dora are saddled with the care of the helpless old woman, still condemned to smart under the lash of her scorn, to bear the brunt of her bitterness and disappointment. Hedwig lingers for twenty years, while Max painfully molds himself to the pattern the Mendelsohns had set for him. Goaded by Dora's nagging, he embarks timidly upon a business venture of his own, in order to buy limousines for his wife and fur coats for his daughters.

Miss Worthington has put movement and life and credibility into her tale. It has an excellent pictorial quality—Max's timidity and futility are admirably contrasted with the courage and directness and vigor of old Hedwig. She may be—indeed, she is—an appalling old reprobate, but it is impossible not to admire and delight in her. And as far as the moral aspects of her story are concerned, Miss Worthington has forborne to comment. She had been content to submerge her own opinions, whatever they may be, in the facts and incidents of the story. The result is a compact and integrated work, with characters which stand out clearly and vitally and with an interest which never flags.

AT AN ENGLISH INN

POET'S PUB. By Eric Linklater. 373 pp. New York: Jonathan Cape and Harrison Smith. $2.50.

WHEN a young Englishman like Eric Linklater sets out to write a novel, two things at least are certain. It will be clever and it will be well written. One surmises that the author of this book is much the sort of person his hero is, a graduate of one of England's great universities, a young man a little bored with life, possessing a flair for poetry and a healthy and critical interest in the pulchritude of young women. He undoubtedly is extremely popular at dinner parties, where the manner in which he says things rather than what he says makes him important. There are many such young men in England, cultivated, caustic and glib, and the works they write are exactly what one would expect them to be, a sort of hot-house variety of intellectual horticulture.

The story of "Poet's Pub" is neither a strain on one's mental faculties nor a divining rod of one's emotional springs. A young poet, Saturday Keith, christened so because he was born on the last day of the week, finding his individual form of literature unappreciated and unremunerative, takes the job of running an inn of a most superior sort for Lady Mercy, the mother of his friend Quentin Cotton. Most of the action takes place at the inn, where are gathered the various characters who mildly keep the plot going. There is Joan Benbow, daughter of Professor Benbow, with whom Keith simply and uncynically falls in love; there is Nelly Bly, an adventuresome young woman of good family who takes a job as chambermaid in the pub in order to get material for a book and gets, it is presumed, Quentin Cotton for a husband, instead; there is an American professor called Van Buren, who has worked out a method for extracting oil from coal, and an unusual and highly amusing American scoundrel who has followed the professor to England to steal his formulae.

It all sounds very highly involved, but it isn't. Never once does one miss a heartbeat in suspense, terror or surprise. As a matter of fact, the author probably never intended that one should. He is more intent on being daring and scintillating in the manner of Norman Douglas and Aldous Huxley, but he doesn't quite carry it off, lacking both the mellow satiric sophistication of the first and the biting originality of the second. It is obvious, however, that he was having a rare good time writing the book, and there doubtless will be many who will have a rare good time reading it. When he has people like Wesson, the American rascal, on the scene, or Holly, the bartender who has invented a new cocktail, he is at his best; when he includes with either plot or characterization a chapter that has nothing to do but is written merely to give him a chance to be sophomorically Rabelaisian, he is only a small boy writing vulgar words in public places.

THE NOBLE SAVAGE

THE MAN WITHOUT A NECKTIE. By Mme. Arbib and M. Hauser. Translated by Charlotte Brewster Jordan. New York: Dickens Publishing Company. $2.50.

SINCE the time of Rousseau, there have been periodic revivals of interest in the back-to-nature cult and in the noble savage. Within the last few months several excellent novels have pictured the North American Indian, and works of non-fiction have dealt with the problem of a retreat from the cities and a return to more primitive conditions of living.

"The Man Without a Necktie" is Rousseauistic and both novel and social critique. In it the savage is an Indian from South America, and the criticism is a departure from the usual in that the machine is hailed not as a slave-maker but as a liberator. In other respects the material is not new, for the philosophy of the book is as old as Christianity—and very like it—and the plot is even older, for it goes back to the Bible.

Moacir, from the tribe of the Bororos, became a prophet in a strange land. The youth was educated by a European who had fled to primitive life as a refuge from a society which did not share his aspirations for nobility. All that the teacher found ugly in civilized life was refined away from the soul of the little savage whom he adopted. Moacir easily grew to believe that his yearning for perfection was the ideal not only of his teacher but of all civilized men. When the two made their pilgrimage to Europe, the older man died on the way, leaving the boy to face his disillusionment alone.

Moacir fell into the hands of an impecunious Count and the impresario of an operatic troup. These two humbugs robbed him of his small legacy. Not content with that they exploited his talents for their financial benefit. They exhibited him on the stage "like a monkey," as he soon decided, and he became the rage, because of his plaintive Indian songs, his wild native dances and his much-advertised "savagery." Full of disgust at the sheep-like audiences and his leech-like "benefactors," he ran away to live at the People's Hotel. There he found friends among the derelicts of society.

Moacir's next abode was the home of a wealthy and fashionable Parisian family. He fell violently in love with a beautiful married woman who was seized with a gripping curiosity to know what it would be like to be loved by a savage. It would have to be through a woman that Moacir lost his desire for perfection. And it would have to be from the depths that he rose to the heights. That is the cycle that prophets run—at least in literature—and Moacir became a social prophet and a philosopher to the masses. He discarded the badge of civilization which he had worn for three months—"the necktie that separates heart from brain and strangles truth." For civilization, as seen by a savage, is only a mask to conceal hypocrisy and materialism.

Moacir's story is told with an eager sincerity that brings dignity to an old story and freshness to a philosophy that we have heard from babyhood. We have, perhaps, heard it so often that we have ceased to think of it. Mme. Arbib and her son, M. Hauser, give to their message a burning sense of truth which loses nothing of its potency by being wrapped in a style suggestive of Gallic suavity. "The Man Without a Necktie" is much more than a sugar-coated tract: it is a story of more than ordinary vitality blended artistically with the idealism of solidarity and universal peace.

AN EMBITTERED HERO

PETER LAVELLE. By John Brophy. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.50.

THE post-war generation now occupies the centre of the stage, and it is to his rather unfavorable opinions concerning this generation that John Brophy devotes the greater part of his new and not particularly interesting novel, "Peter Lavelle." Peter himself, through whose eyes we see the other characters as well as the incidents of the story, is of the generation that fought in the World War. He is Captain Peter Lavelle, M. C., with a leather leg in place of the flesh and blood and bone one he left at Paschendaele. This generation of his has been called "the lost generation"; but in Peter's belief, not his contemporaries, the young people of the present day represent the true lost generation:

> Afraid of the voice of God within them; clinging to the complacent assumption that they were an enlightened, fearless generation, even while they sank deeper into their material degeneration, their interminable busyness with motor cars, drink, games, dances, gossip and any form of trivial distraction that was organized for them.

There are many pages of this sort of thing, and three of the new "younger generation" to act as exemplifiers: Hugh Richmond, whom Peter regards as decidedly above the majority, though to the reader he seems a mixture of ill-breeding, stupidity and crass conceit; Eugene Turton, who was a slimy sort of worm, brainless, but with, or so Peter thought, one semi-decent spot in him, and Daphne, the musical comedy actress, young, pretty, alluring, who behaved as much like a wanton as possible, but remained technically virtuous. Daphne, at the last, was ready to sacrifice herself as foolishly, and supposedly as nobly, as any heroine of a nineteenth century sentimental novel, but the reader has not the smallest faith in her sudden heroism. Contrasted with these are Isobel Marks, of the war generation, who was serene and clear-eyed and intelligent and generally admirable, and

Notes on Rare Books

THE number of scholars and special investigators who look to Providence for guidance grows with each passing year. We have reference to that particular part of Providence which houses the treasures of the John Carter Brown Library. This magnificent institution has, for the past quarter of a century of its existence at Brown University, been steadily adding to its resources and concurrently throwing open its rich source of material to pre-nineteenth century American history to a growing procession of scholarly pilgrims. In the annual report for 1928-9, issued a short while ago, we are told that the library accommodated 1,700 visitors, of whom 345 were research workers; made 1,670 photostat prints at the request of investigators, and wrote more than 500 letters in reply to inquiries. The special topics studied there range from such remote subjects as the language of the aboriginal tribes of Peru to the history of flags and naval signals. But this little brochure is anything but a mere statistical report. For it comes from the gifted pen of Mr. Lawrence C. Wroth, the librarian, one of our wisest and most entertaining commentators on rare books and manuscripts.

OF Mr. Wroth's flair for writing of old books and things we have spoken more than once. He is one of those scholars who has the faculty of seeing the living drama behind the rare tomes and maps he studies, and who has, moreover, the gift of making them real and present to us. He is a genuine humanist. No matter where or how far he delves into the past, it is this acute perception of the place its treasures occupy in human affairs that gives such a fresh, sparkling quality to his writings. He traverses a wide field and invariably brings home a picture of the life of the past, even its commonplace, routine occurrences, and because they are so remote in actual time they become romances for us today. Stobnicza's "Introduction in Ptholomei Cosmographia," Cracow, 1512, once thought to be of the highest importance in the history of cartography, becomes a steal from the Waldsemüller map of 1507, "appropriated with acknowledgment by the good Brother John of the Poor Little Ones of Christ." Catesby's "The Natural History of Carolina, Florida and the Bahama Islands," two magnificent colored plate volumes, printed in London, 1731-43, evokes the picture of the author, Mark Catesby, a resident of Charleston, making excursions into the forests of the Southeastern Colonies, returning, not with furs and skins, but "with a trove in notebook and portfolio that has been a delight to succeeding generations."

Maintaining this same fine perspective, Mr. Wroth describes some fifteen of the chief acquisitions of the library during the year under consideration. These are treated historically, textually, bibliographically and from the standpoint of their utility to students of various special fields, such as navigation, history, maritime law, cartography, incunabula, natural history, typography and Americana. The library seems to have been extraordinarily fortunate, especially in the maps acquired, and its great wealth is emphasized by the character of the lacunae supplied. Taking them in Mr. Wroth's sequence, we begin with the "Calendarium" of "Regiomontanus" in the Latin edition printed by the author (Müller of Königsberg) at Nuremberg in 1474 (a copy of which in the possession of Columbus is said to have saved him and his forces from starvation through the hostility of the Porto Rican savages when he was enabled, through its table, to predict with uncanny accuracy an eclipse of the moon on Feb. 29, 1504). Second, the library now owns seven of the nine known tracts emanating from Yucatan during the conquest period, 1520-22, by adding the German news "plaquette" called "Newe zeittung. von dem Lande, das die Sponier fundan haben ym 1521. iare genant Jucatan." This copy contains six leaves, thereby proving that the example in the Berlin State Library with only four leaves is incomplete and not an earlier issue, as hitherto supposed. Third, there is the earliest mercantile law book written and printed in America, the "Labyrintho de Comercio terrestre y naval," by Juan de Hevia Bolaños, Lima, 1617. Fourth, we come to Catesby's "Natural History," mentioned before. Fifth is described a small parchment-bound volume compiled about 1670, containing a code for receiving signals in the British Navy.

ADDED now to the library's splendid cartographical collection, which includes some fine editions of Ptolemy, atlases of Ortelius, Blaeu and Janson, portolan atlases, the Stevens-John Carter Brown world map naming America, and hundreds of lesser manuscripts and printed maps, Mr. Wroth speaks of five, all miraculously acquired within the year, which are of the greatest rarity and importance. He gives an excellent account of them all, describing their limitations and defects, their contemporary utility and their scarcity. They are the first English world map of the new era, made by Robert Thorne at Bristol in 1527, included in Hakluyt's "Divers Voyages Touching the Discoverie of America," 1582, the John Carter Brown copy of the book now being the only one besides the two in the British Museum and the Huntington Library to contain both the Lok and the Thorne maps; the Wright-Molyneux world map in the second state, but untrimmed and with the sheets comprising it still separate in the three-volume Hakluyt referred to above; a colored copy of the large "Tauola vniuersale del paese di tutte le Indie occidentali," Venice, 1534, perhaps the most important of the early woodcut maps of the new world, known hitherto in only one copy, the fine though uncolored example in the New York Public Library; Stobnicza's map of America, 1512, which we cited before as copied from the hemispheres inset at the top of Waldsemüller's world map, the book containing it, Stobnicza's "Introductio," being known by only five other copies (one already in the John Carter Brown Library) of which but two have the map; and finally the crude "Map of the Northwest Parts of the United States of America," 1785, engraved by John Fitch, the unfortunate and unrecognized inventor of the steamboat, who made and sold this map to secure money in order to continue his experiments.

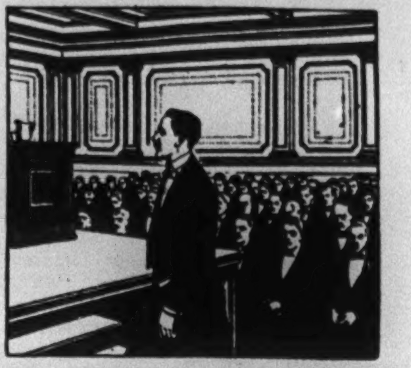
AT Heartman's, in Metuchen, N. J., there will be sold on Feb. 1 a collection of rare Americana, consisting of books and pamphlets mainly relating to the Colonial period of United States history. There are nearly two hundred lots, including many rare ones such as "An Account of The Committment, Arraignment Tryal and Condemnation of Nicholas Bayard," London, 1703; Burke's famous "Speech * * * on Conciliation," London, 1775; Forbe's "Florida," with the map in original unopened state; Hakluyt's "Voyages," the second edition, three volumes in two, folio, with the Molyneux map in facsimile; Samuel Johnson's "Taxation No Tyranny"; Murray's "Impartial History of the Present War in America," three volumes, 1779-80, and Nathaniel Ward's "A Religious Retreat Sounded to a Religious Army," 1647. The catalogue is admirably documented and contains a sensible foreword by Mr. Heartman, wherein he remarks: "When one surveys the field of rare books, one is astounded how cheap Americana really is."



Do eminent business leaders find the study of public speaking profitable? Let Mr. Joseph P. Day, New York's nationally-known auctioneer, who sells tens of millions of dollars' worth of property yearly, answer: "You have put into the Kleiser Course your own personal magnetism and enthusiasm. It has been of great service to me in my business and I commend it to others in the highest terms."

15 Minutes Daily
Make You Eager to Talk

Will better government result from the study of public speaking? The New York Herald Tribune in an enlightening article ably answers: "We have too many figures in American public life who would be great candidates and fine public servants if only they could talk to a thousand persons in a hall as well as they can to one person across a desk."

At dinners, political meetings, lodge meetings, social gatherings, and the numerous other public and semipublic occasions which are a part of every man's life, the man who can speak easily and confidently when called upon, possesses an envied advantage over the men who do not possess this ability.

Ready?

The great moment is here. You are called upon to "say a few words." Do chills creep up your back or are you prepared?

Upon the kind of answer you make to the question of preparation for public speaking may depend the success or failure of ambitious plans or hopes.

Capital, as well as state and national honors, come to men and women who "carry" people with them. They are the fortunate ones constantly being sought by influential leaders. The self-confident speaker is always in demand.

Your Turn Will Come — Prepare for It Now

And fifteen minutes of daily home study for a few weeks will accomplish what was formerly considered impossible. The "born-orator" myth—the idea that one must be a "natural talker"—was exploded long ago by Grenville Kleiser, the famous speech specialist. Years of practical experience in training young college men to develop personality and power, to acquire poise and self-confidence, to fortify an increased vocabulary with a tenacious, bulldog memory, led to the discovery that in every human being there is latent fluency, or eloquence of speech of varying degree.

This experience and knowledge led to another discovery—that finished public speaking can be taught by the correspondence plan—and the Grenville Kleiser Mail Course in Public Speaking came to inspire and uplift men and women in all walks of life.

Build a Winning Personality

In this course Mr. Kleiser does far more than train you to make after-dinner speeches, to tell stories and win applause in community or business board-meetings. He broadens your mental vision, lifts your mind out of the ruts and makes you a master of yourself. He helps to make you a leader.

Thousands of lawyers, including many district attorneys, have taken the Grenville Kleiser Mail Course in Public Speaking with admittedly remarkable results. And yet "born-speaker" ability was supposed to be the chief reason why men became lawyers.

Kleiser training has made small business men greater ones—mediocre salesmen real convincers—ministers physicians and politicians more successful.

If you would rise in the world let us mail full information that will lay bare the art of public speaking.

THE VANGUARD PRESS has the honor to announce that it has become the publishers of the works of NORMAN MATSON author of
DAY OF FORTUNE, FLECKER'S MAGIC, DR. FOGG
The first book by Mr. Matson to be published by the Vanguard Press will be THE LOG OF THE CORIOLANUS. It will appear in April.

Peter himself, an Irishman and a Puritan.

He is an architect, busy developing the estate of Tysons Manor when we meet him, an embittered man, with a habit of making disagreeable remarks, yet generally liked. Tysons Manor, once a large estate, is being built up with a number of small houses, and in one of these Peter, a widower, lives with his little son Christopher, who at the age of 6 has already developed a character which convinces his father that Christopher's generation will possess all the virtues. Peter is much interested in young Hugh Richmond's love for Daphne Semple, daughter of the owner of Tysons Manor. Daphne is carrying on an extremely violent flirtation with Eugene Turton, partner in an advertising firm, aged 25, with a wife of whom he is tired. Peter, for his part, is still faithful to his love, not for his dead wife, but for Isobel Marks, whom he had met and loved during the war. It is with the triangular affair of the three young people, and the reentrance of Isobel into Peter's life, that the plot is concerned.

THE SEAMY SIDE

A ROMAN HOLIDAY. By Don Ryan. 319 pp. New York: The Macaulay Company. $2.50.

MR. RYAN has butchered the motion picture business to make "A Roman Holiday." He tells a story of a hoochie-coochie dancer at Tia Juana who rose to be a comedy queen in the Alpha Comedies by her slapstick adaptation of Flaubert's "Temptation of Saint Anthony," was about to be starred in "Salome" when her lover committed suicide in a bath tub with a safety razor blade to the phonographic strains of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and who finally emerged as a woman director, producer of "Undertow," a drab, powerful screen drama of human flot-and-jetsam, and who then died.

Diana Hunter, née Maggie O'Hara, is the heroine of this scenario, which contains scarcely a "sequence" which would get past the censorship. It suggests all the unpleasant human aberrations and ends with a lynching. Diana is one of those women who dominate men. She drove Tom Egan, elegant scion of an overrefined San Francisco family, to his suicide, and ruined the career of Paul Watterson, the great mulatto movie star. Will Hays, though not by name, very properly gave orders that Diana should never appear in any American screen production. Her beauty consisted principally of "honey-colored" hair; her dramatic gifts of a rendition of the danse de ventre, and her mentality of esoteric readings of Flaubert, Oscar Wilde, the Hindu "Ananga Ranga, or Stage of the Bodiless," and of Spengler's "Untergang des Abendlandes."

Mr. Ryan himself writes savagely of "the supreme putrefaction of Puritanism, the ultimate hypocrisy that would not only conceal but cancel nature." He feels himself to be a Petronius writing of "a Hollywood that resembles the Cumae of Petronious, marked by the same grotesque extravagance, the exaltation of the vulgar and a demand for the satisfaction of abnormal appetites." He introduces a riffraff of prostitutes, dope fiends and perverts, and then observes that "there is no more dignity about the modern American than there is about a half-breed Indian." He talks in Spenglerian phrases about "type-true cultures of the soil" and introduces the German pessimist into every phase of his story, as well as in the dedication. The result is a lurid romance sired by Spengler out of Hollywood which makes American racial extinction seem a boon to humanity. As for the art by which Hollywood lives and moves (and talks) and has its being:

—selling America to the world through the medium of motion pictures, American shoes, American ideals, American plumbing, even the American language. Europe was so ripe it now received the thumb print of a younger land without springing back. The Puritans had deflowered the North Continent of America as the Conquistadors had the South. And now America was taking a terrible revenge on the Old World from which the spoilers came: spreading the shoddiest of civilizations across the face of Europe by means of the most formidable weapon of invasion that had appeared since the hordes of Attila overran the fertile region of the Danube.

The principle of "Don't knock, boost!" is generally more honored in the breach than the observance. Nevertheless, "A Roman Holiday" is not that minority report on moviedom which many of us would like to see. Parochialism is the besetting sin of American letters, and in this instance the author has made the mistake of identifying the seamy side of the American amusement industry with the whole fabric of American civilization in the name of Oswald Spengler. The result is a lurid, arty scenario.

A FAMILY HISTORY

THESE LORDS' DESCENDANTS. By Gloria Goddard. 394 pp. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.50.

IN the seventeenth century England Gregory Featherstone, Eighth Earl of Tynemouth, and his three sons were of a divided opinion upon politics. Young Gregory, his eldest son and heir, was, like his father, royalist to the core. Granatt Featherstone affected a severe and somber garb and sympathized with Cromwell. Geoffrey Featherstone, sick of the eternal disputes into which England had fallen, was disgusted alike with the Royalists and the Roundheads. Granatt married Mercy Beard, the daughter of a Puritan, and sailed for New England in 1640, there to acquire land and goods, to govern cities, and to raise his children in the strict traditions of Puritanism. Geoffrey married a relative of Lord Baltimore and obtained a land grant in Maryland, to live with his retainers the life of a lordly planter on Featherstone Hundred.

What happened to the descendants of Granatt and Geoffrey, how they lived well and daringly, how they created a new world out of the wilderness, is the story of "These Lords' Descendants." One of Granatt's sons, who was out of sympathy with Puritanism, ran away with a party of adventurers bound for Kaskaskia. He built a new Featherstone estate in Illinois, and his sons were governors and judges and respected men. One of Geoffrey's sons caught the fever of adventure and left the life at Featherstone Hundred to join the gold rush to California. He, too, left to his sons a fortune.

When the name of Featherstone was a mere memory in Massachusetts and when the city of Baltimore had absorbed the last acres of Featherstone Hundred, the children of these other Featherstones were emerging from the West, to go to Eastern colleges, to live in New York, to travel in Europe. Two of the last of these Featherstones were married, uniting the family after generations, and living faithless and degenerate lives. At last, by the expenditure of a million or two of American dollars, they resumed the Featherstone estates in England.

Gloria Goddard has pointed the moral of her book somewhat bluntly. The contrast between the rugged, enterprising pioneer Featherstones and the soft, degenerate, modern Featherstones is rather broader than was strictly necessary. The plan of the book, too, seems overambitious. The old three-decker would hardly contain comfortably the chronicles of the varied lives which Miss Goddard has tried to compress into less than 400 pages. It is hardly to be wondered that the effect is sometimes confusing and obscure, notwithstanding the genealogical charts which are appended to each chapter and which help to keep separate the generations which perpetuate the family name. Considering the formal handicap, "These Lords' Descendants" is perhaps a more various and colorful book than one had a right to expect.

TWO LONDON GIRLS

THE YOUNG IDEA. A Comedy of Environment. By Frank Swinnerton. 296 pp. New York: Doubleday, Doran & Co. $2.50.

IN "The Young Idea," a novel published in England in 1910, but now for the first time made available in the United States, Mr. Swinnerton depicts with that rare sensitiveness which is so constantly at his command the lives of two London girls, one of whom goes daily to business while the other keeps house.

Hilda and Gladys Verrens live with their brother, a musician. The total earnings of Hilda in her office and Bertram with his piano come to less than four pounds a week. Dresses and hats must be worn a very long time. Shoes have to be patched. And Gladys is pathetically happy over the purchase of two cakes at a price of four pence. But on a bank holiday or a Sunday afternoon a stroll through the country brings them enjoyments that are entirely real. The song of a bird, the scent of the grass, are things they can genuinely relish.

Everywhere around them the bare arms of the trees were becoming fresh and redolent with clusters of green budding leaves. * * * Gladys thought she caught from behind the thin, sharp piping note of a finch, and stopped for a moment to listen to the sounds she loved best in the world.

This has not been quoted as indicating Swinnerton's handling of description, for one is only incidentally interested in the novelist's ornamentations of his narrative. The important thing is the reader feels that here an individual of a type which has been so often the victim of melodrama or of mawkishly sentimental romance is justly and truthfully represented. Mr Swinnerton, in his series of London studies, has established a reality where only a mock of reality had existed before.

In view of the foregoing, the particular story which Mr. Swinnerton has to tell in any specific book is of secondary importance. One story may be more dramatic than another; or have more of pathos, or of humor. But each becomes an individual study in an extensive field. And all of them taken together build up a composite picture of a social group. They have much in common with the etchings or paintings that an artist will make in a single locality; the subject matter is not open to the charge of repetition because the angle of view, the shades and lights, the tempo, always differ. Frank Swinnerton called one of his novels "Nocturne." All of them are in a sense nocturnes. "The Young Idea" assuredly is. Hilda's path is beset with such difficulties as might confront almost any young woman, but are for her heightened by her appalling lack of income. Shall she marry a man she detests so that she and her sister may be well taken care of? The answer is dictated by that shrewdness of

In "Australia Felix" the Prelude to Mrs. Richardson's "Ultima Thule"

AUSTRALIA FELIX. By Henry Handel Richardson. 483 pp. New York: W. W. Norton & Co. $2.50.

THE merited success of "Ultima Thule" last Fall has rescued from oblivion a writer who will rank high in her generation. Except for her novel about a musician, "Maurice Guest," which not a great many people had heard of and which even fewer had read, Henry Handel Richardson was wholly unknown until "Ultima Thule" took two countries by surprise and was widely read. What the public had missed is only now revealed by the reprinting of the first volume of the trilogy which "Ultima Thule" concludes. For "Australia Felix" (originally published as "The Fortunes of Richard Mahony") is an excellent novel. It is not quite, to be sure, so moving or so full of human pity as "Ultima Thule," but it bears all the marks of the same writer, it is no less ripe in knowledge of human beings, and no less sure in its presentation of that knowledge.

In one sense it is unfortunate that the public must read the three books of Mrs. Richardson's trilogy in the wrong order; for though it can safely be said that this procedure causes no drop in narrative interest (indeed one is constantly finding the answer in "Australia Felix" to so many of the questions raised in one's mind by "Ultima Thule"), still the deepening values of the story taken as a whole, and the progressive development of character, can only be grasped by an awkward process of reconstruction. And from another point of view, reading the story from back to front invests it with an accidental and hopeless pathos. To take leave of Richard and Mary at the end of "Australia Felix," for example, setting out for England with high hopes, and to know in advance the outcome of those hopes, is like rereading a book before one is in the right frame of mind to reread it.

"Australia Felix" is the story of Dr. Richard Townshend-Mahony's coming out to Australia from Ireland as a young man at the time of the gold rush in the hope of making his fortune; of his dashed hopes and enforced years of hateful storekeeping, his marriage to Mary Turnham when she is a girl of 16, his resumption of a practice and slow years of struggle, his eventual success as one of the most skillful and prosperous doctors in Ballarat, and his decision to leave a country he finds temperamentally unbearable and return to England. That sums up the narrative side of the book, which brings upon the scene a host of secondary characters, many of whom reappear amid the changed fortunes of "Ultima Thule"; but that, though it makes for the best of reading, is not what gives to "Australia Felix" its merit and its significance. What does is the profound and untiring care with which Mrs. Richardson draws the characters of Richard and Mary and shows the human and spiritual pattern of their married life. No one has ever believed more definitely than Mrs. Richardson that the proper subject for the novel is human character; and no one has ever more insistently brought home to her readers the old Greek belief that character is fate. In "Australia Felix" are revealed in the most inevitable fashion the real Richard and the real Mary. Yet each of these two people, who spring so fully alive, might conceivably have been created by a highly skillful "objective" novelist. But Mrs. Richardson is more than that, which is why her work is more than highly skillful work. It is in treating these two lives together, in her projection of a beautiful and pathetic relationship, that she adds to her skill and penetration a deep humanity. Capable, loyal, sane, lovable Mary and high-minded, proud, wayward Richard—the simple lover of life and the seeker after past happiness and beckoning futures—here are two people interpreted, against a petty, provincial, vulgar background, with both vigor and a sensitive, mellow understanding. The book has neither the health of impatient masculine strength nor the morbidity of subjective frustration; through it runs something of that wistfulness, that autumnal feeling which we find added to the epic strength of a Vergil or a Brahms.

Henry Handel Richardson.

Mrs. Richardson works, not through compression, but through elaboration and detail; and this narrative of 175,000 words—only one volume, moreover, of three—provides us with a permanent picture of Australia during the '50s and '60s, in the days which followed the gold rush. All the color of old-fashioned existence, of horsehair and lustre-chandeliers, quadrilles and hoop skirts, does not for an instant soften the rawness and vulgarity of the picture. This new world of fortune hunters and fortune makers, of men and women's quick rise to power and position of which they could only have dreamt, this materialistic wilderness having behind it just enough English tradition to be superior in "gentility" to our own California of the same period, glares horribly on our eyes. And what an effect it had upon the inadaptable, fastidious, uncompromising soul of Richard Mahony dreaming of the civilization he had taken leave of! Every word spoken, every gesture advanced by Mrs. Richardson's excellent (in the famous label of E. M. Forster) "flat" characters that surround him — puffed-up John Turnham, mercenary Mr. Henry, absurd Sarah, who becomes Sara and finally Zara—make Richard's need of home more pressing.

And so in the end, when material success had come to Richard after years of struggle and heartache, his restless spirit craved something beyond the goal he had aimed at and won; and against every one's advice he sold out his practice and set sail for England. We already know how happy and desirable those prosperous days were later to seem to him. But it is high tribute to Mrs. Richardson that with only the English period of Richard's life withheld from us, we should await knowing about it with genuine impatience. It would seem that when we have this trilogy complete we shall have, in spite of a technique and style not always beyond criticism, a study of two related lives not soon to be forgotten.

THE ART OF
with misgiving"

To the author of THE ART OF THINKING, ABBÉ ERNEST DIMNET, his fellow-countryman, ANDRÉ MAUROIS, writes: "I started reading your book with a little misgiving on account of the ambition of the title, but as I read on I became fascinated and I know that my future life as a writer will owe you much. There are, towards the end, a few pages concerning inspiration which are of great beauty and which all writers would benefit by reading."

Over 120,000 copies of THE ART OF THINKING have been bought by readers eager to clarify and assure their intellectual grasp on the good life. Booksellers everywhere predict that this book will be sold to increasing thousands for years to come.

New Mystery Stories

THE MAN WITH THE SQUEAKY VOICE. By R. A. J. Walling. 304 pp. New York: William Morrow & Co. $2.

MAKE room on your shelf of mystery novels, alongside "That Dinner at Bardolph's" and "Murder at the Keyhole," for this new story by the same author. It is the story of a murder so ingeniously contrived as to cast suspicion upon a person whom the reader knows to be innocent. The local police are completely taken in, but the great London detective who presently appears on the scene knows as well as we do that John Masters had nothing to do with the crime. But that is as far as his knowledge goes for the time being. Eventually, of course, he discovers the identity of the real murderer, but not before he has been fooled again and again. Some of the mystification is due to matters which have no direct connection with the crime, and John Masters, who tells the story, is all at sea when he tries to interpret the actions of the various characters in the book. Fortunately, there is a girl who sees things more clearly than either Masters or the detectives.

THE MYSTERY OF THE OPEN WINDOW. By Anthony Gilbert. 307 pp. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.

This is the story of an ingenious murder so well planned and executed, with alibis so cleverly faked, that it requires all the astuteness of Scott Egerton, Member of Parliament and amateur criminologist, to discover the murderer. The victim of the murder is Sir Hector Ascher, collector of rare books, whose body is found in the room he has engaged in a shabby inn in Paris. Egerton's first discovery is that Sir Hector never came to the inn alive. But when, why and by whom he was killed are questions more difficult to answer. It is a good yarn, but there are times when the author's desire to set the reader on the wrong track is a bit too evident.

MURDER YET TO COME. By Isabel Briggs Myers. 311 pp. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.

The title of this book gives an inkling of the suspense that is felt by the reader until the story comes to a happy conclusion. One murder has been committed, but it has been cleverly staged to make it appear that Malachi Trent met death by accident. Being a playwright by profession, Peter Jerningham is not to be deceived by stagecraft. He is immediately aware that the accident was faked, and it is not long before he becomes convinced that the murder of Malachi Trent is but the first act, and that there is more murder yet to come. Who is to be killed and by whom he does not know, but he intends to find out. To that end he and his friends remain on the scene for three exceedingly busy and exciting days and nights, at the end of which he is able to give a clear and logical explanation of the dreadful and mysterious happenings that have taken place and to prevent the prime mover in those happenings from carrying out his plan in full.

THEY TELL NO TALES. By Lee Thayer. 314 pp. New York: Sears Publishing Company. $2.

The story begins on a Pacific liner nearing San Francisco. The murder which occurs in the second chapter is merely incidental to another attempted crime, the nature of which is not immediately apparent. A young lady passenger has been chloroformed in her stateroom, but for what purpose no one but the guilty person knows. Among the other passengers are Peter Clancy, a famous detective, and his valet, Wiggar, who might have been a detective had he not considered valeting to be a more exalted calling. It is Wiggar who discovers that the young man who calls himself Colbrooke Beverly Cranston is not what he pretends to be. Clancy constitutes himself the bodyguard of Mary Carmichael Flynn ("Mike" to her friends), but from whom he is guarding her he has only the vaguest idea. On the way across the continent an attempt is made to kidnap Miss Flynn. It is not until the end of the book that Clancy discovers what is the purpose of these and other attempts and who is back of them. The story is swift, dramatic and full of mystery.

THE EYE IN THE MUSEUM. By J. J. Connington. 285 pp. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $2.

Apparently Mrs. Fenton died of heart failure. But because he resented advice from an "ignorant layman," Dr. Platt insisted upon an autopsy. Then it was discovered that the lady had been murdered. At first suspicion points strongly to Mrs. Fenton's niece, Joyce Hazlemere, who had the best of reasons for wishing her aunt out of the way. Foreseeing that Joyce is likely to be charged with the crime, her shrewd old solicitor prepares his defense in advance and makes it his business to set the police on another track—whether because he believes it to be the right one, or because he wishes to gain time, it is not easy to say. However that may be, the detective who is investigating the case, gratefully accepts all information that comes his way, even though much of it seems to be contradictory. He learns the truth only when another violent death simplifies the problem. "The Eye in the Museum" is an ingenious story, but it is not so good as some others that have come from the pen of J. J. Connington.

THE CHIMNEY MURDER. By E. M. Channon. 274 pp. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $2.

The element of horror is totally lacking in this tale of murder. Indeed, it is one of the most pleasing murders imaginable. The man who is killed is one whom the world can well spare, and his death brings release and happiness to those who have been nearest to him. Even the unjust suspicion which falls upon a neighbor with whom he has quarreled has results which are highly gratifying. Consequently, the reader breathes a sigh of relief when the end of the book is reached without the murderer being brought to justice. One feels that the man deserves a medal rather than the penalty provided by law.

THE PRESSURE-GAUGE MURDER. By F. W. B. von Linsingen. 214 pp. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

For a murder story this is singularly unexciting. The gruesome picture on the jacket is much more likely to produce those delightful spinal shivers than is anything between the covers of the book. It is not that there is any misrepresentation in this picture; the crime depicted there occurs twice in the story, but the author's manner of telling it is not calculated to accelerate the heartbeat in the slightest degree. The detective who undertakes to track down the perpetrator of the first crime and who narrowly escapes witnessing the second one is a very matter-of-fact police official who muddles along until he finally captures the murderer. The book may be recommended as a sedative.

THE STRANGLER. By Molly Thynne. 293 pp. New York: Minton, Balch & Co. $2.

In most detective stories dealing with murder on the high seas the murderer is apprehended before the ship reaches port. In this one, although there is a Scotland Yard detective on board the Liverpool-bound liner on which the murder takes place, the criminal escapes scot-free—for the time being. It is only when he repeats his crime and attempts other ones that he is finally brought to book. Then it is seen that the murder on board the liner was unpremeditated and merely incidental to the main purpose of the criminal. It is a complicated story, but by the time one is halfway through the book one should be able to guess the solution of the mystery.

J. S. Haldane Strives to Bring Science, Philosophy and Religion into a Satisfactory Union

THE SCIENCES AND PHILOSOPHY. By J. S. Haldane. 330 pp. New York: Doubleday, Doran. $3.75.

By AXTON CLARK

"OF all the very foolish ideas current at the present time," says J. S. Haldane in summing up his philosophical views, "none is, I think, more foolish than the idea that philosophy is useless and has made no progress since antiquity." He proceeds with the assertion that his latest volume, "The Sciences and Philosophy," will have been written in vain if it has not > produced the conviction that religion, which is, in reality, only philosophy under another name, is a matter of supreme practical importance. The acknowledged representatives of religious teachings are the Churches, and if they are hampered by obsolete creeds they cannot perform their duty effectively * * * existing creeds are obscured by materialism in one form or another, and * * * belief in supernatural events is simply the outcome of this materialism. The clear, practical deduction is that such belief should, since it is inconsistent with full faith in God, be eliminated from the teaching of the Churches. I have not the slightest fear for the future of religion, but it seems to me that the influence of the Churches is certain to dwindle more and more unless supernatural belief is banished from their teaching. When that day comes the Churches will be able to fight practical materialism and everything in modern life that drags us downward, with weapons which will not fail. Religion will also go hand in hand with the sciences, as it once did, and, like them, will appeal to all men, irrespective of their nationality or scientific conceptions.

These passages show more clearly than is possible by paraphrase that Professor Haldane places himself militantly with the group of highly qualified men who are at present striving for a satisfactory union of philosophy, science and religion. But his outlook, in contrast with that of Eddington or Whitehead, is colored by the fact that he is a biologist. He approaches philosophy not mainly from physics and mathematics as they do, but from the scientific study of the phenomena of life. In his special field he is particularly known for his work on respiration, an eminence which can be made concrete to the general public by the statement that he invented the gas mask during the war.

The contents of "The Sciences and Philosophy" were delivered at the University of Glasgow as the Gifford Lectures for 1927-28. The long-established Gifford foundation for lectures is the most famous of all such philosophical institutions. Many a now well-known volume was first presented under those auspices, for example, William James's "Varieties of Religious Experience" or S. Alexander's "Space, Time and Deity" or A. N. Whitehead's "Process and Reality."

The central conception of Professor Haldane's book may briefly be developed as follows: Long occupation with the problem of the nature of life has brought him to a pair of quite revolutionary conclusions. In the first place, he explains that a living organism, though it appears from a physical standpoint to be constituted by mechanical and chemical elements and forces, has within it a superior element of coordination. Its essential features are self-maintenance (though it remains under continual influence by its environment) and the capacity for self-reproduction. These two factors cannot be explained in mechanico-chemical terms. On the other hand, the conception of a soul or life-force entering into matter is equally unsatisfactory. The theory he advances is one which offers in its own biological sphere something analogous to the anti-Newtonian tendencies of Einstein in physics and astronomy: The living organism is mechanico-chemical matter behaving, not according to conceptions derived from Newton, but according to the character of a superior organization, which we call life.

In the second place, Professor Haldane has come to the conclusion that no living organism can ever be conceived apart from its environment; in fact, that on the basis of biological experiment and observation one cannot find any definite spatial limit where life ceases and the environment begins. Consequently we must not stop at the edges of our bodies: we must think of the whole world as living with us, of ourselves as living with the life of the whole world as a unity.

But here another consideration enters into the argument. Life in us is conscious; and an essential differentiating element of consciousness is time. Where there is consciousness there is time, and where there is time there is consciousness. But in this universe which he has discovered to be living he also discovers time. Hence it is not merely alive but conscious. Moreover, to be conscious is equivalent to having perceptions, interests and values. So the ultimate reality, the final scientific fact, does not stand as a congeries of mechanisms or chemical reactions. Nor is it merely a self-maintaining, self-reproducing being, but "a perceived world of interests and values." Reality is thus spiritual in essence, while the phenomena of the physico-chemical world are appearances or abstractions. This complete, living, conscious unity of the universe, saturated with interests and values, is God. To this view its author gives the name "Spiritual Realism." It must be clearly understood that this theory is to be kept distinct from an undefined Pantheism or Pan-Psychism as well as from such syntheses as Whitehead's "Organic Realism." Doctrines advanced by General Smuts under the title of "Holism" stand closest to it.

The earlier part of the volume is dominated by the biological viewpoint. This is exemplified primarily in Professor Haldane's special theory of the nature of life and consciousness. Secondarily, this biological perspective is emphasized by acute illustrations taken from the various functions of living organisms. These concrete discussions are backed by a wealth of physiological knowledge; they are illuminating and will sometimes be startling to the layman.

Throughout the latter part of the book the thought tends rapidly toward a standpoint where the sciences support philosophy, which in turn becomes identical with religion as distinct from theology. These sections are full of interesting passages. Professor Haldane's views on immortality will serve as an example:

> Belief in a soul existing in a material universe, but separable from it, brings us very soon into conflict with physical science. * * * From its very nature physical science can attach no meaning to the existence of a soul or to its immortality, and if we seek for physical evidence of the soul's existence we can never find it. * * * I do not think that one to whom religion is the guiding influence in life, and for whom the reality of God is the only reality, could seek for individual immortality. If his vision of God is a true and whole vision, it has effaced the vision of mere individual self as well as the vision of a real physical universe. We are accustomed through the New Testament Scriptures and other writings to the idea that it is only through losing our individual selves, and through faith in the love and omnipotence of God, that we attain to union with Him. It is surely in this union and not in our continued individual existence that we attain true immortality, and with it freedom. * * * It is not to the conception of a soul but to the reality of God that we must turn for strength, courage and comfort.

"The Sciences and Philosophy" must be credited with originality for its attempt to make modern biology instead of physics and astronomy fundamental to any philosophic view of the universe and for its extension, on a scientific basis, of life processes from the individual organism to include the total unity of the environment. Yet taken as a whole it shows serious flaws. The reviewer believes that its final value lies chiefly in the concreteness of its biological approach, in its illustrative material, and in its many stimulating passages.

But its method wavers arbitrarily from scientific argumentation to what might be called a prophetic flight across awkward gaps. Moreover, its fundamental conceptions are not thoroughly tested nor is the structure which is built on them carefully knit. The central doctrine concerning the non-mechanical nature of life is persuasive, but it has by no means weathered all the biological contradiction which must come its way. The status of mechanico-chemical elements and forces in the universe, if it is completely clear in Professor Haldane's thought, is certainly not set forth in such a way as to remain unambiguous. The view of time as always involving consciousness remains highly debatable. There is also no sufficient analysis of spirit, or of interest and of value, in spite of repeated discussion; and on these points the whole doctrine hinges. Yet so evident is the sincerity throughout and so active the search for a biological basis on which contemporary science, philosophy and a religion free from theological trappings may be reconciled, that the peculiar virtues of "The Sciences and Philosophy" must be given adequate if qualified recognition. It is in many ways an unusual and fascinating book.

Assaying the Greek Way of Life

THE WAY OF THE GREEKS. By F. R. Earp. 223 pp. New York: Oxford University Press. $3.

FOR many centuries it has been true, and is true to this day, that the intellectual vitality and depth of any epoch or region is indicated by its interest in the life and thought and achievements of the Greeks. And it is one of the cheering signs of the present that although the formal study of Greek in the colleges is waning a general springing up of intellectual curiosity about the Greeks is evident in the increasing number of books about them. This new one by Professor Earp of the faculty of the University of London is an instance of how, as enforced study of Greek in colleges dwindles, a genuine interest in Greek thought and life increases among the educated classes. For Professor Earp expressly disclaims any intention of writing a popular exposition. His book is addressed to those who have some general knowledge of Greek history and life, of the later intellectual development of civilization and of modern literature and philosophy. The reader who must have his accounts of science, art, literature, philosophy made simple enough for fifteenth-year understanding will not get much out of it, but it will be a clarifying and illuminating discussion for those of wider horizons and keener mental curiosities. Professor Earp has spent his life studying and teaching all that the Greeks thought and did, and they and their minds and achievements are as familiar to him as the England of his own day. He writes about them with ease.

The basis of Professor Earp's book is the part that tradition played in shaping the life and character and in inspiring and forming the achievements of the Greeks. It was the essence of the "Right Way" of doing all things that guided the Greek, and the author endeavors to set forth the nature of that "Way" to show how it influenced Greek thought and life and so to make these more intelligible for the modern reader.

Notes on Current Magazines

In the American Magazine for February there is an interview with Edward W. Berry, the "degreeless" dean of the Johns Hopkins College of Arts and Sciences, called "How Colleges Rob Men of Priceless Years." M. K. Wisehart is the interviewer. Dean Berry, who picked up his own education in science while working on a Passaic newspaper, is of the opinion that in the colleges "a great deal of time is being wasted—some because of worthless courses and some because of antiquated methods of teaching." There is this matter of languages, for example. An intelligent boy, according to Dean Berry, ought to be able to acquire a good reading knowledge of French in seven weeks. "French is easy to read, Italian about the same, German a little harder. Acquiring a reading knowledge of any one of them should be an incident, not an epoch, in the life of a student who goes at it seriously." It is Dean Berry's idea that nine-tenths of the class-room time devoted to languages as taught at present is wasted.

Of the curriculum as a whole, Dean Berry thinks that "many of our most hidebound notions about [it] are the results of accidental happenings back in the sixteenth century. We have gone on adding to it, but almost nothing has been taken out. What the ordinary curriculum today represents is simply the accumulated débris of the past three or four hundred years of hit-or-miss instruction." Dean Berry goes on to talk of distinctions between Ph. D. hunters, and tells very briefly how his own institution tries to keep out the "drifter" type of Ph. D. hound.

To The Theatre Magazine for January Joseph Wood Krutch contributes "an estimate of the Civic Repertory Theatre," Miss Le Gallienne's Fourteenth Street band of troupers. Mr. Krutch would like to see Miss Le Gallienne's selection broadened in "at least two directions." "I should like first of all," he says, "to see it made to include one or two of the great tragedies from 'Hamlet' to 'Ghosts.' * * * After that I should be glad to be permitted to witness upon the Fourteenth Street stage revivals of those American plays written during the last ten years and too good to be definitely discarded." "Craig's Wife" and "They Knew What They Wanted" are two of the plays enumerated by Mr. Krutch.

Country Life for January contains a Hudsonesque article on "Carolina Marshes," by Herbert Ravenel Sass, with some delicately tinted illustrations by Alice R. Huger Smith. Mr. Sass, who is very evidently a poet, is particularly attentive to the Carolina white heron. Of this inhabitant of the swamp, he says:

> They are of several sizes and species, but the most beautiful of them are the great white egrets—tall, graceful creatures, white as the whitest marble, adorned with long, slender plumes or aigrettes which droop beyond their tails. Deep in the swamp lagoons, the egrets and herons of other kinds build their nests in the cypresses, not singly but in communities sometimes containing hundreds of birds; and in these heron cities, in late April and May, the life of the lagoons is at its crest and the beauty and strangeness of the swamps overwhelm the eye and the mind.
> No one can ever forget his first visit to a heron city in one of the Carolina swamps; and the experience is all the more memorable if the city of herons which he visits is situated on one of the larger lagoons so that a considerable journey along the devious waterways of the swamp is necessary in order to reach the place.

The cover on Country Life is worth the price of the issue. It is a picture of two Scotty dogs gazing quizzically at a green spotted frog on a stone in a pool.

Tennis, the official publication of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, prints an article called "Amateurs Favor 'Open Championship'" in its issue for January. The amateurs who desire an open tournament include George Lott of the 1929 Davis Cup team, Wilmer Allison, another member of the team; Berkeley Bell, intercollegiate champion; Dick Williams, former national champion, and others of lesser prominence.

Vanity Fair for January opens with one of Gilbert K. Chesterton's cryptograms, "The New Persecution." According to Mr. Chesterton, "popular education is positive persecution. Compared with it, the Spanish Inquisition was merely negative persecution." "Compulsory education," he goes on, "is compulsory propaganda, where the other [of the Inquisitor] is only compulsory expurgation. In the old case the Inquisitor censors the press; in the new case he owns the press." As in most of Mr. Chesterton's clever distortions, there is enough truth in his allegations about popular education to make one think matters over.

The December issue of The Bulletin reaches us from San Quentin Prison, California. It is edited by Robert J. Tasker, who has written articles, we believe, for The American Mercury, and a book to boot. Mr. Tasker contributes an editorial to The Bulletin about the tendency toward introspection on the part of many prisoners. Those incarcerated for long periods, he says, become abnormally introspective, and therefore liabilities to society when they are released. "The veriest tyro," Mr. Tasker writes, "will * * * reach the conclusion that excessive terms of imprisonment are not corrective, nor even punitive, for the great majority of long-imprisoned men eventually reach the decision that they are martyrs to something or other—most of them are not certain what—and that they have overpaid society for their offense and have some change coming back to them."

Clarence D. Chamberlin writes in The Parents' Magazine for January on "Shall We Let Our Children Fly?" Mr. Chamberlin thinks we should, for he is of the opinion that "the government has done much to provide the necessary safeguards." And they should learn at as early an age as feasible. Another article in The Parents' Magazine is Eugene B. Bloch's "Yehudi Menuhin," a glimpse of the home life of the boy violinist who is "the foremost child musician in the world today." Mr. Bloch says that Yehudi's parents have seen to it that he shall not become "a stilted palefaced prodigy." According to Mr. Bloch, Yehudi's parents have refused great sums for short concert tours, for they don't want him to feel that he "is developing his art for money instead of for its beauty and joy."

THE LIFE OF SAM HOUSTON

BY MARQUIS JAMES

John Carter in the New York Times says:

The life of a man of fire and action, a flesh-and-blood portent who created an empire. One of the best biographies of recent times, thorough, scholarly, fair and alive in every page with the sense of character in action upon a great stage and animated by powerful human motives, while holding true to manly principles.

William Allen White
in the Book-of-the-Month Club News says:

A romantic tale of a golden day in the great Southwest when Sam Houston lived and loved and lost and won through such a career as would balk Dumas. Here was a plainsman rivaling Monte Cristo and Talleyrand in adventure and in politics, a leader who seemed to love intrigue for the trouble it made, and trouble for a chance to fight out of it.

SCIENTIFIC MANAGEMENT

IN AMERICAN INDUSTRY

By THE TAYLOR SOCIETY

Here at last is the definitive statement of just how Scientific Management works and can be applied in every business and industry.

The Taylor Society, carrying on the work of F. W. Taylor, founder of Scientific Management, consists of executives recognized as outstanding experts in their fields. This book was written by 26 of these leaders—including such men as H. S. Dennison, Howard Coonley, and W. H. Leffingwell. It thus becomes the most important yet published on the use of scientific methods to attain maximum efficiency.

These methods—in sales, production, finance, personnel—are here explained with many illustrations from recent successful practice.

The treatment is simple, practical, readable. The new ideas presented can be worth hundreds of dollars to your firm. For FRFE examination, use the coupon today.

Is the amazingly low price of 42c responsible for the success of Paper Books?

WHY does the N. Y. Post say, "One of the most gratifying successes in the publishing field is Charles Boni's Paper Books"?

Why do newspapers all over the country declare, "This is the greatest book club idea of all"?

Is it because these Paper Books come to you for only 42c each—an unbelievable low figure?

Is it because the selections themselves are so distinguished—chosen from the best that is being done in fiction and non-fiction by a board of famous critics?

Or is it because in Paper Books Charles Boni has achieved inexpensive beauty—in type, in format, in cover design, and, most important of all, in contents?

No matter what has helped to make Paper Books the fastest-growing book club in America—all critics agree on one thing: This revolutionary "42c Book Club" idea offers the reading public some of the finest volumes being published today for only ⅙ the ordinary prices. In any other edition these important books would merit regular prices of $2.50, $3.00 or $5.00.

But now, through the new PAPER BOOK CLUB, you actually receive 12 outstanding new books, never before published in America, for only $5.00—42c a volume.

Letters Like These Come from All Over the Country

John Dewey: "I think your plan for the publication of Paper Books is an excellent one and that you are very fortunate in your Board of Editors."

Sinclair Lewis: "I am sure that the Paper Books plan will be a success, and that the list will contain titles of the greatest artistic merit."

Providence News: "An admirable scheme . . . the most attractive of all."

First Paper Book Selection a Unique Success

Shortly after the first Paper Book selection, "The Golden Wind," by Margaret Sperry and Takashi Ohta, was sent to subscribers, a second edition of 15,000 copies had to be ordered to meet the demand for this romantic novel of the Orient. Here's what leading critics say of this fine book:

New York Times: "The Golden Wind" is a fabric of beauty and radiant charm. Its selection as the first of the Paper Books marks it as a portent in American publishing. A distinguished piece of work."

Minneapolis Star: ". . . an uncommonly attractive volume decorated by Rockwell Kent and printed with the taste and care that characterize a $5.00 volume."

Gilbert Gabriel, noted critic, says that Paper Books published the most enchanting book of the year when it published "The Golden Wind."

An Outstanding Biography

The second book to go out to subscribers was "Frederick the Great," by Margaret Goldsmith, a full-length biography which the Syracuse Post Standard calls "a work of marvelous insight." This volume contains more than twenty illustrations and would cost $3.00 in an ordinary edition.

Again press and public united to praise the new Paper Book selection. The Boston Transcript said: "Miss Goldsmith has done a scholarly piece of work of value to the lover of history."

L. A. G. Strong, Author of "Dewer Rides," Compared to Thomas Hardy

Frank Swinnerton, famous English novelist, writing in the Chicago Tribune of "Dewer Rides," says: ". . . by common consent one of the best novels of the year."

N. Y. Evening Post: "A story of English soil which must inevitably be compared with Hardy."

New York Times: " 'Dewer Rides' is an admirable piece of work."

The fourth selection, "Prosperity: Fact or Myth," by Stuart Chase, achieved an unprecedented success. Seven leading New York newspapers devoted large space and prominent position to acclaim this fine book. The Associated Press and the United Press both sent feature stories to newspapers throughout the country. Everyone is discussing this important Paper Book selection.

The latest Paper Book selection is "Commando," by Colonel Deneys Reitz, a thrilling story of true adventure during the Boer War. The exciting incidents, the hairbreadth escapes, and the dangers Colonel Reitz passed through make his unvarnished record read like one of pure romance. If published the ordinary way this book would sell for $5.00.

The future selections of the PAPER BOOK CLUB will be just as distinguished, just as interesting as the titles mentioned above. They will be selected by an Editorial Board composed of Lincoln Colcord, Louis Untermeyer, Padraic Colum, Everett Dean Martin and Horace M. Kallen. The printing is under the direction of Elmer Adler, of the Pynson Printers, and the books are designed and decorated by Rockwell Kent, famous artist and designer of expensive limited editions.

As the Germans See Us

sionary work is not so overwhelming as it appears at first sight. "A large part of America's population," the author says, "is definitely ruled out as the beneficiaries of the prevailing prosperity. It is fallacious to say that American capitalism has reconciled the interests of the different classes and has achieved complete equality with its policy of liberalism." The immense economic development of the United States is not expressive of its social evolution. "America is going through a period of pseudo late-capitalism."

There are many practitioners of social sciences in Germany who disagree with this view and who see in it an unjustified sneering at one of the greatest human achievements. Nevertheless, this attitude expresses a doctrine becoming increasingly popular in the Reich and especially among the votaries of the "good old times" when abstract speculation was the rage, instead of the contemporary civilization of statistics and charts.

Arthur Holitscher, Germany's globe trotter, suggests in his "Wiedersehn mit Amerika," running serially in Die Neue Rundschau prior to its publication in book form, that Americans are partly to blame for this vogue of disillusionment. It is their bitter complaints about the loss of human rights that have found ready credence in the Reich. Americans have assured him repeatedly that the serious crisis of Americanism is the result of prohibition. By discarding an important sedative of the modern man, nearly collapsing under the burdens imposed on him by life, prohibition has become responsible for an unbridled outburst of hypocrisy and passion.

> I had been in the United States for only a few hours [the author writes] when people began to tell me: "There is no freedom in this country." Many of them were hundred per cent Americans, and they wanted me, the foreigner, to corroborate their statement. All I could do was to answer, trying not to appear ironical: "But you have prosperity."

Eighteen years ago he had been in America and wrote a book about his trip which had been received in Germany with more than the usual attention. What had happened to the United States during those eighteen years? The first glimpse of New York during his recent visit was overwhelming, not only because of the city's striking architectural qualities, but for the deeper meaning which the daringly uneven skyline had penned on the horizon. New York had become unique, formidable in its defiance of the clouds. It is instructive to follow the author's thoughts as they revert to memories in his search of some similar event. These comments show to what unexpected places America's influence penetrates:

> Where have I seen a reflection of this spectacle during those eighteen years? Yes, I remember. It was on the outskirts of an old town of Russia, in Cherkov, among swamps and hills, that I saw an American city, a bulging mass of towerlike buildings—although far from being as impressive as in New York—shooting up into the sky. They contained the offices of the local Soviet, the State trust, theatre, cinema, meeting rooms, museum and library. "We and they," a commissar in the Kremlin told me subsequently, referring to the Americans, "we and they are the two poles of the society of our time. One day the two extremes will meet and there will no longer be two poles. This merging of two ideologies will consummate man's destiny." In Russia, too, they are dreaming of this skyline. It is a promise and an obsession.

Dr. Alfred Vagts's volume, "Mexica, Europa und Amerika," belongs in another class. It is the work of a dispassionate scholar, written without thought of conscious criticism, although it involves a critical analysis of America's foreign policy. The book is an admirable summary of an important diplomatic triangle, and it shows conclusively that the United States has always found means to turn to best advantage the fumbling tactics of the European powers in their relations with Mexico.

At first Europe cherished the hope that Mexico would serve as a shock-absorber against the impact of American expansion. It had to realize, however, that Mexico was not in a position to live up to such expectations, and that sooner or later it would have to succumb to what President Roosevelt called the "land hunger" of the United States. Through their intervention in the '60s the European powers committed hara-kiri in Mexico. This enabled America to carry into effect its plan of pacific financial penetration. The pro-European policy of Diaz and Limatour could not counteract the advantage thus gained. As a result, Great Britain no longer plays an active part in Mexico in order not to jeopardize her economic interests and the normal flow of an adequate supply of raw materials, not to speak of its wish to avoid antagonizing the United States.

It is like an echo of former times to read Professor Breitner's account of his recent trip to America. Once more America is assigned the rôle of a titan. The title of the book, "Mormons and Medicine Men," does not do justice to its ample scope. The author had left Europe with a full equipment of prejudices. He had been told he would meet a nation of "shop-keepers" which has lost its heart and makes no attempt to retrieve it. At first he looked at the marvels of the New World with some misgivings. But as he saw more and more of the country his amazement grew apace. He found not only that America had a heart, but that it knew how to make the best use of it. Never had he suspected in any community so much energy directed toward public service, so much youthful enthusiasm, so much concern for spiritual values. He has found the American mentality and culture. "Am I in the America of our preconceived notions? I have learned a lesson and I am humiliated, crushed."

Professor Breitner is a leading light in the surgical profession. He had to burn midnight oil to finish this book, but he felt he had to write it in order to discharge his obligation

Lincoln in Cartoons

the inveterate cartoonists pursued Buchanan. Harper's Weekly depicted him as an old woman standing in a ruined home, with the pot falling off the fire, and his conscience (represented as a black cat) howling beneath the empty table. Above were the shadows of "War," "Desolation" and "Ruin," with a shadowy Fort Sumter begging vainly for help and weeping widows and orphans in the offing. It was captioned "Old Mother Buchanan in Despair," and he was saying pitifully, "Oh, 'twasn't me, 'twas Floyd and them others done it." Floyd had been his Secretary of War and had sent arms and munitions to the secessionists before resigning.

Nast's first political cartoon appeared not in Harper's Weekly but in the Illustrated News and was based on Lincoln's inaugural address. It was a strictly accurate representation of the situation. It was in two parts, the first captioned "This is the way the North received it." It showed Lincoln, against a background of peace, holding out an olive branch and supporting North and South in evenly balanced scales. The other was captioned "This is the way the South received it." It showed Lincoln as Mars, with a screaming eagle perched on his helmet, against a background of war. His sword was red with the blood of the South, which lay prostrate under his feet.

THE ENCYCLOPAEDIA OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES

To be Complete in 15 Volumes

THIS is the first comprehensive reference work on the social sciences ever attempted in any language. It provides a complete statement of the progress that has been made up to the present time in the various fields of anthropology, economics, history, law, philosophy, political science, psychology, social work, sociology, and statistics, in all their social aspects.

The Encyclopaedia is under the general supervision of Edwin R. A. Seligman, Editor-in-Chief, and Alvin Johnson, Associate Editor, and will be the co-operative work of the most distinguished scholars here and abroad. In the soundness of its treatment, and the unusual quality of many of its articles, this will be an incomparable reference encyclopaedia, filling a distinct need in the broad field of the social sciences.

The first volume will be published on January 28, 1930, and the remaining volumes will be issued at the rate of three a year. Until the first volume is ready, orders for the complete set of 15 volumes will be accepted at the price of $6.00 each, $90.00 for the set. After that date, the price will be $7.50 each.

By ordering now you can save $22.50 on the cost of this great reference work. The volumes are to be paid for only as they are issued.

A complete description will be supplied without charge by the publishers upon request. Or your bookseller will give you a prospectus which explains in detail the scope and content of the Encyclopaedia. Ask for it today, and place your order at any bookstore.

THE Spring list of Alfred H. King, who has just entered the publishing field, with offices at 8 West Fortieth Street, New York City, includes only five titles: "Pilgrim to the Abyss," by Axel Eggebrecht; "King Haber," a group of three stories by Alfred Neumann, author of "The Devil"; "Four Infantrymen," a German private's account of a phase of the war, by Ernst Johannsen; "Tenthragon," by Constance Savery, and "War for Profits," by Otto Lehmann-Russbüldt. With the exception of "Tenthragon" all these books are translated from the German. Mr. King, who has studied at the Universities of Bonn and Vienna, intends to specialize in translations from the German, but he hopes to equalize his Fall list by including a like number of English and American authors.

The author of "Jan the Romantic," recently published anonymously by Harper & Bros., is Albert Bigelow Paine, Mark Twain's official biographer, and author of "Dwellers in Arcady," "Lure of the Mediterranean," "The Car That Went Abroad" and other books. Mr. Paine's reason for bringing the book out anonymously was that he wanted it to be judged without prejudice. He feared that the fact that he had for twenty-five years been writing biography might be thought by some to disqualify him for story telling. Now that the book has been read and reviewed on its merits, he feels that there is no longer any reason for keeping the secret. "Jan" is not Mr. Paine's first venture into the field of fiction, however. He has written many magazine stories and several other novels, among the latter one called "The Bread Line." Another of his books, "The Great White Way," was indirectly responsible for the popular name of Broadway, although the book itself had nothing to do with that thoroughfare. A newspaper columnist incorporated the title into his heading for a column of Broadway items and the public did the rest.

If the cross-word puzzle craze is dying out that fact has not yet come to the attention of Simon & Schuster, who were the first to conceive the idea of publishing the pesky things in book form. Their Spring list includes three of these books, all edited by Buranelli, Hartswick and Petherbridge. Two are just new additions to their series of Cross-Word Puzzle Books, but the third one, "The Post-Graduate Cross-Word Puzzle Book," is a collection of fifty-five extremely difficult puzzles for "the advanced fanatics who don't know when they're well off."

Donald Douglas, author of "The Black Douglas" and "Falcon's Flight," will talk on "The Unhistorical Romance" at 8:30 o'clock on Thursday evening, Jan. 30, in the recital room of the Barbizon, Lexington Avenue and Sixty-third Street. This is one of the series of authors' evenings held every Thursday under the auspices of the Doubleday, Doran Book Shops in cooperation with the Barbizon.

D. H. Lawrence has written a little book entitled "Pornography and Obscenity," which Alfred A. Knopf will publish late in February. Mr. Lawrence has his own ideas on the subject, holding that certain books which have always been considered lily-white are really obscene, and that other books, usually considered obscene, are modest and decent.

Houghton Mifflin Company reports a request for a review copy of "An American Tragedy" by Claude G. Bowers. The writer explained that he would review it "in a bulletin that goes free to 16,000 ministers and Sunday School superintendents."

For one week, beginning Jan. 27, about two hundred copies of the picture novels of Frans Masereel will be on sale at popular prices in the Penn Terminal Book Shop. Frans Masereel is the Belgian artist whose novels in woodcuts originated this new form in art and story-telling. The Doubleday, Doran Company is making this experiment in order to ascertain whether there is a market in America for low-priced editions of these books. The books have been imported from Germany. Since the stories are told entirely in pictures there is no need of translation.

The Macmillan Company announces that "The Rise of American Civilization," by Charles A. Beard and Mary R. Beard, is to appear on Feb. 4 in a one-volume limited edition, containing all the material and all the illustrations in the earlier two-volume edition which sold at $12.50. The new edition will be priced at $3.

Having spent the early years of his life in Norway and the later ones in Minnesota and the Dakotas, O. E. Rolvaag, author of "Giants in the Earth," has decided that he has had enough of Winter for a while and has left his home in Northfield, Minn., for Biloxi, Miss., where he will remain until early Spring. Professor Rolvaag's new novel, "Pure Gold," will be published on Feb. 6 by Harper & Bros. During his stay at Biloxi he will start work on another novel.

Miss Lillian Day, author of "Paganini of Genoa" (The Macaulay Company), will lecture on Paganini at the Carnegie Hall Bookshop, 158 West Fifty-seventh Street, on Feb. 7 at 8:30 P. M. She will tell some of her amusing experiences going unescorted in European cities while pursuing her researches. Incidentally, she will autograph copies of her book.

Belief in the devil as a pathological problem is discussed in "The Devil," a historical, medical and critical study by two French psychologists, Maurice Garcon and Jean Vinchon. The book, translated from the French by Hader Guest, will be published early in February by E. P. Dutton & Co.

Society has taken up the old game of backgammon and in order to meet the demand for information about the game Henry Holt & Co. are reprinting "Modern Backgammon," by Grosvenor Nicholas.

Brief Reviews

should be rendered to the old, just as society has discovered the wisdom of applying psychology to the training of children, and that the psychotherapist has before him in the rehabilitating of the aged and the training to new viewpoints of their relatives and friends a very important task. She has no doubt whatever that it is a task of great potential values, and there is, in fact, "no other branch of adult education so important and far-reaching as that of salvaging old age." Her discussion touches upon many phases of the problem, such as those questions that are having much current discussion, old-age pensions, old people in industry and the shelving of the old, as well as its psychological aspects and the ideals and the methods desirable for its successful treatment. Dr. Martin's book is one of the first to treat this question, whose importance is being more and more widely recognized, with understanding sympathy and with the authority that comes of extensive knowledge. It deserves to be read by every one who has passed his fortieth birthday and by those even younger who employ or have the care of elderly people.

REACHING FOR GOD

THE MARCH OF LIFE. By Elizabeth H. Dewart. Introduction by Elwood Worcester. 184 pp. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $1.75.

INTENDED for the help of those who can no longer find God in the universe and who, like Dante, "wander astray in a dark wood" while they long for some convincing evidence of the spiritual values and destiny of human life, Mrs. Dewart's book offers them the testimony of one who has approached the problem through science and then, bravely adventuring beyond science, has found what she sought. In her later chapters there is a touch of mysticism, but she is clear-sighted throughout and constantly relates the stages of her progress to the needs of daily life. Her exposition is in harmony with the message which Dr. Elwood Worcester, who introduces the book, has been for almost a score of years preaching to the world. He says of Mrs. Dewart's volume that "it belongs to a new genre of religious literature, of which, in its explorative and hospitable spirit, it is a pioneer effort and the harbinger of a new day."

The author begins with the story of man's unfolding knowledge of the universe and of his own evolution, and then goes on to a consideration of man as the interpreter of life, as a searcher after the meaning of the universe, and concludes that "until we become convinced of the reality of Spirit through its operation in our own lives we can have no workable philosophy by which to live life in its fullness." And finally, studying the personal search after God, she sees human life as "the experience, in time and space, of human beings reaching Godward," and adds that, "more than this, Life in its every aspect, in all its many-sidedness, is nothing more nor less than the searching after union with the Infinite on the part of every living thing. * * * We may not all seek, and we may not all find in the same way; nevertheless, by their devious, winding ways, men do reach God."

THE EFFICIENT HOME

THE HOUSE THAT RUNS ITSELF. By Gladys Denny Shultz and Beulah Schenk. Illustrated. 238 pp. New York: The John Day Company. $2.50.

AS young women these two authors had chosen what they believed would be life-work occupations and in neither case did housekeeping enter into their plans. Then both married, babies came, and housework and home-making seemed on the verge of swallowing both life-works and individualities. But they were of the valiant sort of modern woman and so refused to be swallowed. They experimented and devised and planned, and finally each of them worked out for herself the necessary means by which at least a part of her profession and her individuality as a whole could be salvaged and the home still kept successfully running. Then they talked over together their schemes, sought out others and finally evolved this book; which aims to show how the machinery of housekeeping can be so devised and regulated as to insure that both child and adult needs will be properly cared for at the proper time, the housekeeper's burden made as light as possible, and free time for study or play or anything desired given to individuals and the family as a whole.

EXOTIC FOODS

THE GOURMET'S ALMANAC. Collected and compiled by Allan Ross Macdougall. Illustrated. 308 pp. New York: Covici-Friede. $4.

AN entertaining sort of glorified recipe book is this which Allan Ross Macdougall has prepared, evidently with very great pains, and evidently also as a labor of love and keen personal satisfaction. The skeleton of its structure is the collection of recipes which he describes, not untruly, as "strange and exotic dishes." He separates these into a dozen categories, one for each month, and presents them with much literary embellishing in harmony with the general theme of the book—to make cooking and eating a "joy and edification." In addition to all the great number of recipes for the cooking of sauces and soups, eggs, fish, game, meats, fruits, and other foods gathered, he says, from the "four corners of the earth" and all of them unusual and seemingly tasty and delicate, he has introduced and garnished and followed each section with accounts of the feast days and fast days of the month, with words and music of old songs, with poems and aphorisms and short disquisitions from the works of famous people of many past centuries, with bits of description and comment of his own on customs of eating, on special dishes and other matters. The dozen page illustrations and many vignettes are the work of contemporary artists. Mr. Macdougall's combination of glorified recipe book and alleged almanac is a unique book whose whimsical but serious purpose of making a fine art of cooking and eating both amuses and edifies.

HOME-MADE RUGS

HOMECRAFT RUGS. Their Historic Background, Romance of Stitchery and Method of Making. By Lydia Le Baron Walker. Illustrated. 421 pp. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $5.

FIFTEEN years of study and writing about both homecraft and Oriental rugs have made Mrs. Walker thoroughly at home in this theme and here she displays not only her own mastery of the subject but also her ability to make clear the technique of the making of rugs. For the rugs about which she writes in this book, she says, can be made in any home by any woman who cares to take the trouble. She has herself, she adds, worked each one in whole or in part. Although almost the whole of the book is concerned with the history, description and methods of making of the various kinds of rugs there are initial chapters on the renaissance that rug-making is just now enjoying, on rug-making as a home industry and on the classification of rugs and the equipment necessary for making each kind. Then follow chapters on braided, knit, needle-woven and crocheted rugs, on tapestry, "Turky Worke," cross-stitched, hooked, scalloped and mosaic rugs, on quilted, appliquéd and embroidered rugs, on a long list of less important rugs, on the care of rugs and the business aspects of rug-making.

AN AMAZING SUCCESS! That is the only way to describe the reception of this new 14th Edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Just fresh from the presses, this newest, greatest Britannica has won immediate and enthusiastic acceptance everywhere.

Its popularity has swept the country overnight.

"Home Education" includes the entire family

Already it is in 40,000 homes. Already it has given thousands of men, women and children a new enthusiasm for learning, wider interests, new ambition.

And now you can buy it—have it delivered to you immediately—at an amazingly low price.

Published at a cost of more than $2,000,000, made new from cover to cover, the new Britannica is utterly unlike any other encyclopaedia you have ever known. It is built on an entirely new plan. A book primarily of today—yet of tomorrow, too.

Powerful new influence

This amazing book actually brings into the family circle a powerful new influence. It brings culture. It brings knowledge, new opportunity.

Remember this is a new work. Only a small amount of text that could not be improved in any way has been retained from previous editions.

Quick knowledge—that is the keynote of this amazing book. Knowledge made easier—set down for you in practical human terms. Knowledge so accessible that a flick of the finger brings you exactly the fact you want.

And so the whole family benefits through this new kind of home education. Children, especially, make rapid progress when the new Britannica is at hand. It helps them in their school work, answers their myriad questions, teaches them to rely on themselves.

A complete library with 15,000 illustrations

Here is the Britannica you have been waiting for. A modernized, humanized Britannica. More interesting—with articles by 3,500 world authorities. More colorful—with 15,000 new illustrations from all corners of the world. More practical than ever before—with every word keyed to the needs of this modern age.

This new Britannica is a complete library in itself. In text matter alone it is the equivalent of 500 ordinary books. It is a real wonder book, a magic casement through which you can view the whole world.

SPECIAL OFFER
New low price—only $5 down

Yet the new Britannica is not expensive. No previous encyclopaedia ever gave so much for so little money. It costs less than any other completely new Britannica published in the last 60 years.

Mass production has brought this invaluable book within the reach of every American family. Now you can own it—at a new low price.

TEN THOUSAND SHALL FALL
DAVID KING

THE Foreign Legion went into the war 10,000 strong. Two thousand of these remained to tell the tale. Among them was David King, recently of Harvard.

This book was first published under the title "L. M. 8046" (King's identification tag in the Legion). In England its reception was such that The Illustrated London News, in a page and one-half review, ranked it among the three great books of the war—in fact, ahead of "All Quiet on the Western Front."

There is a moving introduction by Hendrik Van Loon. Jacket design by Cesare and 18 illus. from photographs. $2.50

UNMARRIED LIFE
JOHN NORTH

A NEW, brisk comedy by the author of "Patricia Lacked a Lover." UNMARRIED LIFE (we refer to the book, not the state) was the vogue of the last London season. As in that current best seller, "IS SEX NECESSARY?" there is much tomfoolery involved, but beneath it all there is a real novel, dealing generously in common sense. $2.00

The* DEATH MASK
ARTHUR APPLIN

THE stage and the inner social circle; night clubs, and a more than questionable gambling house—rings within rings of crime and double-dealing. This baffling story begins when Vanderleigh, on the eve of his wedding, is blackmailed by a girl whose spiritual and enigmatic face bears a startling resemblance to the famous Death Mask of the Unknown of the Seine. It ends—well, you'll read it to the end! $2.00

BEATING THE STOCK MARKET
R. W. McNEEL

THERE has been nothing written before about the Stock Market so simple, so crisp and so replete with sound information, and definite, vital advice, as that contained in this little volume. It constitutes a book of rules and principles that no one looking for Market success can afford to ignore.

A few of the chapter headings are appended: Speculation; Chance; Buying and Selling; Character; Faith; Patience; The Market Cycle; Consistency; Danger Signals; Stop-Loss Orders; Margins; Brokers; Women; New Flotations; Reason vs. Instinct, and ten others. $1.00

fication of Love with God. "God as Law," he exclaims; "God as the Ideal, God as the Philosophical Absolute, is not the power which saves me. The God who saves me is none other than Love. God is the Power of Life revealed in Love—the Effort of Cosmic Will which would lift all and save all."

Mr. Kagawa does not, according to his biographers, stop with words but translates into incessant action his convictions concerning love. He was converted to Christianity as a youth and, at the cost of a rich heritage and a promising career in diplomacy, became a preacher and slum missionary. His chief work seems to be that of preaching, but he has established centres and settlements in the slums of several cities and works in them constantly, he has inspired and set going a youth movement, he has battled against Marxianism, he has been a leader of social and labor and peasant movements, and four years ago, immediately after the passing of the manhood suffrage law, he organized the Farmer-Labor party. In all his work, his biographers say, he strives to inspire others with his own conception of "Christ's way of love in life" and to guide these various movements along these lines.

OLD AGE PROBLEMS

SALVAGING OLD AGE. By Lillien J. Martin and Clare de Gruchy. 175 pp. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.

DR. MARTIN knows that it can be done, because she herself has achieved some gratifying results of that sort, which she tells about in this book in the course of her discussion of the problem. Moreover, she herself has given proof in her own life that old age stands in no need of being salvaged if the individual has lived and continues to live sanely and usefully and interestingly. For she is 78 years old, and, as a consulting psychologist in San Francisco, with a great variety of mental hygiene interests and activities carried successfully in addition to her chief occupation, her days are as full, as busy, useful and apparently as happy as they have been at any time during her long life. This new book—she has written several on various phases of mental hygiene and the mental training of children—is the result of an experiment she has been making in San Francisco with the assistance of her aides in a child guidance clinic, of which Clare de Gruchy was the chief. In an introductory chapter Miss de Gruchy tells entertainingly how the necessity of rehabilitating the old in the families of some of the children became evident if the children were to be helped, and how the workers in the clinic had first to rehabilitate themselves in order to get the necessary understanding of the problems to be solved. They finally dealt, in all, with over 260 old people between the ages of 60 and 86, and, out of the knowledge gained from these intimate studies and contacts, supplemented and enriched by previous years of observation and study of the problems presented by the old in a civilization dominated by the young, Dr. Martin has written this book.

She believes that the problem of making old age useful and happy is always a personal one, since the conditions vary with each individual, and that the earlier in life the training for this result begins the better, that at least in middle age—and childhood is even better—each individual should begin to keep an eye on himself to be sure that he is constantly in wholesome, alert condition physically, mentally and spiritually, with flexible, open, interested mind that looks forward and not backward. Those who grow old in this way will never need salvaging, she says, but those who have not been wise enough to conduct their lives so wholesomely will need help.

Dr. Martin thinks that such help

An Autobiography of America
Edited by Mark Van Doren

"Entertaining narrative"
"can easily be read as a continuous and sustained story"
"the best of recent autobiographies"
"builds up into an impressive unity and gives an exciting sense of a nation in the process of evolution"
"gives a heartening composite picture of American character, will fascinate all ages"
"almost every page of the 700 is good reading"
"a happy inspiration"
"one of the truly valuable books of the season"
"I hope a success for this autobiography. It would have suited me perfectly to have it stretched through two volumes"
"one completes it with a sense of more intimate communion and more human understanding of American history than most historical works can impart."

Excerpts from reviews by Thomas Beer, Isabel Paterson, The New Yorker, The Outlook, N.Y. Evening Post, N.Y. Sun

A picture of America at work and at play, in love, in trouble; fighting, eating, drinking; colonial life, the frontier, the covered wagon on the plains, the epic of the gold rush, the whole drama of cur nation's growth. Here are no dry documents; here is a people telling its 300-year story.

Our Business Civilization
Some Aspects of American Culture
by James Truslow Adams

"A shock on almost every page"
"one of the thoughtful and sane books of the last two years"
"It is difficult to over-estimate the possible significance of this group of essays"
"sure to shake readers from their patriotic complacency"
"With a brilliant sure touch he lays bare the diseased tissues of the body politic and, in a series of profoundly stimulating essays, suggests the cure"
"calculated to suggest purposeful attention on the subject and to leaven our whole national way of thinking."

Excerpts from reviews by the N.Y. Times, N.Y. American, N.Y. Sun, The Outlook

From his flat in London James Truslow Adams views the American scene with the tranquil eyes of an American observer. He is a member of most—if not all—of the New England and American Historical Associations, the winner of the Pulitzer prize in history in 1922, and the author of a number of important volumes dealing with the principles of statesmanship and the development of New England.

This well considerd examination of certain aspects of modern American life is certainly destined to arouse controversy wherever it is read.

THE MEANING OF CULTURE

By JOHN COWPER POWYS

What is Culture? How do we become cultured, and what advantages does Culture confer on us?

John Cowper Powys has brought a new philosophy to America. He shows how Culture may develop in each of us—how it gradually becomes of the profoundest importance. Here is a book which will open new vistas and bring new discoveries to those who would know what Culture can mean to them.

Ask to see this book at your bookstore. Sample its delicious pages. Perhaps you will find yourself saying: "Here is wisdom. Here, in beautiful language, are the latent thoughts which I have been groping for." And perhaps you will find a new meaning for your own life in THE MEANING OF CULTURE.

judgment Swinnerton finds so generally a saving grace among the people he devotes himself to portraying.

Perhaps the reviewer has made clear why he likes the novels of Frank Swinnerton! He is so much the quiet artist. He spreads such a mantle of tolerance over the pathetic little joys of his characters. He sees their drab lives; but shows with how many shafts of light that drabness is relieved. He is a novelist who is sincere, gentle and humane.

AN ENGLISH WAR NOVEL

GREY DAWN—RED NIGHT. By James Lansdale Hodson. 307 pp. New York: Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc. $2.50.

THIS novel has been hailed in some quarters of England, as "worth all the German war novels," "worth many 'All Quiets'," and as "terribly realistic." It is, actually, a good chronicle novel, obviously autobiographical, that tells, but seldom portrays dramatically, the story of a young Englishman, a journalist, who enters the army, gets married, fights, and is killed just before he has the chance to go home to receive a commission. It is not nearly as sensitive as "All Quiet"; its realism is a realism of detail that is not particularly well related to the emotional effect that it should have had on John Hardcastle, the protagonist. The narrative is good in a reportorial sense; it comprises one more document about the war; but as a work of lasting literary quality "Grey Dawn—Red Night" is lacking in a number of essentials.

The story opens in the North Country of England, with John Hardcastle born into a family that has close economic affinities with the miners of D. H. Lawrence. As a story of childhood and adolescence the opening section of the narrative is sketchy; it seems undernourished when compared to Lawrence's "Sons and Lovers," the book that has set a standard for the chronicle novel of adolescence. The love affair between John Hardcastle and Stella is only adumbrated; it is neither too sentimental nor is it in any way impossible, but it simply isn't developed sufficiently in a dramatic or psychological sense for us to be stirred by it. The same is true of John Hardcastle's experience as a reporter; all of it is real, but its implications are not worked out.

The war vignettes are credible, but they do not advance on a host of such vignettes in other books. Remarque has it on Mr. Hodson in that his war scenes seem felt as well as glimpsed; the protagonist of "All Quiet," while he may seem oversensitive, is universal in the sense that he is moved by the shock of conflict. We are told that John Hardcastle is disturbed by his war experiences, and often mightily so, but the demonstration is largely lacking. The drama is still in the seed state, waiting to be brought to flower.

IN A LONDON SLUM

DRUM AND MONKEY. By George Manning-Sanders. 335 pp. New York: Horace Liveright. $2.50.

OF all nations the English seem most blessed with an astonishing variety of odd characters in every class of their stratified society. A personal idiosyncrasy instead of branding the mark of Cain on its possessor, as often happens in less civilized countries, becomes among the English a title to respect. This tolerance, even this appreciation, of the untypical gives your English novelist exceptional opportunities for character delineation. Thus, Mr. Manning-Sanders, delving into a slum less sinister than Limehouse only because it is not of London but of a small port town, discovers a one-eyed dealer

THE RISE OF AMERICAN CIVILIZATION

By Charles A. Beard and Mary R. Beard

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB FEBRUARY SELECTION

THIS is one of the real book bargains of the year—the classic story of America's evolution, originally published at $12.50 in two volumes, now in a handsome single volume of 1650 pages at less than one-fourth of the former price. The work is complete and unabridged. Wilfred Jones' decorations are included and the authors have written a new introduction. As this edition is strictly limited to 45,000 copies for distribution through bookstores, and advance inquiries indicate an early exhaustion of this supply, it is advisable to place your order now to avoid possible disappointment. The work will not be available again at such a bargain price as the large edition which made it possible cannot be reprinted.

Brief Reviews

TIDEWATER VIRGINIA. By Paul Wilstach. Illustrated. 326 pp. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. $5.

GREATLY and affectionately revered by those who belong within or round about its boundaries but much less well known to the people of other parts of the United States, Tidewater Virginia is brought forward by Paul Wilstach in all its historic interests, charms and glamours, so that hereafter it may have full appreciation in other regions as well as in its own. Tidewater is known to the Virginian, he explains, as the eastern side of the irregular triangle which outlines the State, the great bulk of it lying along the western side of the Chesapeake and, although at its longest it is only about one hundred and sixty miles and one hundred and twenty at its broadest, he considers it "beyond compare more interesting to an American than any other equal area between the two oceans." For here the English made, in 1607, their first permanent settlement in this country, while here assembled "the first truly representative legislative body on the continent." Many other "first" things, he notes, had their origin there; half of the first ten Presidents, including Washington, were born there, and within Tidewater originated many of the great families famous in the history of the country. Perhaps Mr. Wilstach draws a rather long bow in his account of the importance of this small section in the birth and development of American civilization and government. At least, he would lead the reader unacquainted with the history of the whole country into the belief that the contributions of other sections were of no consequence compared with that which was made by Tidewater Virginia. It is a serious blemish upon what is otherwise a colorful, interesting, even a glamourous book. The reader who is familiar with the full story, however, and can keep that of this one section, as he reads, in its due proportion will find it a charming and graphic narrative.

Mr. Wilstach, already known by his several preceding books of biography, history and travel, tells the story of Tidewater Virginia from the coming of the first settlers, using chiefly the method of description of special phases and stages of development and confining himself largely to the more social side of the establishment and growth of its civilization. There are chapters on the several rivers of the region and the families, plantations and life that grew up along their banks, on the birth and growth of the chief cities, the events that took place in or near them, the striking and interesting phases of their story, the picturesque and distinctive features of life in the towns and on the plantations, and there is constant reference to the famous men who have been natives of the region.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

AMERICAN INFLUENCES ON CANADIAN GOVERNMENT. The Marfleet Lectures Delivered at the University of Toronto in 1929. By William Bennett Munro. 153 pp. Toronto: The Macmillan Company of Canada, Ltd.

QUOTING at the beginning of this book the statement made by "a distinguished Canadian scholar" a few years ago that "the Dominion of Canada is a by-product of the United States," Mr. Munro mentions the "furor of resentment" which it aroused in that country, but bravely goes on to say that "it is a fair generalization from two hundreds years of history." The three lectures which compose the book bring out and discuss the historical events, the lines of development and the present status of various political and governmental factors that in the author's view make the statement a fair generalization." Mr. Munro, although he has been for twenty-five years a member of the faculty of Harvard University, where he is now Professor of American History and Government, is by birth, heritage and upbringing a Canadian, and therefore he can be supposed to take a balanced, fair-minded view of the extent and nature of the influence this country has exerted on the political development and usages of Canada.

Of the three lectures the first is devoted to the analogies and contrasting differences in the constitutional structures of the two governments and the sources and influences out of which they grew. The second takes up, by the same method of seeking out, comparing and studying similarities and contrast and inquiring into their derivation, the usages of the two countries in the matters of party organization, government by party, and practical politics. The third studies methods of city government in Canada, compares them with the evolution of such methods in this country during the last thirty years, and both with practices in England.

The little book ought to be of as much interest to any American interested in methods of government as to those across the border, and both are likely to find in it that provocative quality that drives thinking out of ruts and sets before the mind new angles of perception. Mr. Munro is clear and concise in his argument, but always interesting, and he has the desirable faculty of seeing and dealing with the factors of his subject in due proportion.

A JAPANESE CHRISTIAN

LOVE THE LAW OF LIFE. By Toyohiko Kagawa. Translated by J. Fullerton Gressitt. With a Biography of Mr. Kagawa by Eleanor M. Hinder and Helen F. Topping. Portrait frontispiece. 313 pp. Philadelphia: The John C. Winston Company. $2.

IT is interesting to find in a Japanese convert to Christianity perhaps the most whole-hearted acceptance of the teachings of Jesus and their most dynamic expression as a way of life that the Christian world today affords. Toyohiko Kagawa, according to the outline of his life presented in the introductory biography of this volume, seems a miracle of activities and achievements. Merely as a sort of side issue of what are his chief occupations he has written in the last nineteen years over forty books, including novels, poems, children's stories, Bible studies, prayers, books on religion, economics, philosophy and industrial and social movements. All of them have the purpose of furthering his religious work both by their content and by their financial earnings. His biographers say that they have large sales and have exerted important influence, one of them having moved the House of Peers to institute a slum-reclamation program which began a year ago and is to affect the slums of Japan's six largest cities. This present work was written in 1924, when Mr. Kagawa was ill in bed as the result of excessive labors in relief work after the earthquake.

The author sees love literally as the law, the moving power, the inspiration, the comprehensive purpose of life and he endeavors here to study its forms, its emergence into conscious expression, its evolution into the highest good. He considers it first on its lower levels and shows it evolving from the methods of nature where "love lies buried in the cosmos," from the instinct of mutual aid in animals, from the protective instincts of motherhood into its varied manifestations in mankind. Here he studies the evolution of its forms and its ethics, its manifestations in sex, romance, marriage, sets forth the need for it in labor and social movements and in economic theory and practice and his conviction that these advance along right and successful lines only when they are based on love, and so carries his discussion on through the relations between love and education, art and science to the identiin rags, bones and metal and considers him worthy of a full-length portrayal! Many thoughtful readers will agree with the author's estimate, in particular those who prefer subtle analyses of motives, the play of an untutored, imaginative and thoroughly unconventional mind, to stories in which emphasis is placed on action.

Superficially "Drum and Monkey" is an idyll of paternal love, with Charles Honey, a junk man, for protagonist and Bickford, his only son, the necessary complement. Living in a narrow, dirty slum street one end of which ends at the river, where it flows sluggishly into the harbor, a street of sordid vice and crime, Honey's dominating ambition is to raise his boy above the universal degradation, to make a man of this tadpole in a cesspool. Honey is a philosophical, naive soul, risen from such depths of degradation that the fetid atmosphere of Silver Street seems perfume of roses in comparison to that other; yet he is keenly aware of the street's contaminating influence, of its effluvia of moral poison.

The impulse to blend with his environment, to sink to the squalid level of Silver Street, sometimes obsesses him. His work presents innumerable temptations to turn a dishonest penny; indeed, were he but to shut his single eye for a moment and accept the insistent proposals of his neighbors he might with slight risk attain wealth, trafficking in stolen goods. To Silver Street minds his uncompromising honesty is an evidence of overweening pride. Even his wife, an obese, indolent woman with a weakness for gin, scorns this squeamishness. She cannot comprehend that a man should choose poverty when he might have wealth.

But there are others, in a more respected stratum, who appreciate Honey's standards and his independent self-respect; old Dr. Puddicombe and the vicar of the nearby village of Dittis, for instance, but especially Captain Black, who, having resigned command of his schooner, comes to settle in the town and end his days as host of Silver Street's pub—the Drum and Monkey.

When Dr. Puddicombe bought the Bell tavern some years before Captain Black's advent, he asked the whimsical junk man to rename it, so it became the Drum and Monkey—a name fraught with esoteric meaning. Not till the last chapter is its significance disclosed: an amazing and terrible episode in Honey's past explains the man, lifting him suddenly out of the class of quaint eccentrics, revealing a character of the noblest human cast.

This is a first novel of distinction. We shall hear more of Mr. Manning-Sanders.

FLIGHT FROM REALITY

MUSIC IN THE STREET. By Vera Caspary. 306 pp. New York: Sears Publishing Company, Inc. $2.

THE author of "Music in the Street" has, in smooth, colorful prose, essayed to portray a type and just failed to make it convincing.

Mae Thorpe moves through the story as a vacillating creature of high aspirations, who, in spite of the reality of her surroundings, remains nebulous and vague. Brought up in a small town, where the name of Thorpe, once highly regarded, had become conspicuous through the eccentric worthlessness of the family which now bore it, she worked in a drug store and tried to bury ugly reality in the sweet, drugged comfort of her dreams.

Following an affair in which her faith had been misdirected, she left for Chicago, feeling richer than she ever had before, with $40 in her pocketbook and a few new clothes, and still convinced that love comes to all women and that such love is compensation for the lack of wealth and social position. The life of a working girl, residing in a settlement house, is dealt with in labored detail, but so many minor characters are nervously injected that the narrative tends to become diffuse and sluggish in motivation.

Mae meets the man of her dreams, struggles with a conscience and finally acquiesces in his desires, when > suddenly out of the clear air came music. A radio with a loud-speaker was broadcasting holiday music. * * * It was a miracle, that lovely music in the street. * * * The music was like a mighty cord, binding them and locking them together.

Her lover deserts her and the final outcome is a noble gesture.

The author is logical in leaving Mae the same idealist we find her, anxious to fulfill herself, too inhibited to face harsh realities and therefore finding solace in a self-deluding dream life.

Objection and Reproof

Editor The New York Times Book Review:

Will you allow me to lay a laurel wreath on the grave of a book done to death in your columns?

The book in question is "It's a Great War," by Miss Mary Lee.

The only possible inference to be drawn from your review is that the reviewer was never "over there," and therefore was as incapable of judging the book as I, who am no scientist, should be of writing a review of Einstein's Theory of Relativity.

But, having been in the firing line, on and off, from November, 1914, till the Armistice, on many fronts, and having also written one or two books myself, I feel that I can approach Miss Lee's book with some slight knowledge not only of the war but of the magnitude of the literary task which Miss Lee set herself.

In my judgment she has accomplished a masterpiece.

In the last analysis the least part of war is the actual fighting.

The great part of it is the effect it produces on the souls of those engaged in it.

The former can be ably written by any little war correspondent sitting on a safe hilltop. The latter can only be written by one who has lived it and nearly died of it—whether that death be physical or spiritual.

It is this latter and more important aspect of war with which Miss Lee deals; and in all the literature of the war which I have read—English, French, German—no one has succeeded better in recreating the gradual descent into hell which is the inevitable fate of the man who goes to war. What is "All Quiet on the Western Front" if not that? What do such men as Latzko, Barbusse, Philip Gibbs, Romain Rolland, say if not that? Miss Lee has been to hell. Because of it, every page of her book is the truth—terrible, heartbreaking, discouraging, if you like, but, so help me God, the truth!

From the point of view of technique—where your reviewer should have been on firmer ground—it remains to be pointed out that Miss Lee chose the only possible method by which such a picture could have been painted. The short staccato sentences and paragraphs, the subtle omissions that are suggestions carried to the Nth, constitute a form of impressionism which is the very breath of war, and which are handled by Miss Lee with a sureness of touch that only an artist can achieve. To sum up, I would say that Mary Lee, first, and John Dos Passos, second, have made the only American contributions to war literature.

WOODROW WILSON
In Single Combat He Adventured For the Whole of the Human Race

"PRACTICALLY every town, almost every village in France had once a Rue Wilson ... the naming took place in a moment when everyone seemed to be crazy with Wilson; in those early hysterical times of the peace. Since then the placque has in most cases been taken down. But sometimes still in odd corners of the country ... you may come across this uneasy nudge of what, wild and unexpected, might have happened; if only Wilson in that one sole week had been a little crazy."

Of this single chapter in Twelve Against the Gods the critic of The New Yorker writes: "You won't find many more glamorous portraits anywhere of that president."

From ALEXANDER THE GREAT to WOODROW WILSON, "the endlessly amazing BOLITHO" examines an insurgent dozen of the world's great trail-blazers.

"Written with artistic skill. The author wastes no words. Furthermore, it is the sort of story that carries the reader along in a current of breathless expectation."

Philadelphia Public Ledger:
"'The Miracle of Peille,' J. L. Campbell's second novel, is one of the outstanding books of the year."

John Clair Minot, Boston Herald:
"A little book of great beauty this—a novel of rich spiritual value. Just as many of us took up 'Marie Chapdelaine' half a dozen years ago, and later 'The Bridge of San Luis Rey', both by authors virtually unknown, and felt that we had made a wonderful discovery, 'The Miracle of Peille' rewards its readers."

The Commonweal:
"He has written with sincerity, dignity and charm."

Sidney Williams, Philadelphia Inquirer:
"In the midst of striving after effects of brutal simplicity, 'The Miracle of Peille' comes like a memory of the Angelus evoked by some sound in the city street."

The Baltimore Sun:
"With a quiet sense of humor, its simplicity is quite dazzling in its restrained beauty."

The New York Times:
"Here is a novel of religious mysticism which is as refreshing as an oasis in the desert of clamorous materialistic fiction. 'The Miracle of Peille' combines the fervor of Housman's 'Little Plays of St. Francis' with the simplicity and earthiness of Chamson's 'Roux the Bandit.' In sheer beauty, in the singleness of its dramatic purpose, in its polished perfection of phrase, it surpasses either."

L'AIGLON IN HIS AUSTRIAN CAGE

In Records Now Brought to Light From the Hapsburg Secret Archives in Vienna Appears the Living Portrait of the Unhappy Boy Who Was the Son of the Great Napoleon

Perhaps no figure in history is more appealing than that of l'Aiglon, son of Napoleon Bonaparte and the Austrian Princess, Marie Louise. Now from the secret Austrian archives have come long-hidden documents bearing on the life of the boy who was never allowed to share the glory and the titles of his imperial father. In the following, the first of three articles, based on the newly discovered documents, the life of the boy in his "gilded cage" and his character are described.

By CLAIR PRICE and OTTO ERNST.

EARLY on the evening of May 21, 1814, a procession of imperial carriages rolled into the grounds of the palace of Schönbrunn to the accompaniment of a joyous welcome from what appeared to be the larger part of the population of Vienna deeply massed about the great gates. The first carriage bore the ex-Empress of the French, returning after the crash of the empire and the enforced abdication of the Emperor Napoleon, who at that moment was en route to his first exile on Elba. In the depths of the second carriage sat a curly-headed 3-year-old boy, Napoleon's son, who some five weeks before had exchanged his magnificent title of King of Rome for the modest dignity of Prince of Parma. The rest of the carriages contained the ex-Empress's French household, who spent the next few days in establishing themselves at Schönbrunn, while all Vienna trooped out to the imperial country seat hoping to catch a glimpse of the world-famous little Prince.

To the ex-Empress Marie Louise, Schönbrunn was familiar enough. As an 18-year-old Austrian archduchess, she had left Vienna in 1810 to marry Napoleon, who was then at the zenith of his fame, and now she was coming home. To her little son, who had been born in Paris, all the great world was new, but in years to come Schönbrunn was to prove the scene of his lifelong exile, a gilded cage which was to make his tragic nickname of "l'Aiglon," the Eaglet, forever memorable. Allied Europe, which had already deprived him of the throne of France, was soon to deprive him of any lesser throne and, having thrust him down into private life at Schönbrunn, was to keep him there throughout the remainder of his few restless thwarted years.

The enigmatic personality of Napoleon's Austrianized son emerges anew from an important series of documents which have lately come to light in the secret archives of Vienna. Now published for the first time, these documents shed much new light on the up-bringing of the little Napoleon who was born to rule half Europe, but who died in exile at 21 after having achieved nothing more in all his brief life than to be born. In them the tragedy of the fiery little Prince loses none of its poignancy. It remains, indeed, one of those tragedies which will never be silenced.

A year after his arrival at Schönbrunn, on June 30, 1815, the little Prince burst into a violent fit of temper when one of the Frenchwomen attached to his mother's household was sent to fetch him into the drawing room for his new Austrian tutor, Count Maurice Dietrichstein, to be presented to him. Some time before his fall, Napoleon had written to one of his brothers that he would rather his son were strangled than brought up in Vienna as an Austrian. But the new tutor's appearance at Schönbrunn was merely the opening wedge. One by one Dietrichstein secured the dismissal of all the French people around the boy, thus bringing to a close their constant reminders of the magnificence of his infancy and the dazzling glories of his father.

Early in 1816 his mother, now her Majesty the Archduchess, Duchess of Parma, left Schönbrunn for the new realm in Northern Italy which Allied Europe had conferred upon her. Her 5-year-old son she left at Schönbrunn under the legal guardianship of his grandfather, the Austrian Emperor Francis I, the actual control of the Emperor's Chancellor Metternich, and the immediate supervision of Dietrichstein and his staff of Austrian tutors. So began the sixteen uninterrupted years which Dietrichstein spent in leading Napoleon's son to forget the glories to which he was born and in bringing him up as an illustrious and dutiful subject of his Austrian grandfather.

Dietrichstein was then a man of 40, whose family belonged to the narrow social circles of the court and whose own interests had turned in his youth to the treasures of art and science in which Vienna was so incalculably rich. In his middle twenties he had retired from the army with the rank of Major and thereafter he had devoted himself to the life of a cultured Austrian gentleman. Having married soon after his retirement, his house had become one of the principal intellectual centres of Vienna, and Beethoven himself was frequently to be seen there. Unflinchingly honest, extremely conscientious, tactful but capable of great firmness, perhaps with a full share of the stiffness and narrowness of the Hapsburg court, he was fully aware of the difficulties and the high responsibility of his position at Schönbrunn.

L'Aiglon—The Portrait That Was Sent to the Exiled Napoleon.

At the beginning of his work, Dietrichstein's little charge was a 4-year-old boy who had been overstimulated almost from his birth, who had all the passion and the obstinacy of his Bonaparte-Hapsburg parentage, who in the official Hapsburg view had no father, and whose mother—an incalculable loss—was absent in Parma. Dietrichstein soon had the assistance of two Austrian under-tutors, Captain Foresti, a retired army officer of 39, who had been appointed by Marie Louise, and Mathew Edler von Collin, Professor of the History of Philosophy at the University of Vienna, a man of 37, whom Dietrichstein employed. So began a training which made a clean sweep of the boy's French attendants, a change which was inevitable under the circumstances, but which may easily have been too sudden for the child's good. It was a training whose curriculum may also have been too narrowly Hapsburg-like, but this too was inevitable under the circumstances. After all, the child was as much a Hapsburg as he was a Bonaparte.

One of the fullest, the most illuminating and the most valuable of all the reports which Dietrichstein made during his long term at Schönbrunn is the report of June 17, 1816, which he addressed to the Emperor after a year in charge of the little Prince. The original of this report has now been discovered in the former imperial archives of Vienna, where it was deposited by the Emperor, and it contains much matter hitherto unpublished.

Dietrichstein to the Emperor, dated Schönbrunn, June 17, 1816:

"Your Majesty: When I was first entrusted with the Prince of Parma's education I found him surrounded by Frenchwomen whose method of training was far from happy. No attempt was made to check the child's willfulness, nor his frequent outbursts of unbridled passion, due partly to his natural disposition, partly to the unsuitable diet he had enjoyed in France. Furthermore, from the early age of 2 he had been made to memorize the rules of French grammar, whole speeches from Racine which he declaimed, the Catechism and elementary history and geography. At 4 he had to begin to learn Italian. Having thus been harassed at so tender an age, all instruction had been made intolerable to him, and this has made him so inattentive that it is only with the utmost difficulty that his attention can be kept on any subject, however easy.

"The training the Prince received from these women was merely applied to outward forms, and it is true that he has something most winning in his ways and a courtesy unusual in a child; that is, when, as not infrequently happens, he is not in one of his bad tempers. Phrases, too, had been drilled into him that he used at suitable opportunities with an extraordinary appositeness. This artificial training has checked his natural childish ways.

"Led by a false patriotism, these women had also made it their business to fix all his thoughts on his lost political existence and to foster his recollections of that period of vanished glory; he had been taught to regard all his German entourage with suspicion and to look upon the land which has given him sanctuary as a foreign one. This has engendered in him a kind of taciturnity and false reserve which has made him very careful to avoid this favorite topic with people of non-French origin and causes him sometimes to break off in the very middle of a sentence when childish heedlessness allows an indiscreet word to escape him. The harm thus done the Prince is perhaps incalculable and may leave an indelible mark on his character; the reserve will make his education most difficult. * * *

AFTER these women, with the exception of Mme. Marchand, were dismissed, both Foresti and I made every effort to remove these unhappy impressions from the Prince's mind. If, as sometimes happened, he made remarks about the glories of Paris before his new entourage, he was calmly told that he could only know this from hearsay, as he had been far too young to remember anything himself. All the books he had which were stamped with the late imperial coat of arms and other books and playthings savoring too much of France, have been removed unnoticed and, without anything derogatory against his father being said—on the contrary, he prays for him both at morning and night—his attention is gradually being drawn to the respect he owes his royal grandfathers.

"Mme. Marchand proved herself an excellent person and one who thinks only of the good of the child in her care and she managed him very well; the one cause for regret was that, being a woman of lowly birth and education, she had few topics of conversation and spoke far too frequently of Paris, where all her thoughts were. This was an impediment to the Prince's German education, as he could always take refuge in her conversation.

"As long, too, as the French boy, Emile, was at hand as his constant playmate, it was impossible to pursue this. The boy, a child of one of H[er] M[ajesty] the Archduchess's grooms of the chamber, was in nowise of a bad disposition; on the contrary, he was very good-natured and showed zeal and comprehension when learning; being, however, always with his parents, he often heard of the deeds of the French Emperor and the heroism of the French Army and repeated this to the Prince; they often whispered together and their games and the expressions they used showed the trend of their thoughts and conversations. * * *"

Dietrichstein then mentions Mme. Marchand's return to Paris and the departure of the boy Emile with his parents, who accompanied Marie Louise to Parma. The report continues:

"The Prince, in my opinion, may be regarded as the most difficult of pupils; this arises partly from his quite unique position, partly from his too early education, and also from his peculiar characteristics. The changes he has already experienced would in the ordinary way be of little importance to a child of such tender years, but in this case their influence is always, and probably always will be, apparent. Too much has been dinned into him of his misfortunes in his earliest childhood, which otherwise he would have long since forgotten. He often recalls with regret former times and maintains that he misses the pages that used to surround him.

"Such complaints arise, however, less from a real sense of mortification at the change in his fate than from a desire to express a certain contempt for his present tutors. Not only does this destroy that confidence which a pupil should have in his tutors, but this constant dwelling on the past also makes it more difficult for them. Then, too, the changes the Prince has experienced in his short life have made him indifferent to all his surroundings and, as he smashes or carelessly throws away his toys at the very moment they are given to him, in like fashion he parts from people who have lavished the greatest love and care upon him without the slightest sign of grief or emotion.

IF these signs can really be accepted as the marks of an already formed character, they would be most disappointing, but there are grounds for hope that this is not so, as all human emotions must first be developed and the Prince has been too much haunted by events and people for him to have had time to attach himself to any one. Then, too, from the time when he could barely think, he was the object of such idolatry at his father's court that, even had he had no tendency to arrogance, he must necessarily consider every one far beneath him, and he is therefore incapable of feeling real love for any one. The Prince is now in a time of indifference such as comes into every boy's life. He has the behavior and the seriousness of a child of 10, although he is only 5, and he requires the treatment of a child of 10.

"It will be noted from what I have ventured to set forth here, that at present the Prince's character consists of complete reliance on himself alone and indifference to all those from whom he does not expect some momentary pleasure. It can only be hoped that his emotions are not lacking but merely dormant. Strangers and those who are not always around him he treats in a most amiable and complaisant manner; if the mood takes him, he becomes full of happy ideas which he brings out with an acumen unusual at his age. He often makes the most astounding remarks about himself and others, which he utters not in an offensive but in a most amusing fashion, with a smiling and apologetic deportment which gives an impression of great good nature.

"But the only evidence which his tutors have of this good nature—except when, as is sometimes the case, it happens to please him to be polite to them—is that he, unlike most children, never sulks or is angry with them when they punish him but always looks upon the punishment as just. This is a good trait and gives grounds for hope for the future. There is, also, not the slightest trace left of his outbursts of unbridled rage, for the first time he allowed himself this in Foresti's presence the latter met it with the necessary firmness.

"But, as against this good trait, there are other peculiarities which I must not conceal if I am to give y[our] M[ajesty] a faithful portrait of the Prince. It is often noticeable that, without there being any reason for his being vexed with his entourage, the Prince shows a deliberate intention of saying such unpleasant and annoying things as he knows are forbidden. Of the many Bible and other stories that he still remembers very well, he prefers to repeat those containing accounts of battles and he shows a decided fancy for stories of cruelty. Our earnest efforts to make him consider this as immoral and displeasing to God have so far met with little success. This spirit of destruction extends also to his playthings, in fact, to everything which seems to him to give pleasure to others. For example, if he admires a flower in his garden at one moment, at the next moment he tries to destroy it. All the more so if others have admired it.

NEVERTHELESS, these traits of destructiveness and malignancy I do not necessarily consider as firmly rooted in the Prince's character, but rather, as reflection will show, the result of the condition to which he was born. From the first moment of his understanding, he heard of nothing but destruction, battles and sieges, and the highest human dignity seemed to him to belong to those who brought most evil on mankind. I think that the best charactered child could not withstand such influences, and these, I believe, can be eradicated by his present tutors.

"The Prince's idleness, too, will gradually disappear, as already, when he does not think he is being taught, he shows the most active curiosity and surprisingly quick comprehension. The way in which he uses the French language, the purity of his expressions, is a very favorable testimony to his late governesses. Above all, he has that quality known as mother wit and it often arouses justifiable admiration when a boy of 5 grasps an idea and develops it and puts such intelligent questions in connection with it and makes such witty remarks. That thoughtlessness which is always a fault of youth appears to be more deeply rooted in the Prince and is undoubtedly the source of many of his other faults. For example, the indifference to which I have referred and the lack of love can in a great measure be ascribed to his thoughtlessness. * * *

this gorgeous landscape that we led the artist, William R. Leigh, to this spot.

From a vantage point on the abrupt slope of Karisimbi, the view, framed by glorious living trees and festooned with mosses, includes in the immediate foreground a monarch of the forest long since dead, with ashen moss-draped arms reaching upward to the sky. At the base of this tree, in 1921, the lone male gorilla of Karisimbi fell. A 380-pound giant, he has been made the dominant figure in the Akeley Gorilla Group at the American Museum of Natural History. Surrounding the tree is a startlingly beautiful prospect. The billowy tree-tops, when touched by a fitful sunlight or the stirring wind, shine lustrous in many changing shades of creamy yellow, aquamarine and emerald.

Everywhere, near at hand, are the monarchs of the ancient forest, gigantic trees decorated with flowing draperies of gray-beard moss and with long trailing green vines dotted with yellow star-like flowers. The branches of these trees often bear platforms of golden green moss, forty or fifty feet in length and a foot or even two feet in width. From these depend masses of fern fronds often thirty inches long. In these mossy platforms grow tall spikes of pink and carmine orchids. Sometimes rooted in the mossy platforms are lobelias of great size, with main stems, thick, strong and woody, and with luxuriant palm-like tops.

All about is an almost impenetrable undergrowth, brightened by brilliant blossoms of many hues. Dense creeping vines grow twenty to thirty feet upward from the ground, clinging to tree trunks and covering the strangely gnarled and forked branches in banner-like screens of delicately beautiful vegetation. Through some canyon-like rent in the dense forest you see the formidable rampart of Mount Mikeno, on whose perilous middle slope Carl Akeley obtained his four other gorilla specimens for his group. Everywhere the world seems unreal. It must have been like this before the Age of Man. Perhaps some remote ancestor of the gorilla—some other giant nomad—roamed throughout this forest then and made of it his home.

In this enchanted land, the first great national park in all Africa, wild life has sanctuary. To accomplish this end was one of the dearest hopes of Carl Akeley's life. He advocated it for three years. Following the decree of 1825 came the crowning achievement in the history of the Parc National Albert. The King of the Belgians, in May, 1929, not only increased the protected domain tenfold, but decreed that the flora and fauna should be preserved for strictly scientific purposes and that the Commission du Parc National Albert, an international committee of eighteen distinguished scientists, should control scientific research therein.

By this act the great sandy plains bordering Lake Edward have been added to the Parc. Here herds of antelope similar to those of British East Africa abound, finding ample forage in a region unfit for spade or plow. Many hippopotamuses swim unmolested in the open waters or rest along the tree-fringed shores of wide, slow-flowing tropic rivers which cut the plains.

In contrast to all this abundance of animal and vegetable life, covering the old volcanoes from base to crest and separated from them by but a narrow expanse of jagged lava plain, are active Nyiragongo and Nyamlagira. Their beacon lights ever flame into the night sky and their amber cloud masses, smirching the blue vault of day, float perpetually above their seething fires. Devoid of animal life—a bit of the world in the making—they stand a challenge to the geologist and seismologist.

Recently, when the International Commission was inaugurated at Brussels, King Albert described the widely diversified scientific opportunities of the Parc—"a region not only of interest to geologists and mineralogists, but remarkable from the point of view of ethnography, since Bantu and Hamitic elements as well as Pygmies are simultaneously present; and, by no means least, remarkable from the point of view of biology, since the wide range of its altitudes allows several life zones to meet and gives rise to flora and fauna infinitely rich and varied.

"No other region of the African Continent," said his Majesty, "offers such wide opportunity for scientific study and for the installation of scientific research stations which would be easily accessible in a climate almost ideal for the white race." He furthermore stated that the participation by foreign members in the work of the commission gives it that "international character which in these days should mark every scientific enterprise, and that a large field of study is, henceforth, open in our colony to geologists, biologists, ethnographers and scientists of all nations."

"In our day," the King concluded, "there is much zeal, and rightly so, for the preservation of the monuments left us by the past. Here, in the Belgian Congo, you have also a primitive monument to conserve—a monument created by Nature during the course of thousands of years. Before you stands a great work to be achieved. In opening up and maintaining this exceptionally interesting region for the benefit of scientific research, Belgium will make a new contribution to the progress and application of science."

Thus the Parc National Albert has been consecrated to the use of the scientists of the world. It is one of the fortunate spots in the Bright Continent where there can never be a conflict between the rights of the "earliest inhabitants"—the great mammals of Africa—and the economic needs and ambitions of man.

The park should be an insistent challenge to the scientists of our day to seek to fathom the secrets of the present and the past. Resulting from their investigative efforts should arise a noteworthy contribution to the knowledge of mankind—a rich endowment in learning for future generations.

darmerie services. But these security services are no more than the shield behind which the country's domestic concerns have become a national obsession. The present Turkey regards foreign adventures of any kind in exactly the same light as a convalescent regards the disease which he has barely managed to survive.

The three next largest items in the budget are devoted to public works, education and agriculture. The prejudice against foreign capital dies slowly and practically all the resources which are going into these three services are the Turks' own resources. Within its present frontiers Turkey is as big as Germany, France and half of Spain, and the equivalent of billions of dollars will have to be available before all this vast and primitive area can be given what the west of Europe would regard as the necessary material equipment of a going civilization.

Lack of railroads, lack of adequate motor roads, and, most of all, lack of money are the Turks' handicaps today in the development of what is potentially one of the richest of countries. Foreign coal, for example, still sells in Constantinople, although there is plenty of Turkish coal at Zongouldak on the Black Sea and nothing to prevent its exploitation except the primitive quay facilities and the absence of communication with the interior.

The revolution has made a considerable advance in the country's material resources, but it is in its human resources that it has achieved its most astonishing advances. All the social and moral reforms which it has made—the abolition of the capitulations, the disestablishment of all religions, the adoption of Western script, laws and school systems, the emancipation of women, each of these reforms historic enough in itself, all of them taken together constituting such a revolution as has no precedent anywhere in history—these reforms have been a breaking down of the barriers which formerly isolated the Turk from those Western nations whose methods it is essential for him to employ if he is to erect a strong and enduring national life in place of the gigantic wreck which he inherited.

THE "SAUSAGE TREE."

THE "sausage tree" which bears fruit that resembles sausages grows in East Africa. The fruit has an inviting look, but is not edible, having a hard pulp. The natives consider the tree sacred. Poles made from the "sausage tree" are erected before the houses of the chiefs and worshiped by the tribesmen. The natives also roast the "sausages" and place them against parts of the body afflicted with rheumatism.

Self-starters will like this new way of learning to Write

Newspaper Institute training in writing has become thoroughly established as a practical, inspiring, productive method. This holds good not only among literary lights, editors and publishers, but also among the best of all judges—men and women who have taken the training and profited by it.

Mrs. Cherry Bomer Smith, 2315 Cherry St., Vicksburg, Miss.: "I have enjoyed the course very much indeed and wish to report that I just sold a feature article for $40.00 to the Hearst newspapers' Sunday Supplement — the American Weekly Magazine."

J. L. Williamson, 11 St. Andrews Ave., Center Island, Toronto, Ont., Canada: "You may be interested to know that with the help of the knowledge gained from your course I have secured a place on the editorial staff of the Toronto Globe, and now, besides doing general reporting, I am editing a special column entitled 'Aviation Topics.'"

Darrell Jordan, Box 277 Friendship, N. Y.: "Perhaps you will be interested to learn that I have succeeded in selling a short story to 'War Birds,' aviation magazine, for which I received a check for $100. The story is the first I have attempted. As the story was paid for at higher than the regular rates, I certainly felt encouraged."

Writing No Career for Leaners

Our years of experience with writing-aspirants of all ages and classes have brought forth many significant facts—among them this:

The best student-writers...and the best writers...are those who can think and act for themselves, once they are put on the right trail. They do not require close surveillance while under instruction. We call these people self-starters. The term explains itself.

We provide the material, the plan, the special guides, the text, the story writing assignments on definite schedule. Furthermore, after giving the student time to write up his assignment, our copy desk furnishes him the means of ascertaining how close he has come to the professional standard. Here, in short, is a complete outfit of tools...the rest is up to the self-starter. It is obvious that so direct and uncomplicated a method permits a maximum of instruction at a minimum of cost, placing N. I. A. training within the reach of anyone.

Many students and former students now writing for publication

Thousands of men and women, and many young people, have taken N. I. A. training and found it as practical, as stirring, and as true-to-expectations as we represent it to be. For N. I. A. training teaches writing by the intensely interesting New York newspaper copy-desk method...the type of newswriting experience that produces nearly nine out of ten successful writers.

Best of all, the cost of this training is modest, and the student may carry it on at home, entirely in spare time.

To those new to the writing business, the Institute points not to the immense royalties of best-selling authors, but to $25, $50 and $100 readily paid for material that takes little time to write...short articles, recipes, humorous pieces, short stories, things that may be easily and naturally written in spare time. There are many profitable fields for those who want to make their writing ability pay prompt dividends. We make no extravagant claims as to what the N. I. A. method can do for anyone's fame or wealth. We do maintain that, with rare exceptions, N. I. A. training will increase anyone's writing knowledge, writing ability, writing confidence, and writing income.

How you start

We don't want any N. I. A. student to waste his time or money. For this reason, we have prepared a unique Writing Aptitude Test. It tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities necessary to successful writing—acute observation, dramatic instinct, creative imagination. It's free; there's no obligation. You'll enjoy this test.

DR. BUTLER HAILS THE MARCH OF PEACE

Columbia's President, Himself a Leader in the Cause, Sees A Revolution in World Psychology Since the War

At a time when the statesmen of the principal countries of the world are meeting to try to effect reduction in naval armaments, it is recalled that to the great teachers, be they instructors, preachers or statesmen, is due much credit for making the London Conference possible. Among the voices that have been raised for peace in this country none has been more insistent than that of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, of whom a sketch follows.

By S. J. WOOLF

ON the second floor of the library of the university is the office of the president. There, in the middle of a large room, the windows of which overlook the Hudson, at his desk sits the man under whose guidance and direction Columbia has grown to be one of the two largest universities in the country.

The Morningside section is a city in itself. It has its own essential characteristics and in many ways it is entirely different from the rest of New York. But it has none of the sleepy atmosphere of most college towns. The subway pours out its hordes there as it does in other parts of the city, the surface cars clang their bells just as loudly and the automobiles whip by at the same speed.

To the north of the university rises the tower of the new Riverside Church, a tower which would have taken years to build in Oxford or Cambridge, but which here, despite a fire, has been reared in a comparatively short time.

The pulsing throb of the metropolis is not halted by the aggregation of buildings of learning; they are a part of it. The golden Alma Mater with outstretched hands bids welcome to her students and her alumni and alumnae to a campus where Pan plays his pipes to the accompaniment of electric riveters and she bids them to pore over tomes no longer dusty but vacuum cleaned.

And just as the university of which he is the head typifies a combination of present-day life and all learning, so does Nicholas Murray Butler stand for the man of learning taking an active part in the life of the times.

There is nothing of the absent-minded professor about this well-groomed man of 67, as he sits in his office. Former presidents of King's College look down on him from their highly burnished and ornate frames, and on a bookcase stands a head of victory. They are but his background, and are in shadow; he looms out of them, not inseparably detached, but more prominent.

There is a certain fumbling attitude about most college professors. Though Masaryk has attained the Presidency of his native land, on meeting him one feels that he is looking for a piece of chalk to demonstrate some problem on a blackboard. Einstein is apparently oblivious of his surroundings, and about John Dewey there is a careful hesitancy. Even Woodrow Wilson, after eight years of the Presidency, still remained a teacher.

But this is not so of Dr. Butler. It would be impossible to imagine this former Professor of Philosophy going out forgetful of the fact that he had no hat; in fact, one would be certain that his hat, were it not a silk one, would be a derby.

In other words, he is not the dreamy scholar who, secluded in his library, does not see the actual present. With scholarship he combines executive and business ability. He is living in a rapidly changing world and his eyes are open to the changes that are going on about him, and although he has been connected with the university during practically his entire lifetime, he has never lived, so to speak, within its campus; he has never permitted the college walls to obstruct his view of what has been going on outside.

It is for this reason that for years, in addition to being the head of Columbia, Dr. Butler has taken an active part not only in city but also in national and international affairs. On the other hand, in these days of specialization, he does not believe that a man can succeed by turning first to one thing and then another, but that, though his interests may be diverse, he must stick to his chosen work.

In speaking of a certain man who had attained some prominence in various lines of endeavor he said:

"Had he only stuck to what he started out to be, he would be much more successful today. He came to New York too late in life. This city is the graveyard of village reputations. Men comparatively well known come here and are lost in the crowd.

"On the other hand," he continued, "as Cardinal Newman said years ago, a city is by its very nature a university, and it is quite a different thing for the country boy to come here.

"Naturally the city draws to itself men and women of all kinds. It is the home of great collections of art and science and it affords abundant opportunities to come under the influence of the best music and the best literature of our time. The great city, and especially New York, is intensely cosmopolitan and contact with its life for even a short time during the impressionableness of youth is in itself a liberal education.

IT is this same rubbing of elbows, as it were, of the various peoples of the world, that will go far toward making the dream of a lasting peace real.

"Today, the whole world is thinking what that old prophet Jeremiah long ago called thoughts of peace. The mind of the world has been turned from a backward-looking and a forward-fearing mind to a forward-looking and backward-fearing mind.

"War has lost its glamour and now stands stripped and naked in all its horrid ugliness. The popularity of such plays as 'Journey's End' and of such books as 'All's Quiet on the Western Front,' which show war as it really is, proves the people of the world at last want to know the truth about war.

"A world that turns from war to peace turns of necessity from brute force to good manners, to high morals and to law.

"It would be impossible to think of a was being declared today," he continued, "in the same way that it was fifteen years ago.

"The revolutionary psychological change among men began while the war was still in progress.

"Post-war unhappiness, problems and perplexities halted it for a while, but when Briand, Stresemann and Chamberlain had their momentous meeting at Locarno, a little over four years ago, the beginning of the end of the old order was in sight.

"There remained the carefully stimulated naval rivalry between the two great branches of the English-speaking family. Hired trouble-makers and, I might add, unscrupulous newspapers did what they could to make the era of international war and its dark and costly shadows last a little longer. They did this by playing upon the credulous ignorance of public men and public opinion. But these actions have now been laughed not only off the stage but off the front page as well."

Dr. Butler got up. He put his hands in his trousers pockets and stood looking out of the window. The Winter sun was quickly going down behind the Palisades on the other side of the Hudson. It threw an orange glow over his strong features. He appeared rapt in thought for a few minutes and then turned abruptly around.

"After Locarno," he said, "came Washington. The Prime Minister and the President, face to face and in kindly confidence, crowded into four days' conversation and understanding forty years of formal diplomatic procedure. Those three foreign statesmen with their associates at Locarno and MacDonald and Hoover at Washington have done the business for which a weary world was waiting with bated breath.

"The change that has taken place in the way that international business is conducted can best be shown by the amazing contrast between meetings such as these and those of former times.

"Just about seventy years ago, on a bright Summer's day, one of the chief personalities of Europe left Geneva; he left in disguise bearing a false name and armed with a false passport. That was Count Cavour, Prime Minister of the government of the Kingdom of Piedmont. Secretly, and, I might say, on tiptoes, he made his way to Prombières in the Vosges. It was the height of the season when he arrived, but instead of going to any of the fashionable hotels, he took quarters in a small chemist's shop. There amid the smell of drugs and surrounded by blue and red and green bottles he waited until a summons came, and in the dark he was escorted into the presence of the powerful reigning monarch, Napoleon III. These two men of high place and vast responsibility did not confer together; they conspired as to how they might bring about a great war.

"That was but seventy years ago, but there was no legislative debate, no popular appeal, merely two high-placed and powerful dictators, with all the arms and apparatus of two governments, together with the peace of Europe, in their four hands.

"But two generations later, a very short time in human history, a Prime Minister of State, who wields the vast and responsible authority accorded to him by a great people living under free and democratic government, starts across the sea. He dons no disguise, bears no false name, he carries no false passport. His own countrymen acclaim his going. The daily press of the world records his every act and word. His very voice is carried right into the homes of millions, when in six days' time he reaches the welcoming and hospitable shores of another land.

"The enthusiasm of genuine affection is showered upon him, both for himself and on behalf of the great people for whom he has come to speak. He goes to no upper story of a chemist's shop, but to the White House, and then as the

"BEAUTY SPOT" SUPERSTITIONS

Seventeenth Century Writers Divined Some Mysterious Omens for the Common Mole

By FRANK H. VIZETELLY

OF course, you have a beauty spot. Everybody has one, for beauty spots are not respecters of persons, and they enhance every one's beauty. Technically, the beauty spot is a macula or naevus. Both words are Latin, the first means a spot; the second means a birthmark. The latter is popularly known as a mother spot, sometimes a strawberry mark—the name depending entirely on its color. These beauty spots are sometimes known as moles, and there are interesting traditions attached to them. To the Germans mahl, they were to the Goths mael, and by that name they are known in Scotland to this day.

If you should ever come across a famous book entitled "The Husbandman's Practise or Prognostication Forever," which was published in the year 1658, you could spend many an interesting hour in browsing over its pages. I do not happen to know the author of this remarkable work, but he tells us that if a man shall have a mole on the place right over his heart, it is an indication that he is undoubtedly wicked. If, however, the mole is on his abdomen, it is a sign that he is a glutton. Should such a spot appear on either man or woman against the spleen, this is a sure sign of la grande passion, as well as an indication that its bearer will suffer frequently from illness.

The great traveler Misson noted that when Englishmen, among the plain people, had moles or warts on their faces, they were particularly careful of the hairs that sometimes grew out of them, for these were signs of good luck. Identification by mole was resorted to by one James Percy in pressing his claim to the Earldom of Northumberland in 1680. There occurs in this remarkable document the following passage: "When you first came to me, I showed you a mole like a half-moon upon my body. I was born into the world with it, and it hath been the like on some of the Percys formerly. Now search William Percy and see if God hath marked him so, for surely God did foresee the troubles, altho the law takes no notice, but God makes a true decision, even as He was pleased to make Esau hairy and Jacob smooth." Alas for the boast of James Percy, Parliament ignored this "divine signature," as he called it, and he failed to prove his right to succeed to the Earldom of Northumberland.

MAY I suggest to those of you who have beauty spots that you look them over, and locate them in connection with the following remarks, taken from the "Twelfth Book of a Thousand Notable Things," published many years ago. First, to all ladies who are beautiful, let me say that a beauty spot on or about the right knee signifies riches and fortune, particularly if it is on the knee-cap or in its vicinity. If it be on the left knee, fruitful motherhood. Should you happen to have one on the right arm or shoulder, it is a sign of great wisdom. If it be on the left, a sure sign of contention and debate.

A beauty spot near the armpit is a sign of honor and great wealth; one on the neck, where the ax would commonly fall, is a symbol of great strength. Health and wealth are foretold by a beauty spot upon the throat; one upon the chin, as well as another near the heart, are both signs of riches. Now, if you happen to have one on the lip, that shows that you have a good strong stomach, and that you are a fluent and interesting talker, but if it happens to be on the left side of your forehead, it is a symbol of ultimate poverty; yet, when in the wisdom of the good Lord, it appears on the right side of the forehead of either men or women, it is a symbol of riches. A beauty spot upon the right ear of a woman or of a man is also another symbol of wealth accompanied with great honor, but if it happen on the left, just the opposite.

Look over your feet, consider your ankles a moment. A beauty spot on your ankles or your feet is a sign of modesty in men and great courage in women. If you should happen to have one upon the left side of your heart, you are out of luck, even as you would be if it were on your breast or on either of your thighs. Granted that you have a beauty spot on your left knee, you will be the mother or father of many children.

This is the way that the Fortune-Teller of Greenwich summarizes the signification of beauty spots: Against the heart, wickedness; on the abdomen, gluttony; at the base of the abdomen, weakness; on the knee, comeliness or wealth; on the right knee, modesty and virtue in women; on the left, the glories of motherhood. Have you ever seen a man with a beauty spot on his knee? I have traveled over two continents but do not recall noting such a thing. Across the nose, much traveling for men; for women the same, but on foot, through many different countries; on a man's throat, great wealth to be accumulated; on a woman's lower jaw, sorrow and suffering; in the centre of the forehead, cantankerousness, evil-mindedness and malicious gossip; yet, if it be honey-colored, it is a sign that its bearer will be well beloved; if, on the contrary, it be red, it is a symbol of sullen temperament and fury; if black, uncertain and wavering, and if raised a trifle, like a wart, good fortune.

"Alas for the Boast of James Percy!"

In a woman, should the spot be black and upon the forehead, it is an indication of an evil disposition and treachery. Contrariety plays queer pranks with this birthmark, for if situated on the right side, about midway between the hair and the eyebrows, it is a sign of benefits through friendship with great men, a symbol that our esteem and honor will be conferred upon the subject according to the color of the spot.

Situated on the left side of the forehead near the hair, it foretells for man misery and great trouble caused by nobody's fault but his own. If honey-colored or red, then the misery is lessened; if black, the misery is intensified. If any of you are suffering from the hallucination that you are being persecuted by your superiors, look in the mirror and see if you happen to have a mole on the left side of your forehead about midway. Such a mole indicates a prodigal waste of estate when honey-colored; poverty when red, and the malice of people in high places if black. To a woman, such a sign forebodes grief by perfidy of the opposite sex; this sinks to extreme misery when the spot is black.

If you have a beauty spot on your lip you are one of three things: an epicure, likely to be greatly revered or very amorous yourself. Riches are signified by a beauty spot on the chin; riches and respect by one on the ear; deferred riches by one on the neck; poverty by one on the right breast; good fortune by one below the nostrils; affliction by one on the right side of the abdomen; wisdom if situated on the right foot; rashness, liability to trouble through rash deeds, if on the left foot. If a woman have a beauty spot on her eyebrow she will be speedily married to a good husband; if a man have the spot between his wrist and his finger ends this is a symbol that he is of ingenious mind, and now, please take warning that if you should find that this spot has developed between the elbow and the wrist it foretells that you will have to bear many crosses in middle life which will end in comfort and prosperity.

"A Symbol of Poverty."

PROGNOSTICATIONS by moles and freckles, by means of astrology, led to the simulation of "beauty spots" by the fair sex of more than two centuries ago. The sprightly dames that gladdened the heart of the Merry Monarch wore many of these in all sorts of places. He used to banter a lady of his court, and tell her that the next child to which she would give birth—while the solicitude and care of those patches were so strong in her fancy—would come into the world with a great black spot in the middle of its forehead, which, strangely enough, actually happened.

In No. 50 of Addison's Spectator there is to be found a humorous account of the opinions of the Indian potentates of English ladies:

"As for the women of the country, they look like angels, and would be more beautiful than the sun were it not for the little black spots that break out on their faces. Sometimes these rise in very odd figures, but I have observed that these little blemishes wear off very soon. When they disappear in one part of the face they are very apt to break out in another, in so much that I have seen a spot on the forehead in the afternoon which was upon the chin in the morning."

Lack of beauty spots that might be exposed led to their simulation, and the fashion of plastering the face over with patches was introduced. The ladies spotted their faces out of an affectation for a mole, such as Venus had, to set off their beauty, and all was well while one black patch served to make their faces remarkable, but some filled their visages full of them, varied into all manner of shapes and figure. A very curious specimen of this fashionable absurdity consisted of a coach, with a coachman and two horses with postilions, which appeared across the forehead. Both sides of the face had crescents [illegible] them; a star was on one side [illegible] mouth, and a plain circular patch on the chin.

In "Wit Restored," a poem printed in 1658, we are told of a lady:

Her patches are of every cut,
For pimples and for scars;
Here's all the wandering planets' signs,
And some of the fixed stars,
Already gummed, to make them stick,
They need no other sky.

The fashion continued in vogue for a long time; for in the "Ladies' Dictionary" (1694) we are told "they had no doubt a room in the chronicles among the prodigies and monstrous beasts, had they been born with moons, stars, crosses, and lozenges upon their cheeks, especially had they brought into the world with them a coach and horses!"

TURKEY'S NATIONAL THEATRE

A Playhouse and a School for Actors Are Steps To Foster Western Arts in Constantinople

THE news that Turkey plans a theatre and conservatoire which will rival those in other European countries is a reminder that Angora regards the theatre as a powerful educative factor in spreading Western ideas among the peasants of Anatolia, where as yet lip service is grudgingly paid to some of the more radical reforms of Mustapha Kemal Pasha.

The national theatre is to be built in Constantinople and will form one of a group of buildings that will eventually surround the great Statue of the Republic in Taxim Square. This is, in itself, a concession that was least expected by Constantinople; but Angora is forced to admit that the former capital and the principal seaport is in closer touch with Western cultural ideas.

Moreover, the national theatre, with its conservatoire for training actors and singers in the Western tradition, is to be regarded as a centre for various groups of players who will find their chief occupation in Angora, and in touring the Anatolian cities and villages, where already the cinema has made its appearance. The model for the new institution will be the Théâtre Française.

The power of the drama, curiously enough, was acknowledged by the Sultans. In the days of the Ottoman Sultans the puppet show known as Karaguez, or Blackbeard, approximating Punch, was very popular. In reality it was what Omar Khayyam accurately called "shadow - shapes," being gayly painted parchment silhouettes operated against a lighted background. It is said that a certain Sultan, for all his despotic power, feared the criticisms made by Karaguez of certain of his acts and promptly reformed.

There existed along with Karaguez a theatre of sorts in the Ottoman days, the actors being Armenians. Like Karaguez, its comedy was usually low and offended the taste of those foreigners who witnessed it.

Since the foundation of the republic, however, Angora has realized the value of the theatre in its program of emancipation. Unlike the cinema, the theatre through its actors can impersonate the various modes and manners of the West, which Angora wants the conservative and primitive Anatolian peasant to adopt. Then, too, a young school of Turkish dramatists is in the making, and its plays will likewise reflect more accurately the identification of Western ideas as well as modes and manners with the reformed Turkish mentality.

The foundation of a national theatre now completes Angora's adoption of all the arts of the West. All of them were taboo under the Moslem faith, if one includes poetry in the dramatic form which it took in Turkey. Pure poetry was traditionally Persian or Arabic, but Turkish poets gave it a dramatic form. Painting, sculpture, music in its formal manifestations, drama, dancing for women, all these were forbidden. There always existed peasant folk dances and songs, in which men alone participated. Angora, however, has been careful to preserve the latter, collecting the peasant compositions and making records of them.

LEARNED NAMES BECOME TERMS OF RIDICULE.

TERMS of opprobrium often are derived from names that once stood for authority and learning. Such, it is believed, are the words "dunce" and "gibberish."

The former was derived from the name of John Duns Scotus, born in Duns, Scotland, in 1265, the famous "doctor subtilis" and one of the greatest of British medieval philosophers. A Dunsman or dunce was the name applied by their opponents to the followers of Duns Scotus, and when the "dunces" opposed the "new learning of that time they were, in the minds of humorists and reformers, stupid and incapable of scholarship."

The word "gibberish" is thought to have come from the name of the most celebrated chemist of medieval times, the Arabian Geber, or Jabir, whose full name was Abu Musa Jabir ibn Hayyan. His chemical theory was a development of Greek scientific and occult philosophy, and partly through his work alchemy spread throughout Western Europe. His philosophy, however, was too difficult for many persons to understand, and the name "gibberish" resulted.

SCIENCE TURNS ITS X-RAY ON THE EARTH

Geologists, Reading the Planet's Heart, Evolve a New Theory of How the World Got Its Shape And Present Structure and Open Up Speculations Concerning Its Future Development

"When the Moon Broke Away From the Earth."

By H. GORDON GARBEDIAN

OUR earth, instead of being what most of us learned to picture it at school, is a distorted, warped planet which is constantly shaking to overcome deformities undergone since the dim past when it was flung off the gaseous mass of its parent sun.

Apparently so solid, stable, inert and finished, our globe in reality is mobile and restless and is continuing in the process of evolving on a planetary scale. Below the familiar rocks of its crust is probably a thick earth shell of hot liquid gas on which the continents float as great pontoons do on water. According to a new picture of terrestrial events, earthquakes, volcanoes and new mountain ranges all owe their origin to landslides of the wabbly earth to correct its lack of symmetry.

Our earth at one time consisted of only one gigantic mass of land and one huge body of water. During the planet's eventful infancy a major catastrophe caused the ejection from the earth of a mass of matter, which later cooled to become the moon. Powerful forces owing their origin to that great celestial drama have helped to break up the original single continent into several continents, which slowly drifted apart. The resulting war between gravity and other forces in the earth's body put a new face on the earth, and in place of flat surfaces, majestic chains of mountains, including the Rockies, the Andes, the Alps and the snow-capped Himalayas, arose.

President Hoover and Prime Minister MacDonald are busy pulling America and Europe nearer together spiritually; but there is some evidence pointing to the conclusion that nature slowly is widening the physical gulf between the two continents.

These are some of the startling conceptions by such noted scientists as Dr. Reginald A. Daly of Harvard University, Dr. Alfred Wegener, the famous German geologist; Professor Emile Argand, Sir Oliver Lodge, Dr. Rudolf Staub and others, who present to us a new picture of the earth.

Human life, in fact all organic life, depends for existence on a large number of delicate adjustments of powerful physical forces in the mysterious interior of the earth. That interior is forever invisible to human eyes. Man has barely succeeded in penetrating by mine or bore-hole a mile or two below sunlight—a mere pin-prick on the earth's crust, 4,000 miles from the planet's core.

Ingenious, patient geologists have for many years vainly struggled with nature's mocking forces to obtain more knowledge of the baffling subterranean region. It is the interior of the globe which holds the secret of the deep Pacific and the lofty Mount Everest, of the earthquake and the "temple of fire," the riddle of the plains, of barren and ore-bearing rock.

So unsuccessful have been the efforts of leading geologists in the past, that Professor Silliman of Yale, himself a distinguished man of science, believed that "no one will object to ascribing most of the earth's surface features to the deluge of Noah!"

Now, science is "X-raying" the earth. The geologist has hit on a new way of attacking the perplexing problems of the earth's interior, and with his highly sensitive seismographs he feels confident that at last he is able to read the heart of our planet. The results already revealed by this new method unfold a dramatic explanation of the processes by which our earth attained its present shape and structure and open up speculations as to its future development.

Studying the light waves from the sun with the aid of a spectroscope, science discovered helium. The astronomer has opened up new vistas of a million universes like our own scattered in the spacious firmament by examining the light and heat rays emanating from the twinkling stars; and the chemist is analyzing the infinitesimal atom by the same process. The geologist has adopted a similar method and can now infer something of the structure of the earth by analyzing the waves set in motion through the body of the globe by the mighty hammer of an earthquake or other earth tremor.

Take a stick between your hands. Bend it until it breaks. The sudden snap sends vibrations along muscle, bone and nerves of the arms.

IN a somewhat similar way the rocks of the earth's crust have been and are being strained. Every day, somewhere, they are snapping and sending out elastic waves from many centres. For the whole earth the average number of shocks registered every year is about 9,000, or about one every hour. A worldshaking of the first magnitude occurs every eighteen days or thereabout. Fortunately, most of these originate under the ocean and do comparatively little damage.

These earth waves, traveling great distances around the earth, measure from twenty to forty miles between crests, and, as they pass, a whole mountain range, a vast plain or an entire city rises and falls like parts of a raft on an ocean swell. The swing is usually so slight that only special instruments can feel it. New York, Paris, Calcutta, Tokio and all the other cities in the world are in this way raised and lowered many times a year, though not enough to be felt by man.

The geologist is now using these waves to add to the knowledge of the earth's invisible interior in the same sort of way that the surgeon explores the deep inside of the human body with the X-rays.

We must now look upon the earth as consisting of a series of shells surrounding a core which at its centre bears the tremendous pressure of 50,000,000 pounds a square inch, or 1,000 times the pressure inside a cannon at the instant of discharge, and has a temperature perhaps exceeding 90,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

These shells are relatively homogeneous in character, the outer shell, forming the crust of the earth, being about thirty miles deep. The commonest rock of this outer continental shell is some variety of granite, that of the underlying layer is a heavier, dark-colored basalt, similar to some of the volcanic lavas. Beneath that are still denser materials, which at the depth of 1,600 miles rest upon the actual core, consisting of a material not unlike the metallic iron of the meteorites.

"Our planet's shelled character and the natural inference that its interior consists of very hot, incandescent glass is the outstanding discovery of geology of recent times, and it suggests that the globe was once fluid and stratified itself by gravity," Dr. Daly asserts. "The heavier materials sank toward the centre, the lighter materials rose toward the surface, and the whole mass finally arranged itself as layers of shells. It is for this reason that the continents float on the earth's body. They are pressed up by the surrounding, heavy, solid basalt, much as icebergs are pressed up by the denser water of the sea. That is why we have dry land, with its endless importance for man and organic life in general."

When at the Scopes trial in 1925 a geologist testified that "the crust of the earth is at least 1,000,000,000 years old" the crowded court room tittered. Yet, in principle, the estimate has its supporters, although our earth is "a mere child" in the vast expanses of the heavens.

How did our earth come into existence at all and what have been the processes of its evolution? The explanation offered by geologists follows the thoughts of Dr. Harold Jeffreys, Dr. A. S. Eddington and Sir James Jeans of England and Dr. Thomas C. Chamberlin, Dr. Harlow Shapley and Dr. Forest R. Moulton in the United States.

The earth was brewed from the gases of the sun. A long, long time ago—a long time even as scientists measure time—there was almost a collision between Old Sol and another star. The visiting star in its cosmic travels approached our sun so closely that the surface of Old Sol was disrupted. Masses of gaseous matter, drawn by the attraction of the visitor, were thrown off the sun, and these filaments of gas broke up into spheres, which went spinning dizzily through space. Cooling and becoming liquid, these masses of matter gradually solidified and evolved a crusted surface. Today they revolve about the sun as the eight planets.

THE young earth early in its infancy experienced a momentous accident. Either because of gigantic tidal waves or because of excessive speed of rotation, perhaps aided by explosion, the earth ejected a mass which later became the moon. To that event Dr. Daly speculatively refers the origin of the one primitive continent and the one primitive ocean-basin, of which the existing Pacific Ocean is the somewhat diminished remnant.

Compare the opposite coasts of South America and Africa. You cannot fail to be struck by the similarity in the form of the opposite shores.

"This startling similarity geologists now believe is not due to any accident," Dr. Daly said. "It is there because the continents in the past ages have broken away from each other and have drifted horizontally over the surface of the earth."

A GALE OVER MOTHER GOOSE

childhood, which she in turn had heard from her grandmother, who had brought them from England. Her son-in-law deplored her constant vocal efforts, but there was no stopping her, and at last he decided to make the best of a noisy situation by putting her verses into type. So it was that they first appeared in Boston under the title "Mother Goose's Melodies."

Learned books have been written to analyze the verse forms and attempt to trace the origin of the rhymes. They claim that Jack Horner was a politician who pulled out a plum so substantial that it attracted the eye of an unknown rhymester. "Sing a Song of Sixpence" carried oblique reference to a national financial scandal. Some of the rhymes arose long before the invention of the printing press, and came down from generation to generation by word of mouth, planed off and fined down by born story tellers. They were rich with suggestion, masterpieces of clear imagery and succinct statement. Some were printed first on single sheets and sold at street corners. Some were children's playing songs. Some chronicled national events, others were a sardonic reaction to a deed long dead.

Their defenders protest that the educators who wish to substitute for them stories of engines and caterpillar tractors, trucks and electric hoists, under the delusion that these are truly the stuff of life, are making a serious blunder. These are merely the surface counters in the game, while it is life itself, funny and tragic, solemn and comic and grandiose and ridiculous, that flows through the old rhymes. The very good is there, and hints of the very bad. Irony and absurdity, nobility and ridicule, stark experience and the utterly fanciful go side by side. Tom the Piper's Son is punished for stealing as surely as though he had made off with the pig in the pages of a Sunday school book. The folly of too much pretended learning is immortalized in the tale of the man who experimented with bramble bushes.

There are those who, admitting that the rhymes talk of living things, still insist that they do not fit a child for a fine modern life. Look, they say, at the rhyme that asserts the goodliness of King Arthur, and then says that he stole three sacks of barley meal. Clearly this is either a confusion of thought or a deliberate perversion of value. It will hamper the proper adjustment of the child to the rights of private property. As for the economic teaching of the verses it is plainly barbarous. Take the famous tale of Jenny who "shall have but a penny a day because she won't work any faster." Lodged in the mind of an impressionable child that might easily undo for the next generation the entire work of the labor movement, it puts into a single line the out-dated theory of piecework, it gives starvation wages the sanction of printed authority, it reeks of the autocratic control of industry by the employer.

Yet it may be a mistake to take the matter too seriously. Mother Goose wrote a page in her own defense which in spite of its age has distinct bearing on the present controversy. "There are now in this world," she said, "and always will be, a great many grannies besides myself, both in petticoats and pantaloons, some a deal younger, to be sure, but all monstrous wise, and of my own family name. These old women, who never had chick nor child of their own, but who always know how to bring up other people's children, will tell you with very long faces, that my enchanting, quieting, soothing volume, my all-sufficient anodyne for cross, peevish, won't-be-comforted little bairns, ought to be laid aside for more learned books, such as they could select and publish. Fudge! I tell you that all their batterings can't deface my beauties, nor their wise pratings equal my wiser prattlings; and all imitators of my refreshing songs might as well write a new Billy Shakespeare as another Mother Goose—we two great poets were born together, and we shall go out of the world together.

No, no, my Melodies will never die,
While nurses sing, or babies cry.

RUNNYMEDE SAVED FOR ENGLAND

TRAVELERS along the Thames have long been thrilled by the low-lying meadow of Runnymede, where Magna Carta became law beneath the seal of King John one Summer day in 1215. And many, no doubt, have trembled to think that city streets and suburban houses might stand between the sightseer and his vision of the gathering of the barons; for London has been creeping up steadily on Runnymede.

But that danger has recently been warded off by the purchase of the meadow, Magna Carta Island, and considerable surrounding territory for presentation to the National Trust, guardian of England's sites of public interest. Henceforth the tract will be inviolate.

The little island in the Thames between Staines and Windsor was the actual site of the signing. Opposite it the King pitched his tent. The barons gathered on the marshy flats of the other side, known at that time and since as Runnymede. A colorful array they made, with their chargers and their armor, their pavilions and their standards. To the King and the few knights who stood with him against the nation they were a menacing horde. He had done his utmost to resist them and failed. London had opened its gates to them, and other towns showed sympathy with the cause. Submission was inevitable. The break had come on May 5, when they renounced their allegiance. Many causes lay behind it. The King was unpopular, tyrannical, exorbitant in his demands for money for the pursuance of unsuccessful wars. His defeat at Bouvines gave courage to the resisting faction, which during his absence had taken time to formulate their grievances under the leadership of Stephen Langton. Langton had assembled them and invoked, for their inspiration, the laws of Edward the Confessor and the charter of Henry I, and now they were insistent upon the regaining of their "lost long liberties."

King John evaded them and put them off. At Easter they finally succeeded in putting their demands before him. The King angrily refused, and the whole country arose against him. Then, every recourse failing him, he arranged to meet their representatives on June 15 at Runnymede, promising his assent. The conference lasted for a week and a day. On the first day the articles of the barons were presented and accepted and the great seal affixed. These then had to be worked into a charter, held to be a more binding form of engagement. With negotiations between disputed points, this task took three days.

The importance of Runnymede is that of a symbol rather than an actuality. Magna Carta's significance has been acquired through the reverence with which later times looked upon it as the foundation of British liberties rather than from qualities inherent in itself. It differs in degree only, not in kind, from other charters granted by the Norman and early Plantagenet kings. It incorporates many of their provisions without adding a novelty or a new constitutional principle, but expressing them more elaborately and with greater precision.

How I AM BUILDING UP A $100,000 ESTATE

I find that I can only save a little over $1000 a year—and I want to be financially independent at middle age. I am investing $1000 a year in the FRENCH PLAN because it seems to be the best way a small investor can take advantage of the large profits and the safety of Manhattan real estate. The Plan was explained to me in this way—

The right building in the right place can make a profit. The French Company uses my money to build the building—pays me 6%—returns my money and gives me a share in the profits from the building thereafter.

And this is how my money is multiplying—

1—I am getting 6% while my money is invested

2—My principal is being returned to me

3—I reinvest my principal in a second French building

4—I continue to get profit from the first French building

5—I will continue to get a profit from the second building after the principal has been returned—and I shall invest this principal in a third French building.

My money has been pyramiding like this for several years. I have figured out that under the FRENCH PLAN my money is multiplying several times faster than I had ever hoped. Even if I cannot save more than $1000 a year, when I want to retire I shall have a capital large enough to give me a comfortable income.

The 74-page booklet "THE FRENCH PLAN" tells the whole story of the Plan and how it has built up equities for many other French investors. Your copy is ready—mail the coupon now.
